Florence Short in Metro's "Nobody"

FLORENCE SHORT, dramatic actress and artist's model, has been engaged for the part of Mrs. Standish in Metro's screen version of "Nobody," Louis Joseph Vance's novel, which has been adapted by Charles A. Taylor for the use of the exquisite Metro star, Emmy Wehlen, William C. Dowlan will direct the production.

Miss Short is intensely patriotic, and divides her time between patriotic duties and her work at the studios. She gives several hours each day to the Stage Women's War Relief, where she is in charge of the surgical dressings department.

Florence Short.

Mrs. Standish, the part played by Miss Short in the Wehlen production, is a new kind of "vampire," a society woman who steals her own jewels in order to claim the insurance she has placed on them.

Because of her brunette beauty, directors insist on casting Miss Short in villainess roles. Her introduction to the stage was in the part of "Passion" in "Experience." Holbrook Blinn happened to see her in this part, secured for her a "bit" in the McClure picture, "Pride," and her success in this justified her engagement for leading adventuress roles with Apollo. Among her pictures have been "Pride and the Devil," "The Law That Failed," and "The Mystic Hour."

Miss Short has played prominent parts in successes on the speaking stage, notably in "Sinners," "Damaged Goods," with Richard Bennett, and "The Real Thing," with Henrietta Crossman. She has posed for paintings by Robert Henri Glackens, Sloane, Maynard and other artists, being often chosen for Italian and Spanish types.

Miss Short was born in Springfield, Mass., but removed with her family to New York when she was only six years old. Later she attended the Finch School for Girls. Miss Short is a member of the Gamut Club for professional women.

SMALLWOOD COMES BACK.

Arthur N. Smallwood, who will release the Aubrey Series of two-reel Super-Comedies featuring James Aubrey, formerly featured as Heine, in the "Heine and Louie Series," issued by Pathe, and in "Big V" Comedies by Vitagraph, announces that his producing organization has been fully recruited. The pictures will be made under Mr. Smallwood's personal supervision and will be released on the state rights plan. The direction of the Aubrey series will be in the capable hands of C. Jay Williams and Wm. A. Seiter, who will act as co-directors on every production. Archer McMackin will be editor-in-chief of the Scenario Department.

PHYSICAL CULTURE FEATURES FAIRBANKS.

Douglas Fairbanks is featured in the August issue of Physical Culture. The author classifies the player as 100 per cent alive, and suggests to any reader if he desires fully to comprehend the meaning of that expression he should see Fairbanks on the screen. The story covers eight pages, and is an interesting illustrated review of the comedian's work as well as containing much on the personal side. One of the statements that may attract attention sets forth that Fairbanks smokes little, mostly for the camera, and that his strongest drink is orange juice.

FRANCIS FORD IN BUTTERFLY FEATURE.

"Who Was the Other Man?" is a rapidly moving story of international intrigue in which Ford plays a dual part. Jessie Lowe and William Parker are the authors of the script, which has been directed by Ford with his customary vigor of treatment.

WANTS LARGER TYPE IN TITLES.

"Mostly all, if not all, of the best photoplays produced today have one glaring error in common, i. e., the type of print in the facsimiles of both written and typewritten letters is so small that it becomes an utter impossibility for the patrons sitting in the further removed seats from the picture sheet to read them. Now, when the letter contains, as it does in most pictures, a vital part of the story, the person or persons who cannot read the writing lose the continuity of the story and the tale becomes disconnected and in some parts impossible of explanation. Cannot something be done to remedy this error? It seems a pity to me to spoil a good story for the sake of omitting the use of larger type. Very truly,

UNIVERSAL TO AID IN SAFETY FIRST CAMPAIGN.

The services of the Universal Screen Magazine have been enlisted by Francis W. Hugo, New York's energetic Secretary of State, to assist in the "Safety First" campaign inaugurated some time ago through the State Automobile Bureau for the purpose of lessening the number of automobile accidents. The pictures, which will be released shortly, were taken in New York City under the personal supervision of C. L. Grant, manager of the publicity bureau of the Secretary of State's office.

The film starts with flashes of the Safety First folder issued by the bureau and Secretary Hugo and Chief Redmond of the automobile department, followed by a number of graphic pictures of automobile accidents.

"ITALIAN BATTLEFRONT" FORCED OFF BROADWAY.

Notwithstanding that the business of the official Italian war films, "The Italian Battlefront," which have been playing at the Forty-fourth Street Theater, for the past four weeks, is said to have broken all records, not only for war pictures, but for any other film production, with the exception of "The Birth of a Nation," the management was forced to bring the run to an end on Saturday, September 1. This was due to the unparalleled demand for theaters which exists on Broadway now, every house having at least three or four attractions waiting to get in.

"Betrayed"

Dash and Suspense Keep Fox Picture Alive From the Start —Hobart Bosworth and Miriam Cooper With Competent Cast Stir Things Up.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IF PUNCH is wanted, the new Fox release "Betrayed" is a good place to find it. The story deals with a Border raid, but the viewpoint is wholly from the Mexican side. There is nothing in it to excite a feeling of animosity between Americans and Mexicans, but it is full of matter to keep the nerves tingling. The villain, whom Hobart Bosworth's sensible acting makes amply satisfactory to the spectators, is a villain to the Mexicans as well as to the Americans. The senorita, Miriam Cooper, seems to love him and does a good deal of satisfactory posing in her Mexican way, for while her nature must play at capriciousness, she really is true to her shiftless singing lover at the expense of both the blustering bandit and the young Americano lieutenant. The weakness of the plot is that part of it is a dream and we are not shown clearly where the dream begins. There is consequently a couple of hundred feet where we are left dangling in the air, so to speak, before we can get our bearings again after we find that things we thought were real were solely in the dream of the fair senorita.

The quality of it comes largely from the able directing of William Walsh who keeps not only his small scenes where two or three players have the stage, but the large scenes in which there is riding and fighting, filled with dramatic suspense. His scenes also are largely free from those trite bits that show a director's lazy mind and which, not long ago, disfigured many pictures of all makes or nearly all. This is an excellent popular offering and will win favor with all kinds of spectators. Its realism comes near spoiling romance in the early scenes; but there is always in it a subtle touch of humor which rises to fun now and then as when the Papa of the senorita disgusts the bandit by his table manners—the bandit is no Chesterfield either.

"The Girl Without a Soul"

Viola Dana's Clever Acting in Dual Role, the Outstanding Feature—Ably Assisted by Robert Walker.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

AS a result of her splendid work in "The Girl Without a Soul", the Metro-Rolfe five-reel picture released August 13, Viola Dana will gain many admirers. Cast in the dual role of twin sisters whose temperaments are entirely different, she does excellent work in delineating the two characters, particularly in the scenes where, by means of double exposure, both appear simultaneously on the screen.

Dominic Beaumont, a mender of violins, lives in a country village with his twin daughters, Priscilla, who has inherited her mother's musical talent, and Unity, who, because of her lack of artistic temperament, is called by her father "a girl without a soul". Ivor, a traveling musician, persuades Priscilla to elope, by painting a glowing picture of the wonderful career that awaits her. The necessary money is obtained by theft from Hiram Miller, Unity's sweetheart, who has been entrusted with funds for purchasing an organ for the village church. Unity, masquerading as Priscilla, meets Ivor, and unmasks his plot. Hiram is arrested, and at the trial Unity, who has secured the money, returns it, but refuses to name the thief; Priscilla, however, confesses, exonerating Hiram, and is freed by the Judge, who lays the blame on Ivor's sinister influence.

Adequate settings and good direction characterize the work of Director John H. Collins, who also wrote the story, and there is an unexpected punch near the end of the picture, where Hiram breaks away from the authorities, leaps on horseback, and by taking a short cut, intercepts Ivor who has fled in an auto, gives him a thrashing and brings him back to the court.

Robert Walker gives a fine performance as Hiram Miller, and Fred Jones is good as Ivor. The rest of the cast, including Henry Hallam as Dominic Beaumont, Marguerite Seddon as Henrietta Hateman, the village storekeeper, and Margaret Vaughan as Louise, the girl whom Ivor has cast aside, are entirely satisfactory.

"Men of the Desert"

A Western Picture of the Higher Type, by Essanay, Featuring Jack Gardner, With a Strong Supporting Cast—Written and Directed by W. S. Van Dyke.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE old type of Western picture has faded out; but that did not mean that a ban was placed by the screen on all stories of Western plot and action. William S. Hart has proved that conclusively, and Jack Gardner, under W. S. Van Dyke's direction, is furnishing additional proof that the atmosphere and real types of the West still retain their old glamor to make the spectator's blood tingle, his heart beat faster and to hold his interest with the steady rein of a fearless rider.

"Men of the Desert" is the best thus far of the Gardner series. Everyone familiar with the long strife between the cattlemen and the sheepmen of the great ranges of the old West, in which the cowboys and the sheep herders were the militant forces, can recall the bitterness of the struggle. It was really a battle for existence on the part of the cattlemen; as wherever sheep graze, it is impossible for cattle to subsist. It can, therefore, be expected that "Men of the Desert" abounds in thrills and in types of men who laughed at fear and scorned danger.

Jack, impersonated by Jack Gardner, is a cowboy who holds that his allegiance to law is higher than that which he owes to his calling; and so we find him relieving a cowardly sheriff of his office in order that he may arrest and bring to justice the murderer of a sheepherder who was shot while protecting his flock, by one of the Flying O cowboys. Mason (Carl Stockdale), the leader of the Flying O outfit, acknowledges to Jack that he knows the murderer, and is at once arrested and jailed. Much to his astonishment he is subjected to such harsh treatment that he gives the name of the guilty man.

May (Ruth King), daughter of the owner of the Flying O, holds Jack in high scorn at first, but learns to love him for his bravery and fearlessness and for his gentleness to women. Jack's boldness in arresting the murderer makes her fear for his safety, as she knows that the Flying O cowboys, led by Mason, will never rest until they release the prisoner and kill his captor. They succeed in the first, but May frustrates them in the second undertaking by a ruse that is as novel as it is exciting and clever.

The praiseworthy acting of the principals will appeal to everyone, as will the various well-staged scenes which show the climaxes of the story. So also will the scene which shows Jack's method of popping the question to May. This is not only Western in method, but (it strikes me) it is decidedly original and most enjoyably amusing.

The release will be made September 24, through K-E-S-E, Inc.

"Who Was the Other Man?"

Francis Ford and Mae Gaston Appear in Five-Reel Butterfly Subject Which Deals With Activities of Foreign Spies.

Reviewed by Robert G. McElravy.

FRANCIS FORD plays a double role in this five-reel offering, appearing as James Walbert, an American secret service man, and Ludwig Schumann, a foreign spy. Both characters are introduced early in the story, when Schumann is about to leave Paris to come to this country. The instances of double exposure photography are carefully handled, though something of confusion exists in the observer's mind regarding the identity of the two individuals. Fortunately for the story this doubt is a helpful thing, and is partly intentional.

The events which follow the sailing of the supposed Schumann for America are quite entertaining, though no particular thrills develop until the final reel is reached. He finds a woman confederate on board, named Wanda, and they begin paying marked attention to a young man named Herbert Cornell and his sweetheart, Marion Washburn. This latter couple have the entree to Washington society and the plotters make good use of their opportunity.

In the course of the story the principals are seen at a social function in Washington, where Wanda gives Herbert some drugged wine and relieves him of important government documents, which she turns over to the supposed Schumann. She is then seized with remorse, for she had really fallen in love with Herbert, and kills herslf. In the final reel, which contains more action than the others, the spy is discovered to be, not Schumann, but the American secret service man. This final reel does much to strengthen the general effect of the number, which is brightly pictured but only moderately entertaining in story interest in the early reels.

The cast is an agreeable one throughout, Mae Gaston being attractive in the part of the heroine. Others appearing are Duke Worne, Wm. T. Horne and Beatrice Van.

"Lorelei of the Sea"

M. Philip Hansen Presents Six-Reel Picture Produced by Henry Otto—Tyrone Power and Frances Burnham Featured—Released on State Rights.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

PHOTOGRAPHICALLY beautiful, sometimes artistically pleasing, but with far too little story value to hold up its footage, "Lorelei of the Sea", a six-reel picture produced by Henry Otto, is presented for release on the state rights basis by M. Philip Hansen. The production lacks the substantiality necessary to hold interest at such time as the conscjousness is not enthralled by mere physical beauty. In those scenes in which nymphs disport about waterfalls and subterranean caves Mr. Otto has proven himself no less an artist than did he in his production of similar scenes in "Undine." But in "Lorelei of the Sea" there is an overabundance of beautiful scenes and not enough action. No matter how great an appetite we have for beauty, too much will give us indigestion. The scenes that tell the story proper have been allowed too much rootage; the picture would be vastly improved if judiciously cut at least a thousand feet. The excess footage allowed to remain in the print shown for review retards the tempo to a very slow pace.

From the standpoint of mere beauty there are scenes in the picture which, if transferred to canvas, would be worthy of lining the walls of a palace.

Tyrone Power and Frances Burnham are the featured players. Mr. Power is seen as a villager on Seal Island, the Pacific haven of a group of refugees. Miss Burnham is ostensibly his daughter. It is in the visualization of the latter's dreams and imaginings that we see the Lorelei at play. Although there are nude figures in the picture, they are at all times far enough away from the camera to make us see them only in their beauty. It is also due to Mr. Otto's handling that the scenes showing the nymphs are art in every sense of the word, and incapable of giving offense to even the most prudish. There is absolutely nothing unwholesome in the picture.

Two of the refugee youths are in love with the girl, who is known as Lorelei. Paul (Mr. Power) is made the leader of the islanders. Young Dorian, son of a wealthy pearl agent, comes to the island on his yacht. He hears the Lorelei song and his boat is wrecked. He is rescued by Lorelei. Mutual love develops. Dorian is believed by his companions to have been drowned, but his father comes to Seal Island and finds him. It develops that young Dorian and Lorelei are stepbrother and step-sister. Jay Belasco has the role of young Dorian. Mr. Otto is seen as his father. Others in the cast are John Oaker, Gypsy Abbott and Winnifred Greenwood.

The story was written by Richard Willis. Camera work was done by James Crosby.

"Soldiers of Chance"

Evart Overton and Miriam Fouche Featured in Five-Reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature—Released September 3.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

THERE is plot action in every foot of the five reels of "Soldiers of Fortune", a five-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature released September 3. Evart Overton and Mirian Fouche are the featured players. The picture was directed by Paul Scardon from a story by James Oliver Curwood. The photoplay is out-and-out melodrama. It makes no pretense of being anything else, and as such holds the interest from start to finish. The story is full of adventure and has all the elements of stories such as are seen in magazines as the Popular, Adventure, and the like. Love, revenge, South American revolutions, and other elements popular in this type of story all have their place in the picture.

In the film the story progresses rapidly, and shows a clever hand at plot building on the part of Mr. Curwood. The actors who were selected for the screen interpretation of the story carry it over with a dash. The one thing that mars the film is the fact that many of the battle scenes are quite badly out of focus.

Mr. Overton is seen first as Captain Josslyn and later as Billy Mountain (his real identity). Tis one enemy is Peter Lawler (Charles Henderson). Lawler holds a confession made by Philip Winton (Charles Kent) that he killed a man. Winton's daughter is coveted by Lawler. Billy gets Lawler on his yacht and forces him to become a stoker. Love springs up between Billy and the girl, but she has promised to marry Lawler if he does not make her father's confession known. The plot complications come thick and fast and here and there is a fine degree of suspense. Lawler gets into the good graces of the republic's president. Billy's forces attack the Federal soldiers and win the battle. Lawler is killed. It develops that the man Winton thought he killed is alive.

Mr. Scardon has used some very effective lighting in darkened room scenes. His direction meets every need of the story. Others than those mentioned who are seen on the screen are Julia Swayne Gordon and Denton Vane.

"Mother O' Mine"

Five-Reel Blue Bird Tells Strong Story of Young Man Whose Personal Ambition Made Him Forget Love for His Mother.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A STRONG story is unfolded in this five-reel number, written and produced by Rupert Julian and put into scenario form by Elliot J. Clawson. Mr. Julian appears to advantage in the leading role and is supported by a good cast, which includes Mrs. Ruby La Fayette, Elsie Jane Wilson, Ruth Clifford and W. E. Warner.

The story is one that brings both smiles and tears. It is developed in a quiet, effective manner and rounds up with a pleasing climax. The chief idea is perhaps new to the screen, though familiar in fiction. It concerns an elderly woman who comes to the city to see her son, unexpectedly, and arrives in the midst of a social affair. The son really loves his mother and is delighted to see her, but her plain, old-fashioned appearance makes him just a little ashamed of her, as he moves in high society and is engaged to a girl "bred in the purple."

Mrs. La Fayette gives a splendid portrayal of the sweet old lady, being exactly that herself to all appearances, and gets a firm hold on the sympathies. Her appearance at the reception has been carefully led up to, many scenes having been shown at the old country home where she has waited a long period of years for the return of her son.

The son welcomes her joyously and then later succumbs to the false pride which induces him to tell his sweetheart that the old lady was once his nurse. The mother hears this and that night slips away from the house and returns to her country home. The son follows in a repentant frame of mind and with a firm resolution to devote future years to the care of his mother. He even breaks off the engagement with his sweetheart, but the latter, who knows the truth, follows with her own mother and there is a reconciliation at the country home.

The production is splendidly made and is one that should prove successful wherever shown.

Conquest Program

Excellent Material Contained in Number Six, Consisting of Nicely Chosen Variety of Subjects.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE thing that strikes one after viewing No. 6 of the Edison Conquest programs, which are now being released by K-E-S-E, is the careful arrangement and excellent quality of the material of which it consists.

"The Customary Two Weeks"

which is the opening number is a four-part drama of more than the ordinary amount of interest. It is well made and is a proof of the virtue of fitting the film to the story and not the story to the film. The story moves at a lively pace and no attempt is made to drag in unnecessary scenes for the mere purpose of filling in footage, as is so often the case in productions of five reels and over. The plot hinges about the career of a young man who, feeling himself an indispensible adjunct of the firm by which he is employed, becomes the butt of an unscrupulous manager when he makes an effective interference in the case of an aged employee who is discharged by this man with the "customary two weeks". A fine lesson in the art of advertising and salesmanship is contained in the story when fate makes these two men competitors for a big order of goods.

"The Story of Plymouth Rock" covers the story of "The Courtship of Myles Standish" as told in Longfellow's poem, as well as giving a clear but brief delineation of the history of the Pilgrim Fathers from the time of their persecution in England to the establishment of their little colony in America. This picture is in one reel.

"The Grand Canyon of Arizona" contains some fine views of this wonderful spot, showing the descent of a party of tourists four thousand feet below its rim to the Colorado river. Scenes on the Bright Angel trail, and at the Hermit House, as well as of the clouds gathering about the rim of the canyon, are interesting. At the time when this picture was photographed a snow storm had invaded the canyon, adding considerably to its beauty from a photographic viewpoint.

"The Four R's"

brings us in touch with the art of the fourth R, which is riding, and introduces some tremendously interesting scenes at the Culver Riding Academy.

"Nature's Perfect Thread Spinner"

gives one of the best illustrations of how the silk worm spins itself into a silk cocoon, from which it emerges a short time afterward in the form of a beautiful moth, that we have seen. This moth, the picture tells us, lays 200 eggs and then dies. The moth in the act of laying these eggs is an interesting and unusual sight.

"The Magic of Spring"

is a delightful short bit in which a young man falls asleep in a park on a beautiful spring day and dreams that he is a son of Pan, pursuing a beautiful maiden, who eventually comes to him of her own accord. He awakens to find the idol of his dreams beside him. The scenes of this picture are inspiringly beautiful.

"Tears and Smiles," Five-Reel Gold Rooster, Featuring Baby Marie Osborne, and "Lonesome Luke Loses Patience," Two-Reel Rolin Comedy.

OBVIOUSLY a photoplay builded around the particular talents and charm of Baby Marie Osborne is "Tears and Smiles", a five-reel Pathe Gold Rooster picture released September 2. The picture follows the same general lines of former Lasalida productions in which the diminutive star was featured. In this production most of the burden of entertaining falls on the shoulders of Miss Osborne, and she carries off honors easily and in a manner that will please her followers to no inconsiderable degree. The little colored boy who has acted as a foil for little Miss Osborne in several preceding releases also is seen in this picture, and the two get over considerable touchingly humorous situations. The incidents knotted into the thread of the story aids the picture's entertaining power to no little extent.

Baby Marie is seen as the child of a drunken father who beats his wife. The baby runs away when her mother is taken to the hospital and is adopted by a wealthy, childless couple. Through the tot's diplomacy the mother is given a position as the baby's governess. The father gets out of jail and kidnaps his child. This gives the adopters a knowledge of the baby's mother's relationship to the child. Baby is rescued and the drunken father is shot in a struggle with a policeman. Meanwhile the wealthy man's wife has died from an overdose of headache powders. Later this leaves the way clear for a marriage between the broker and the baby's mother.

Baby Marie is surrounded by a company of capable players. Philo McCullough is seen in the leading male role. Marian Warner and Katherine MacLaren also have important parts.

The picture was directed by William Bertram. He has introduced some very pretty backgrounds for his action and has given the story fitting screen interpretation. Photography and other technical details are satisfactory.

"Lonesome Luke Loses Patience."

"Lonsome Luke Loses Patience", a two-reel comedy made by the Rolin Film Company for release by Pathe on September 9, contains a full quota of laughs. Harold Lloyd this time is seen as the conductor of a sanatarium. He is surrounded by a score or more of pretty girl nurses, which fact helps the number. Most of the action is confined to scenes in the sanitarium, which is the haven for several "ill" old men. There is enough speed to keep things going, with a whirlwind finish along toward the 800-foot mark. Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels also are seen on the screen.

"The Marriage Market"

Five-Reel World Film-Peerless Production Tells Strongly Entertaining Story, With Melodramatic Finish.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

RARELY does a five-reel offering contain so much action as this number, written by Clay Mantley and directed by Arthur Ashley. There is a wealth of plot material and it has been so smoothly and carefully put together that oen situation follows another without awkward breaks of any sort. It is highly entertaining and there is no lack of conviction until perhaps in the melodramatic scenes at the close, but even here the interest is held so strongly that the absence of entire plausibility is readily excused.

June Elvidge does excellent work in the leading feminine role. She plays the part of Helen Grant, daughter of a Wall street speculator who commits suicide after financial failure. The girl, in a vain effort to save her father just before his death, sells herself to Bradley Spayden, a young speculator on the street, though at the time she is in love wiih another man named Richard Marlowe. After her father has killed himself the girl remains true to her bargain, though her husband treats her cruelly. From this point the story moves forward in breathless fashion, showing the girl's attempt to gain financial independence on the street, her appeal to Eric Foxhall, and the latter's murder under complex circumstances. The court scenes are the ones which are rather lacking in conviction, but they are merely incidental to the main story. The girl, through a happy turn of events, is at last restored to her own lover.

The opening scenes of this story are particularly strong, showing an auction sale of thoroughbred horses. The stock market scenes are also pleasing. As a whole the production is one of rather exceptional interest in many ways.

Others in the cast are Arthur Ashley, Carlyle Blackwell, time Stingaree is instrumental in vindicating a young preacher who has been maligned by a former cell-mate; also the gentleman bushranger brings together two hearts that were separated by the criminal's story.

The story progresses toward its climax at a pace that keeps the spectator just one jump behind and always interested. There is just enough heart interest, enough suspense and enough of the other necessary photoplay elements to make the release attractive.

Besides Mr. Boardman and Mr. Hurst there are in the cast G. A. Williams, Edythe Sterling, Edward Hearn, Frank Jonasson and Barney Furey. Photography, locations, etc., are up to the high standard of this series.

THOSE who go to see the five-part Jewel photoplay, "Sirens of the Sea," to see the beauty of the female form revealed will not be disappointed. Louis Lovely in a bathing suit entertains about twenty of her school girl chums. She takes them to the seashore; then tells them that they must undress behind the rocks. When there is nothing but bare arms and shoulders and legs in sight, she runs off with their clothes and gives them seaweed to drape themselves in. Nothing could be fairer.

Jack Mulhall comes along on his yacht with a good-for-nothing companion (played by William Quinn). They come ashore and Mulhall pairs off with Louise and Quinn with Carmel Myers, who has the part of an artificial girl of the fashionable set jealous of Louise. One night Quinn chases Louise down by the shore and she jumps off a cliff. Mulhall goes in search of her in a rowboat, gets exhausted and has a beautiful dream. He dreams that Louise, who came out of the sea no one knows whence, has gone back to the sea to the haunts of the sirens.

The scenes of the sirens swimming about in their grottos are indeed very beautiful. After this the picture drags. A handful of scenes like Mulhall kissing Louise, and the sirens, in Greek bathing suits, dissolving out of and into the sea are repeated to the point of tedium and beyond. The story of the dream does not hold the attention. It was written by Grace Helen Bailey, and adapted and directed by Allen Holubar. This picture is clean, and beautiful.

Change in Standard Releases.

Through a change just decided upon by William Fox in the order of release of several of his most pretentious Standard Pictures, it becomes necessary to make revision in the schedule. Instead of "Cleopatra" being the first of the Theda Bara Superpictures issued to exhibitors, the initial production of the series will be Miss Bara's "Camille", directed by J. Gordon Edwards, released September 30.

The release dates of the first of the Standard Pictures are: August 19, "The Spy"; August 26, "The Honor System"; September 2, "Jack and the Beanstalk"; September 16, "The Conqueror"; September 30, "Camille".

"Seven Keys to Baldpate"

Entertaining Comedy-Melodrama of Artcraft Production, With George M. Cohan.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN many respects "Seven Keys to Baldpate" is of high merit. Mr. Cohan's interpretation of an author who is called upon to write a novel in twenty-four hours in order to win a large wager, is highly intelligent and effective. He does not fall into studio and stage errors about the writer of fiction, but acts like one in minute details quite as well as in psychology. When to this is added the fascination of his genial personality, his performance dominates the entire work. He is interesting every moment he appears on the screen, and he lucidly conveys an infinite variety of thought and feeling by subtle methods, rather than by the broad ones of the stage. Concessions have been made in the settings to theatricalism, but not offensively so. Only in the grouping of characters is this fault shown.

Those same settings are admirably selected, but they might be less impressive if it was not for some exceptional photographic work, nicely adjusted composition and powerful contrasts of light and shade. Artistic photography ranks second to Mr. Cohan's performance. The story held tight before a large Rialto audience until the concluding scenes, where the story-within-a-story idea seemed to act as an anti climax. There was a slump when it was seen that the supposedly real characters were fictitious ones. In a play of such general high merit it might be worth while trying the effect of ending as though the experiences depicted were those the author passed through. It might easily give more "zip" to the conclusion. The general impression, however, was favorable, and, as it stands, the story will please.

Robert Leonard Begins Mae Murray Bluebird.

Out in Universal City Robert Leonard, who will direct Bluebird's new star, has begun work on the interiors for "Princess Virtue", the feature designed to introduce Miss Murray to the program Nov. 5. The scenes are laid in France, among ultra fashionable folk, and at exclusive watering places, thus making the scenic requirements unusually exacting. Massive sets are under construction, and the exteriors will be made at Coronado Beach, Cal., the famous Pacific Coast resort. Bluebird intends to introduce Miss Murray to the program with every possible adjunct that may be expected to make for an immediate success for her productions. To that end a careful selection of her support has resulted in the engagement of Wheeler Oakman, Paul Nicholson, Jack Vosburg, Harry Von Meter, Gretchen Lederer and Clarissa Selwyn.

"Every Girl's Dream"

Fairy Tale—Like Quality in Its Story—Pretty Interior Scenes—June Caprice, a Good Cast, and a Remarkable Dog Player.

Reviewed by Hanford J. Judson.

THE new William Fox picture, "Every Girl's Dream," will please a good many in almost any general audience; but there is nothing sure-fire about it. The spectators at the Academy of Music, New York, seemed to take interest in it, but it is too long for a costume picture with so slight a plot as is this.

In the little Dutch village of Olenberg a baby girl, Gretchen (June Caprice), is found by the watch. The burgomaster makes Frau Van Lorn (Marcia Harris) adopt her, and as she grows up she has a hard time with the crabbed old woman. A silver box was found with her, and this she still keeps. She is loved by Carl (Harry Hilliard), who is also a foundling, but whose foster parents are kind to him. We are let into the secret that he is a stolen prince. A comical old mynher (Dan Mason) takes a fancy to Gretchen and offers to buy her as his wife by paying off Frau Van Lorn's mortgage. Through this and through the jealousy of Hulda (Margaret Fielding) much trouble comes to poor Gretchen. She is falsely accused of theft and Carl can't save her and she is put in jail. While Carl is mourning, he is taken away to the palace and finds that he is the king of the country. There is still a bit more of well-built suspense before Carl and Gretchen are seated on a throne together.

The picture is helped by excellent character work. Margaret Fielding also deserves credit for good work in the not elaborate part she fills. The center of the picture is, of course, Caprice, with her remarkably trained dog. It is surely a pretty picture and it has many praiseworthy qualities.

staged, well-dressed play which guards its secret to the end, and affords a large amount of live entertainment.

The story opens on a scene in which a woman enters from between velvet portieres with a dagger in her hand. This sets the ball of mystery rolling, and not until the very close of the story are we sure that the son of the house, whose murder is disclosed also at the opening of the story, has not been murdered by his own sister. Sharing with us in dread silence the belief that the woman, who has become the bride of the prosecuting attorney, and has inspired this suspicion by becoming hysterical in her sleep, are her husband and her father. Carefully guarding what they believe to be her secret they take her away to a secluded spot where the world will not be the wiser of the fact that her mentality is shaken; and there they remain until the arrival of a telegram revealing the secret which the bride has striven to keep, that another woman bearing the family name has committed the murder in revenge of a wrong. The story is a good one well told.

"Charity Castle."

Mary Miles Minter has been afforded an excellent vehicle for her talent in "Charity Castle", a five-part comedy-drama from the American studios. The story is one that will appeal to children as well as adults, and is wholesome and amusing. While the plot of the story may be reminiscent the general entertaining quality of the production makes it acceptable.

According to the story the extravagant son of a grouchy, gouty old man, at a moment when his father has turned him out of his house with orders not to return until he can show that he is able to earn a week's salary, finds himself face to face with a peculiar situation. His charwoman dying and her two attractive children left alone, he decides in the goodness of his heart to adopt them, not counting the cost. One day the little girl, who is a believer in fairy stories and all beautiful things, discovering his identity and also the fact that he is in financial trouble because of bills which he is called upon to pay on their behalf, starts out, accompanied by her little brother, for his father's house, which she afterward names Charity Castle, to try to mend the situation. Some amusing incidents occur when the children, alone in the great house, from which the master and servants had gone vacationing, make friends with a burglar, a "bum" and a down-and-out actor. Of course the story ends with the grouch arriving on the scene and being converted to a happier and kindlier frame of mind by the children. The son, returning after having actually earned a week's salary, is reinstalled in his father's affections.

"Idolaters"

Louise Glaum and Strong Supporting Company Appear in Five-Reel Triangle Story of the Vampire Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel offering, written by John Lynch and Monte M. Katterjohn, and directed by Walter Edwards, represents the voluptuous, exotic type of narrative, usually designated as the "vampire" story, in a high state of development. Nothing is wanting in the way of appropriate settings, sensual atmosphere and intense, fervid acting to carry out the traditions in this sort of production. It is, in fact, so true to type that for many observers the end of the story is in sight long before the last reel has finished its revolutions.

The plot is stronger that many of the kind and deals with an interesting set of characters. It begins with the chance meeting of two girls in a Chicago station, each of them bound for New York City with the express intention of becoming an actress. In the course of the story both succeed. Anita Carew wins by dint of hard work and then gives up the stage to marry a young playwright. Viola Strathmore wins by a different method. Her success is brought to her by the aid of an "angel," a wealthy old man who has fallen into her clutches. Later she appears in a play written by Anita's husband, whom she lures to his destruction. The inevitable tragedy is led up to in masterly fashion, though such situations never get far away from a certain artificiality. The young playwright is murdered and Viola also meets death afterward at the hands of her jealous Egyptian servant.

Louise Glaum is strong in the part of Viola, utilizing all the seductive methods permissible for carrying out her ambitions. She times the arrival and departure of her various admirers by a wrist watch. Dorcas Matthews does some appealing and effective work as Anita Carew, and Lee Hill has a few good bits as Borul, the Egyptian. George Webb has the leading masculine role as the playwright. Others in the cast are T. S. Hill, Hugo Koch and Milton Ross.

"Triumph"

Dorothy Phillips as a Stage-Struck Country Girl in a Five-Part Bluebird.

IN THE five-part Bluebird, "Triumph," Dorothy Phillips is a stage-struck country girl. She gets only as far as the country railroad station, where she meets a traveling troupe waiting for a train. One of the actors tells her a story story runs four reels. It is a tragedy. Dorothy Phillips plays the part of the young actress that the story is about. She is loved by the manager of the show and the author. After the dress rehearsal the author goes to her dressing room to run over the love scene. It should go more smoothly. The manager finds them and calls off the show. The actress goes to the manager's rooms to plead with him to let the show on. He finally consents (we quote the press book) after setting his own price upon the girl's ambition. When he immediately attempts to bind the bargain, the girl stabs and kills him. This murder is followed by two suicides.

The succession of scenes after this when the girl is taking curtain calls at the theater and the author is lying dead at home, after writing a confession to the murder of the manager, brings out dramatic irony strongly. It is the best part of the photoplay. In the girl's death scene in the play she uses a real dagger and kills herself. When we are brought back to the railroad station where the actor is telling this story to the stage-struck country girl. When he finishes she changes her mind about going to the city. Thus the photoplay is injured at the end by the anti-climax.

The audience is cheated at the beginning of the story within the story. This made to seem a continuation of the outside story. Some like this manner of construction. It is not clear why Dorothy Phillips should be the only person in costume at the first rehearsal of the play unless it is to show her understanding as an ingenue. However, the tragic story within the story would make a very good photoplay without the outside story. This photoplay is a screen version of a magazine story written by Samuel Hopkins Adams. In the cast are: Lon Chaney, William Stowell, William J. Dyer and Claire Dubrey. It was directed by Joseph De Grasse. It was released September 3.

A GOOD Klever Comedy that is not too rough is "The Cinderella Husband," written by Thomas J. Gray. Vic lives with a "brutess" of a wife and her brother. The first part of the picture shows Vic doing the housework. There are some good bits here. Then the trio attend a meeting where the king of a carnival is to be selected. Each man puts a shoe in a basket. The queen, blindfolded, takes out a shoe and the one that the shoe fits is acclaimed king. Vic makes a very funny king. We are sorry that he had to sit on his sharp-pointed crown. When the brother-in-law villain blows up the throne it raises Vic very high in everyone's estimation. This picture is bound to bring laughs. The interest of the picture is in Victor Moore's characterization. It is very well done.

THE reason why "The Ten of Diamonds," from a story by Albert Cowles, proves intensely entertaining, is principally because its presentation is psychologically correct. The chief feminine character in the story is not of the type that we might wish our daughters or sisters to emulate, yet as a stray bit of human driftwood we find Dorothy Dalton's portrayal of her very fascinating.

Harry Solter, who directed Miss Hall in this feature, has been assigned to the development of Carmel Myers as a Bluebird star, "The Dynast" being now in process of production as Miss Myers' initial release, Nov. 12. This will introduce two new stars to the program on successive weeks—Mae Murray, in "The Princess Virtue", coming out Nov. 5, under the screen management of Robert Leonard.

Further releases in October will start a regular routine of appearance for each principal eight weeks intervening, while Bluebird's eight fixed stars take their regular turn on the schedule. Franklyn Farnum will be introduced as a lone star in "The Maverick" (directed by Joseph De Grasse) Oct. 8. Chief in his support will be Lon Chaney and his leading lady will be Claire Du Brey. Both of these players moved over with Director De Grasse from the Dorothy Phillips company. Isola Forrester and Mann Page furnished the story of "The Maverick".

Miss Phillips, directed by Ida May Park, who will make all future Dorothy Phillips Bluebirds, will offer "Bondage", Oct. 15, as her tenth production since joining Bluebird as many months ago. In this feature Miss Phillips will have William Stowell as leading man, to be featured along with Gretchen Lederer and Gertrude Aster in the supporting company. "Bondage" was created for the screen exclusively by Miss Park from a story Edna Kenton suggested .

Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford will be presented Oct. 22 in "The Desire of the Moth", a third offering in the series of "Rupert Julian Bluebirds" to be especially featured on the program hereafter. Anna Little to Support Wallace Reid.

"Nan of Music Mountain" is to be seen on the screen. This will be welcome news to the thousands who have delighted in the breezy novel which has long held a record among the best sellers. It will be a Paramount picture, and will have as its star none other than Wallace Reid, whose latest picture, "The Hostage," is a September 10 Paramount release. An announcement of particular interest in this connection is that Anna Little, former Ince star, and who will be seen with Conway Tearle in J. Stuart Blackton's forthcoming production of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The World for Sale," has been engaged by Jesse L. Lasky to support Wallace Reid in the picture.

New Faces in Forthcoming Triangles

All Departments Have Been Augmented by Addition of New Players, Directors and Scenario Writers.

MORE than twenty new players, scenario writers and directors have been added to the Triangle Culver City forces since the reorganization of the company, and it is reported that negotiations are now under way to obtain the services of several more stars and production experts. Among the most important of those recently engaged is Richard Bret Harte, grandson of the famous writer. Mr. Harte will devote his time to preparing original stories for the screen, drawing on a rich fund of experiences during his life in this country and abroad.

Texas Guinan, whose engagement has been officially announced, is already a favorite of the public by reason of her musical comedy success. "The Devil Dodger," a forthcoming western drama, will present Roy Stewart as gunfighter for the first time in the Triangle program. Stewart is master of all the tricks of horsemanship, it is said, having owned and operated a ranch in Mexico prior to the disturbances there some time ago.

Belle Bennet is another "find" for whom a wide popularity is predicted. Her first appearance before the Triangle cameras was in "Valley of Fear," to be released the middle of September. She is now working on "Ashes of Hope," a play similar in locale and action to "The Flame of the Yukon," one of Triangle's greatest successes. Arthur Hoyt, whose most recent appearance was in the title role of "Mr. Opp," has become a member of the Triangle Players' Company and will appear in roles of the type which he has interpreted with remarkable success during the past.

Claire MacDowell, featured in numerous recent plays produced by other companies, has been added to the Triangle lists for leading roles. Ruth Stonehouse, already one of the film favorites of the day, has started work on a Triangle production, the title of which has not been decided upon. Margery Wilson, who has long attracted attention for her work in Triangle plays, comes forth as a new star in "Mountain Dew," on the program for the week of September 16.

Among the other new names that appear on the roster of the stock company is that of George Cheseboro, who has played leading roles in numerous productions, his most recent being in support of Arthur Hoyt in "Mr. Opp." He will act as leading man for Olive Thomas in "Broadway, Arizona," just completed. George Hernandez, George C. Pearce, Gloria Madien, Carolyn Wagner, and others whose names are known to the film fans, will shortly appear in Triangle offerings.

The directorial staff has been augmented by the addition of Lynn F. Reynolds, Jack Conway, E. Mason Hopper, Ferris Hartman, Thomas H. Heffron and William V. Mong. Cliff Smith, who has directed William S. Hart in many of the star's western dramas, now being reissued, has been assigned to the direction of plays featuring Roy Stewart, Walter Edwards, one of the best known of Triangle directors, having completed "Idolaters," with Louise Glaum, is now directing Belle Bennett in "Ashes of Hope."

George Ade Fables Begin

"The Twelve Cylinder Speed of the Leisure Class" First of Essanay's New General Film Series.

WITH the naming of the first releases in the new George Ade "Fables in Slang" series General Film reports extraorl'nary attention for these comedies being manifested by exhibitors. There will be twelve of these American humorous subjects in approximately two-reel lengths. The releases come one a week.

The opening number of the current series is "The Twelve-Cylinder Speed of the Leisure Class". The story concerns the sudden rise to wealth of Mr. and Mrs. Basker, plain, homespun people of the M'ddle West. A terrific pace is set them by their more modern son and daughter. Particularly happy types for the Baskers have been found by Essanay in George Bean and Frankie Raymond.

The succeeding subjects in the Ade series of comedies are "The Wandering Boy and the Wayward Parents" and "What Transpires After the Wind-Up".

"The Neglected Wife" Contest.

The work of sorting out and reading the great mass of answers submitted by serial fans throughout the country in the contest on "The Neglected Wife", Pathe's serial, is practically completed, and the judges are now considering the merits of less than 100 of the 50,000 answers received, to decide as to who will obtain the prizes. The prizes to be awarded consist of the first prize of $1,000, a second prize of $500, and five additional prizes of $100 each.

Mabel Herbert Urner, the author of "The Neglected Wife", J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange Inc., and Lewis Joseph Vance, a well known American writer, are the judges who will make decision in this contest.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

THE STRANGER AT DUMCRIEFF (Kalem).—A two-reel episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" series. E. W. Hornung has written an interesting story and Paul C. Hurst has screened it fittingly, with True Boardman in the leading role. Stingaree is this time instrumental in vindicating a young minister who has been maligned by a former cell-mate, and also brings together two hearts that were separated by the story. Reviewed in this issue.

TWELVE-CYLINDER SPEED OF THE LEISURE CLASS (Essanay).—A two-reel George Ade fable about a middle class family that is visited by the scourge of war. Juicy contracts make them rich. The father dresses up like a safeblower disguised as John Drew; and the mother takes orders from a maid whose coat of arms is French but whose map is Killarney. They go to Palm Beach. The humor of the picture is in their attempts to ape the rich. Some of the sub-titles are very funny. The moral of the fable is not clear.

IN AFTER YEARS (Selig).—A one-reel drama. In the first part a reminiscent passage is very well done. The heroine sees the events of her past life enacted in the fireplace. Her lover goes to hunt in the jungle. He is attacked and wounded by a tiger. This part is very exciting. He recovers. Camels and elephants figure in the jungle scenes, with a very interesting tiger.

WORLD SELIG LIBRARY, No. 16.—Four subjects are treated in this reel. The best part is the harvesting of wheat on a 25,000-acre farm in North Dakota. Threshing 2,000 bushels a day is shown; the use of tractors, plowing eight furrows at once, and the use of grain elevators. The reel begins with the instruments in the Government weather bureau, and ends with an arsenic squad going out after grasshoppers. The short subject on this reel is the breeding of silver foxes at $6,000 each. The foxes are camera shy. They scarcely give an idea of what a silver fox looks like.

THE HOUSE OF MYSTERY (Selig).—A two-reeler with John Cossar in the cast. It bears a resemblance to a photoplay seen two years ago in which there was a circular staircase with a secret chamber at the top. The story of this picture is quite incoherent.

A MAN OF HIS WORD (Falcon).—A four-reeler set in England. The story is about a run on a bank. The hero is an Englishman of a family which has headed the bank for six generations. He is brought back from ranch life, where he has spent twenty years, to take charge of the bank. He helps a good-for-nothing rival banker and nearly causes the collapse of his own bank. This is a fair photoplay.

THE PHANTOM SHOTGUN (Falcon).—A four-reeler directed by Harry Harvey and featuring Kathleen Kirkman and R. Henry Grey. The story was written by Stanley Clisby Arthur. It is a mystery story set on shipboard where a number of passengers are strangely shot. It takes two reels to work up to this situation. It is fairly entertaining.

JOHN TOM LITTLE BEAR (Broadway Star).—A two-reel O. Henry story adapted by Harry Southwell and directed by David Smith. Al Jennings has the leading part. He is an Indian college graduate associated with two fakirs in the exploitation of a patent medicine called Sum-wat-ah. A child joins them. They find his mother. John Tom falls in love with her, gets intoxicated and puts on his war paint. He visits the hotel where mother and child are. He meets the father, who has separated from the mother and has returned to kidnap the child. John Tom kills the father and scalps him. The story centers about the Indian's reversion to type under alcoholic intoxication. The beginning is dull and full of sub-titles. The end is somewhat repulsive. The Indian staggers in with the dank scalp hanging at his belt.

THE LITTLE SAMARITAN (Erbograph), August 27.—A five-part comedy-drama of church life in a small town. The story, written by a clergyman, is excellent. Marian Swayne has the leading part. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

MOTHER O' MINE, September 3.—A strong five-reel subject, written and produced by Rupert Julian, who plays the leading role, supported by Mrs. Ruby LaFayette, Elsie Jane Wilson, Ruth Clifford and W. E. Warner. The number contains a great deal of humor and pathos and is one that should have wide appeal. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Butterfly Pictures.

WHO WAS THE OTHER MAN? September 3.—A five-reel subject featuring Francis Ford in the double role of foreign spy and American secret service man, supported by Mae Gaston and others. This deals with the activities of foreign spies in Washington. The story is only moderately entertaining at the start, but reaches a pleasing climax. The cast and photography are pleasing. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE DOMESTIC HOUND, August 6.—A Hank Mann picture full of rough comedy that made a number of good laughs at the Academy of Music, New York. It is the usual Hank Mann stuff. It isn't polite comedy, but it gets by with most, or seems to.

BETRAYED, August 26.—Plenty of action and well directed story, wtih humor, realism, romance and dash. It will be a sure winner with most audiences and will please every audience probably. For a longer notice, see elsewhere in this issue.

EVERY GIRL'S DREAM, August 25.—A costume picture in five reels, telling a slight but pretty romance half like a fairy tale. It is well put on and has many attractive qualities, but is rather long for the substance of the plot and this makes it seem slow in action. A longer notice will be found on another page of this issue.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

SIRENS OF THE SEA, August ...—A five-part photoplay suggested by the legend of the Lorelei. Louise Lovely, Carmel Myers and Jack Mulhall have leading parts. The first two reels are very fine. After that Mulhall has a dream that does not hold the interest well. It is composed of a monotonous succession of similar scenes. This picture is clean. The best parts are the swimming scenes, with about twenty girls, in the first two reels. Reviewed in this issue.

Greater Vitagraph.

WHEN BOBBY BROKE HIS ARM.—A one-reel Bobby Connelly picture written and directed by Charles M. Seay. Bobby with a fractured arm visits his grandma in the country. He and Aida Horton fall in love with a calf, Gladys Pansy. The calf is sold to a butcher; but when the children learn of this they take it away from the butcher's shop where it is tied up. They plan to join a circus. Bobby will be a lion-tamer, Aida a bare-back rider, and the calf, a horse. Bobby's mother arrives and affairs are straightened out. This picture is fairly entertaining.

SOLDIERS OF CHANCE (Vitagraph), September 3.—A five-reel melodrama by James Oliver Curwood. Evart Overton and Miriam Fouche are featured. The film has story action in every foot of film. It tells of adventure in South America and of the revenge on an unworthy capitalist. The love interest is there, too. A longer review is printed in the review columns of this issue.

GALL AND GOLF (Vitagraph).—A one-reel comedy produced by Lawrence Semon, who also takes the leading role. The comedy is mostly devoted to footage, showing Mr. Semon in attempts at clowning. The number does not go over very well, its only laughs being in the scenes showing the golf balls flying around. A few pretty girls help a little. A mediocre release.

SLIPS AND SLACKERS (Vitagraph).—A one-reel Lawrence Semon comedy written by Graham Baker. He is a slacker who is scared by the methods of testing recruits. These scenes are very funny. He compels the scrubwoman to marry him. Then he finds that she is worse than war. The best part is where he sits on a target that has been freshly painted. When he gets up the recruits mistake him for the target and begin practice.

M. H. Hoffman, Inc,

THE SILENT WITNESS, August.—A seven-part picture, produced by the Authors Film Company and featuring Gertrude McCoy and Frank L. A. O'Connor. As pointed out in a review on another page the story has merit in its last third, the first five thousand feet lacking the interest to sustain that amount of footage.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

CONQUEST PROGRAM NO. 6 (Edison), August 18.—This program contains an excellent four-part comedy-drama entitled "The Customary Two Weeks," wholesome and entertaining, a one-reel historical picture, "The Story of Plymouth Rock," scenes in "The Grand Canyon of Arizona," "Nature's Perfect Thread Spinner," which is a 500-foot illustration on the silk worm, and "The Magic of Spring," a delightful fantastical bit. This is a good program all through and has been reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE LADY OF THE PHOTOGRAPH (Edison), August 27.—A five-reel comedy-drama featuring Shirley Mason. The star is attractive and the story is a good one; but the latter has not been handled well and the comedy does not always get over. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere. The cast is a good one.

A MIDNIGHT BELL (Selig), September 3.—A two-reel version of a Hoyt farce directed by J. A. Richmond. William Fables, James Harris and Amy Dennis are in the cast. The story is about a fire in a country town where the fire chief and chief of police are both in love with the girl to be rescued. Much of the humor depends on the fire hose. A very funny incident is where a rope is thrown up to a window and the chief of police pulled down. This is a knockabout with laughs. It is free from the objectionable features of its predecessors.

THE KINGDOM OF HOPE (Essanay), August 22.—A two-reel episode of the "Do Children Count?" series, with Little Mary McAlister as the child of pacifist parents. She and Ellis Paul shame their parents by enlisting. This is not an interesting picture.

Marine Film Corporation.

LORELEI OF THE SEA (Marine), August.—A photographically beautiful, sometimes artistically, pleasing six-reel picture that has far too little story value to hold up its footage. Tyrone Power and Frances Burnham are featured. There are many scenes showing nymphs disporting about waterfalls, etc. The picture is wholesome and clean. It was produced by Henry Otto. A longer review is printed in the review columns of this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE GIRL WITHOUT A SOUL, August 13.—Viola Dana does some very fine work in this five-reel Rolfe production, in which she plays the part of two sisters having opposite temperaments. The direction and photography are good, and she is ably assisted by a competent cast. A review appears on another page of this issue.

THE PATRIOT (Drew), August 27.—An excellent patriotic comedy offering featuring the Drews. In this number Mr. and Mrs. Henry become very patriotic, and fond as they are of good living, decide to support the administration in conserving food. Mandy, the colored cook, is taken into their confidence and turns out to be more patriotic than her employers. Very funny.

Mutual Film Corporation.

CHARITY CASTLE (American), September 3.—A Mary Miles Minter picture in which the star has been given a better opportunity than usual. The story is somewhat reminiscent, but is well done and interesting. It is a picture that children will like as well as adults, and has been reviewed at length elsewhere. The story tells how a little girl regenerates an old grouch and cements sundered family relations.

REEL LIFE NO. 71 (Gaumont), September 6.—The subjects in this number of Reel Life are "A Watering System for the Farm," a short but interesting bit; "Pets Which Will Never Become Popular," introducing a skunk farm and its young mistress. This is also a short length. "Handling the Mail" shows us how the parcel post department is managed, and also the money order and postal savings departments. A short length on "The Five Senses," with a couple of cartoons from "Life" close the reel.

THE BRIDE'S SILENCE (American), September 10.—A well-made five-part melodrama featuring Gail Kane. A full review of the production appears elsewhere. Suffice it to say that the story is a good one, and has been produced in a manner to create suspense. The picture is well dressed, artistic, and holds its secret to the end.

REPUTATION (Goodrich).—A five-part production featuring Edna Goodrich. It is not the fault of the story or of the supporting cast that this production is not up to the mark. The picture is badly made. It tells the story of a young girl who goes to the city to try to make good, and is harassed into leaving her position by a loosed-moraled employer. The wife of this man, believing the girl to be at fault, ruins her name in her own town. Later when again she tries to make her way in the world a trap is set for her by some associates of the man's. In the end she triumphs by luring the man on and exposing his perfidy to his wife. As the story is told on the screen it has an unwholesome tinge.

REEL LIFE NO. 72 (Gaumont), September 13.—This number contains some interesting matter, the most interesting of which is "Tree Planting in Our National Forests." "An Unusual Colt," presents a tiny Shetland pony in the arms of a little boy. "Hunting Turtle Eggs" tells some interesting things about the loggerhead turtle, and shows a nest of eggs being unearthed in a sand bank. "The Midnight Sun," photographed at a far northern point of Alaska, presents an unusual sight.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE CINDERELLA HUSBAND (Klever).—Victor Moore in a good one-reel comedy written by Thomas J. Gray. First we see Vic doing the housework. Then he is elected king of a carnival. Victor Moore does some good comedy character acting.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 68, August 19.—Arrival of Japanese Mission on Pacific coast; championship auto races at Sheepshead Bay, N. Y.; Fourth of July celebration of U. S. Soldiers in China; British women doing their "bit," and other interesting items comprise this reel.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 69, August 26.—An interesting feature shows Greeks at Athens cheering arrival of French officers; there are also views of 165th U. S. Infantry at Mineola; German Liner Kronprinzessin Cecile being overhauled for U. S. service; National Army men drilling on Governor's Island, N. Y., and harvesting of gigantic wheat crop in California.

TEARS AND SMILES (Lasalida), September 2.—A five-reel picture featuring Baby Marie Osborne. Miss Osborne holds up her end in a masterly fashion, although she hasn't got a particularly strong story to work with. The story tells of her being adopted by wealthy folks and later scheming to get her mother with her. The supporting cast is good. A full review is printed in the review columns of this issue.

LONESOME LUKE BOSSES PATIENTS (Rolin), September 9.—A two-reel comedy in which Harold Lloyd is featured. The film contains a full quota of laughs. The action is confined to scenes in a sanatarium which old men attend, and in which are a score or more of pretty girl nurses. There is enough speed to the comedy to carry it through. Reviewed in this issue.

THE SHORT CIRCUIT (Astra), September 16.—Episode No. 11 of "The Fatal Ring." Pearl White gets over several thrills in this chapter—one when she leaps from a galloping horse to a tree, another when she jumps from the horse into an automobile, and a third when she catapults from a bridge to the top of a speeding train. The story progresses rapidly. Pearl escapes from the burning building, but thinks Tom has perished. She gets possession of the violet diamond and learns that Tom is a prisoner. Carslake holds her up and gets the diamond. Pearl, aided by the foresters, rescues Tom.

OUR NATIONAL PARKS—GLACIER PARK (Pathe).—A split-reel sharing American scenery with Japanese. The first half of the reel is devoted to beautiful scenes in the vicinity of Triple Divide Mountain. Ice and snow on the mountain tops in summer are shown in all their grandeur. Close-up views give us an insight into what Nature does when she dresses her mountains in white. The latter half of the reel contains beautiful "shots" in Pathecolor at gorgeously pretty Japanese gardens. We get a thorough idea of the horticultural skill of the Japanese through the views obtained by the cameraman.

MAKING MARINE OFFICER (International), September 2.—A split-reel combining a visualized article outlined by the title and a 500-foot animated cartoon titled "Happy Hooligan Gets the Razoo." The first half of the reel shows us just how this country is training youths to become officers. The pictures were taken aboard the training ship Newport and show the boys learning seamanship. A few excellent scenes show the men climbing up ratlines. The "man overboard" drill is also interesting. The cartoon brings Hooligan and his brother Gloomy to a cannibal island. It is quite funny.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE TEN OF DIAMONDS (Triangle), September 2.—A five-part production of entertaining quality featuring Dorothy Dalton. The picture is presented in a manner psychologically correct, and therefore carries weight as a box office attraction. It is not, however, a picture of entirely wholesome moral atmosphere. A full review will be found elsewhere.

IDOLATERS (Triangle-Kay-Bee), September 9.—A five-reel offering of the vampire type, by John Lynch and Monte M. Katterjohn. Louise Glaum is featured in the leading role, which is effectively rendered for this type of part. The story is one of the sensuous sort, leading up to a series of tragical events. It is lavish in settings and well produced. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

HIS COOL NERVE, August 12.—A comedy number of average strength, involving the adventures of Harry McCoy as an iceman and a fickle lover, handled in such a maner as to get a number of laughs. Much of the comedy is supplied by an exceedingly thin spinster, whose bank account finally secures for her a stout husband.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

THE PERILOUS LEAP (Gold Seal), September 10.—A three-reel subject, by T. Shellay Sutton, featuring Val Paul, Helen Gibson, O. C. Jackson, George Williams and George Routh. This tells of opium smuggling. The girl performs some daring feats on a swiftly-moving fright train in going to the rescue of the hero, a secret service agent. The story could well have been told in two reels, as some of the opening scenes are not essential. At the same time the subject has considerable strength and works up to an exciting close.

SHORT SKIRTS AND DEEP WATERS (Joker), September 10.—A burlesque number, by Tom Gibson, featuring Gale Henry and William Franey as leaders in an "Anti-Sin" society. They visit the beach and attempt to regulate the length of bathing costumes. This is characteristic and contains some fairly good humor of the type.

BOULEVARD SPEED HOUNDS (Nestor), September 10.—An original and unusually funny comedy, by Fred A. Palmer, featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. They are pinched for speeding and fool the cop by making believe Eddie's wife is ill from childbirth; Lee poses as the wife and uses a small dog for the baby. A delicate situation handled with just right comedy touch to get it over in good style.

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER (Star Featurette), September 10.—Whether or not the author of this two-part picture took his idea from the play called "The Marriage Market" is of slight importance, for whatever its origin this production will make satisfactory entertainment. Mary Fuller plays a country girl who goes to the city, and when her small fortune is spent offers herself to the highest bidder. A first rate story well presented by Miss Fuller, Averill Harris, Clara Beyers and others.

IN THE CLUTCHES OF MILK (Victor), September 10.—A comedy number, by Craig Hutchinson, featuring Max Asher, Gladys Tennison and Harry Mann. There is a great deal of "boozing" in this number, but not much point to the action, which keeps it from being very funny. It has but few really strong moments; the chase scenes at the close are best.

NEARLY A QUEEN (Joker), September 10. -A typical Gale Henry number, which brings the usual number of laughs. She plays the part of a waif left in a far land by some sailors. Twenty years later she poses as queen. The hero and the villain clash over her. This gets up some amusing burlesque action and is quite entertaining.

A TEXAS SPHINX (Bison), September 10.—This is a two-reel Western drama with a surprise plot. Harry Carey holds up a stage. One of his victims, sworn in as deputy sheriff, tracks down his partner and puts him in jail as a noted outlaw in disguise. Harry Carey turns out to be a ranger, and the deputy sheriff is the real outlaw. This picture leads up to a very strong climax.

FROM CACTUS TO KALE (L-KO), September 10.—A two-reel comedy number that has a quite fast and furious finish. There is not much to the eariler parts of the picture, the scenes of which are devoted mostly to a restaurant where the Weasel starts things. When the Weasel inherits money and comes to the city he starts some more things. The chase that finishes the picture is a good one. During the course of it an auto plunges into the sea. A fair comedy of its type.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 86, August 29.—Recruiting with a tank in Chicago, training in Georgia, visit of the Imperial Japanese Mission, and various other entertaining features are included in this number.

CURRENT EVENTS, NO. 16, August 31.—A number filled with timely pictorial subjects, including views of Uncle Sam's coast defense, the dog show at Atlantic City, the Dolly sisters posing as "iron workers," swimming instructions at Silver Bay, and others.

THE FLAMING METEOR (Universal Special), September 3.—Episode No. 11 of "The Gray Ghost." Very interesting developments mark this episode. Wade Hildreth and Morn Light escape from the House Shadows. The Gray Ghost has a mental control of some sort over the girl, but it develops that the maid, who is in love with him, is overcome with jealousy and she threatens to kill The Gray Ghost. The installment, which is full of pleasing incidents, closes with the maid about to shoot the master criminal.

World Film Corporation

THE MARRIAGE MARKET (Peerless), September 3.—A brisk, well-constructed five-reel number, with a melodramatic close, featuring June Elvidge, Arthur Ashley, Carlyle Blackwell and others. The story deals with the paddock, the financial district and also has a pleasing social side. It has a swift-moving plot, not entirely convincing in certain of the latter scenes, but very enjoyable. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

To Show "Fall of Romanoffs"

Brenon's Picture Dealing With Incidents of the Russian Revolution to Have First Screening at Ritz Carleton.

INVITATIONS are out for the premier showing of Herbert Brenon's screen creation "The Fall of the Romanoffs," scheduled for Thursday evening, September 6, in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carleton Hotel, New York City. It is expected that many notables will be present. The showing begins at 8.30 o'clock.

The relation of the subject of this picture to events that have transpired in Russia within the past few months has aroused considerable interest in it, undoubtedly, and many will be curious to learn just how faithfully and with what insight Mr. Brenon has handled his theme. Much will be expected of the producer, who presumes to portray as historical facts events of so recent occurrence and to base conclusions upon them. As a record of those events—if it is a record—"The Fall of the Romanoffs" should be of inestimable value.

As an inference of the importance of the Brenon picture we append the impressions of Julian Johnson, a writer and critic of known ability, connected with the Department of Exploitation of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, which may be fairly said to indicate the character of the subject. Mr. Johnson says:

"Herbert Brenon's screen production 'The Fall of the Romanoffs' is the first big and significant record, literary or pictorial, which the Great War has inspired. It should be as enduring as the events which it reproduces are far-reaching.

"One can think, immediately, of many pictures which the war has caused to be painted; of the multitude of books which the conflict has caused to be written; of the inspired poems, of the messages of authors from Maeterlinck to Kipling, of the earnest efforts of every great artistic mind. But what have these men —and women—recorded? Impressions. Nothing more.

"To rely on the ever-ready motion picture phraseology, there has been but one 'complete sequence' in the war; and but one enduring effect has been registered so far on the changeless film of eternity. That sequence effect, result, or what you will, is the Russian revolution.

"Be the Western finish what it may, regarding crowns and boundaries; be the final result the overthrow of a dynasty and indemnity, or be it pacifism and disarmament, Russia is free. She has changed from a barbarous despotism to militant democracy, and so far there is no promise of any single result in the war which will be so great.

"And the nucleus, the kernel, the causation of all this, has been registered in Brenon"s film. These absolute realities form the plot, the personality, the thrill, the suspense, the romance, the terror, the big living drama of 'The Fall of the Romanoffs.' The title of the picture itself is history.

"Forgetting what the fall of the Romanoff dynasty means to the world, let us see what the picture means to motion picture progress. It is the second of two great historic scrolls worthy preservation for the instruction of future generations. The first was 'The Birth of a Nation,' in which Mr. Griffith made a long-dead day live again, and showed the horrors of fratricide in so convincing a manner that it is quite probable that this photoplay alone might prevent a civil war. Here was a record of the past, made to live again by the touch of a man of genius. It is quite true that practically none of the present generation knew by direct personal contact anything about Civil War men and Civil War times, but the transcript was enough—it was art enough, humanity enough to plunge any twentieth century boy or girl unreservedly into the events of fifty years ago.

"Mr. Brenon, however, has taken the most significant episode of the moment, and has told its meaning in a universal language. This is the first and only historical document which is equally understandable in Singapore, Naples, Belfast, New York and Clay Center. This picture is destined to go around the world, proclaiming what the Russian revolution means to all peoples. 'To all peoples,' you say; what concern is the Russian revolution to all peoples?

"Russia is, next to China, the world's most populous country. While the vast body of its agriculturists have not been progressive, the nation is not at all to be compared to China in its inertia and lack of imaginative force. Contrariwise, Russia is the most potential country on the face of the earth. Its millions are children of imagination, invention and ambition. Even in their darkest hours of slavery great poets, great composers, great painters and great generals have arisen among them, and the fame of their art and their valor has gone around the world. Liberty to Russia will prove a flame in a tinder forest; and an exposition of the source of Russian liberty, as well as the cause of Russian slavery, is of interest to every living man and woman who is above the level of tearing raw meat and wearing a gee-string.

"Why? Because Russia, in peace, is going to be the world's most stupendous competitor. Her countless thousands are going to make life a matter of hustle for everybody else on the globe, and the pre-eminent question is going to be: 'How did this happen?' Brenon is telling you how it happened—now.

"It chanced that the greatest romance and the most unbelievable melodrama are wound up inextricably in the final throes of Russian autocracy, and the first struggles of the new-hatched freedom. Rasputin, the strangest, the most diabolic, the most gigantic figure since the Middle Ages, was the wielder of empire in empire's final wild flare, and Brenon's story picks up Rasputin at his very dawn, and follows him to his doom. He is the central figure—the demon—if you please—of a great tableau of love and hate which embraces the Czar, the Czarina, the reactionaries, such revolutionists as Korniloff and Kerensky, and the beauties of the Imperial court."

PREPARATIONS FOR ONCOMING L-KO'S.

General Director J. G. Blystone, of L-Ko Comedies, back from a fortnight of refreshing rest amid the Sierra Nevadas, has set to work upon a series of comedies with his staff of assistants speeding up the preparations for a series of lively fun-makers. Noel Smith, Phil Dunham, Dick Smith, Archie Mayo and Van Moore have all been instructed to work fast before it starts raining for a Los Angeles winter.

Just now Noel Smith is working out a comedy that centers around a dancing school, with Gladys Varden, Walter Stevens and Bert Roach leading in the festivities. Dick Smith has rebounded from a siege of pleurisy and is making up for lost time with Eva Novak, Bob McKenzie, Chester Ryckman and Eddie Barry doing comedy stunts to enliven the L-Ko series.

Phil Dunham, having tried his hand at both acting and directing, is now combining his talents in a two-reeler that will have Lucille Hutton and Billy Bevan featured with Mr. Dunham playing a part as well as showing them how to do it. As he was a favorite comedian in L-Ko's before he took to directing, Mr. Dunham will find his audience waiting for his return to the screen.

Vin Moore is working on a mining comedy, starring Myrtle Sterling with Al Forbes featured. Miss Sterling has her work cut out for her as a Western belle who cleans up a mining camp, reforms a dance hall and does a comedy "white wings" in the village street. Hughie Mack is nearing the finish of his first L-Ko, with Noel Smith directing him and the new featured one in L-Ko's is trying to make his first comedy serve as an effective introduction.

Exhibitors who get their comedies through Universal sources are promised a series of L-Ko's that will cleverly maintain the average set by past releases in that series.

State Rights Department

Conducted by BEN H. GRIMM

Lee Organization Completed

Roster Includes Big Operators—Foreign Buyers Also Join —Body Comprises Three Classes.

JOSEPH F. LEE announces that the organization of state rights buyers promoted by him is completed. Numbered on the organization's membership roll are some of the biggest operators in the United States. Also, under Mr. Lee's promotion and through his efforts and the efforts of Jacques Kopfstein, several independent foreign buyers have joined the organization. There will be three distinct classes of franchise holders under the plan of operation: those who handle nothing but the big special state rights features, those who handle the "commercial" five and single-reel films, and those who handle foreign territories on all pictures.

Mr. Lee gives it as his belief that the success of the special feature attraction depends largely on the representatives in the territories having suitable theaters to exploit them properly. Those who have already signed in the special attraction class are: Louis B. Mayer, controlling the New England States, also the Park theater, Boston; Harry Samwick, New York and State; Sid Gruman, of San Francisco, who controls the Empress theater circuit, and who at present has in course of construction in Los Angeles a theater that will have cost a million dollars, controlling California, Arizona and Nevada; A. Dresner and Harry Crandall, of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Washington, controlling District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia; Jack Lannon, general manager of the Greater Features Co., controlling Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho.

The remainder of the territory, according to Mr. Lee, merely awaits confirmation. The foreign department, in charge of Mr. Kopfstein, includes the following: Sociadad General Cinematografica, Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Spain, Portugal and New Guinea, Leroy Garfinkle, representative; The Pan American Film Service Company, Mexico and Cuba, Thomas & Kapfstein, representatives; Charles Thompson, Philippine Islands, Peru, Bolivia and Brazil, U. Ono, Japan; Progressive Film Company of Australia, Australia, William Schmidt and C. Lippman, representatives; Scandinavian Fim Company, Scandinavia and Russia; David P. Russell, Great Britain, and Royal Cinema Corporation, Switzerland.

There will be no directors of the organization, it is announced. Simplicity and efficiency will be the keynote. Each man in his respective territory will act as a selling agent. He alone will judge what he will use and purchase. He will not be forced to take anything that he does not believe will prove a box-office winner in his territory.

With the addition of the foreign representatives it will be the purpose of the organization to purchase as much of the United States and Europe at one time as is possible, paying cash for same. Mr. Lee, general manager of the organization, is seeking permanent quarters where it is hoped American and foreign buyers can be gathered under one roof. Temporary quarters are at suite 1103, Longacre building, New York.

BACKER ON TRIP TO WEST.

Franklyn E. Backer, president of the Mammoth Film Corporation, left for the West on Wednesday, August 29, to oversee his numerous activities on the Coast. His first point will be Denver. From there Mr. Backer will visit all the important cities in his territory, finally meeting in San Francisco a number of capitalists who are discussing with him the early formation of a novel producing company, based upon lines which will be especially attractive to the exhibitor. A new and beautiful star is looming on the horizon in connection with this company.

One year ago Mr. Backer started in the state rights field with one picture, "The Fall of a Nation." Today he controls the output of ten big features in New Jersey and New York, and the Western rights in a big film. Mr. Backer attributes his success to the motto of his exchange, which is: "A square deal and a carefully selected picture."

BUYS "LUST OF AGES" FOR NORTHERN JERSEY.

Franklyn E. Backer, president of the Mammoth Film Corporation, has purchased the Northern New Jersey rights to the Ogden Pictures Corporation's "The Lust of the Ages." The deal was consummated by Mr. Backer and Jesse Goldberg, of the Ogden Corporation, between the time it took a Pennsylvania train to reach Harrison from New York. Mr. Backer was en route to Denver when overtaken by Mr. Goldberg.

"The Warrior" for State Rights

General Enterprises, Inc., Purchase Italian Film Featuring Maciste from Harry Raver.

NEGOTIATIONS have been closed by Herbert Lubin and Arthur H. Sawyer between General Enterprises, Inc., 1600 Broadway, New York, and Harry Raver, whereby the General Enterprises, Inc., becomes the owner of the American and Canadian rights for "The Warrior."

This Italian picture features Maciste, the giant who reached prominence through his wonderful feats of strength and daring in "Cabiria," and whom the New York Times calls "The Fairbanks of Italy." "The Warrior" shows Maciste at his best in a great story, a combination of farce-comedy and drama of which the New York American says, "a succession of laughs, weeps and cheers."

General Enterprises, Inc., plans to distribute the picture throughout the United States and Canada on the territorial or state rights plan. Mr. Raver had received numerous offers for different territories, but his plan has always been to sell the entire rights for the United States and Canada to one purchaser.

"The Warrior" ran four weeks at the Criterion theater, New York, and proved a tremendous box office attraction.

Attractive advertising matter is being made up by the General Enterprises Inc. and plans are under foot to run the picture at another Broadway theater for an indefinite run.

"THE LUST OF THE AGES" FOREIGN RIGHTS SOLD.

Although the Ogden Pictures Corporation's initial release, "The Lust of the Ages," in which Lillian Walker is starred, has been exploited, or offered for sale, through advertising in the trade journals for but three weeks, and although but two weeks have elapsed since the trade showing of that production, sixty-two per cent. of the entire would have been sold on this as well as the succeeding seven Lillian Walker super-attractions. All of the foreign markets with the exception of three of the belligerent Central Powers has been disposed of.

Jesse J. Goldburg, exploitation and production manager, stated: "We do not intend either advertising or giving publicity to the individual territory sold until the entire world has been disposed of; then we shall pound away through the medium of every worthy trade journal to the end that the exhibitors may know with whom to deal. In any event, although sixty-two per cent. of the world has been sold, our contracts provide the release by the exchange cannot take place before September 25.

WOLFBERG ENGAGES ADVERTISING MAN.

In line with the recent avowal from the Harris P. Wolfberg offices that co-operation with the exhibitor is being developed to the highest degree, comes news of the engagemnt of J. L. Ellman to take complete charge of this department. Mr. Ellman is an advertising man with many original ideas, and for the past year has been with the Reuble-Brown Advertising Agency of St. Louis. During this period he played a prominent part in "putting over" some of the biggest advertising successes of the year. Mr. Ellman will be located at the Pittsburgh office, but his work will take him over the entire territory—Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Missouri and Kansas.

CLAIRE WHITNEY TO STAR IN SPECIALS.

Several big producers of state right specials have approached Claire Whitney to star in big specials, it is reported. Miss Whitney has starred under the Fox banner for the last three years, where she established herself as a big favorite.

Among her big successes were "Life's Shop Window" and "The Ruling Passion," also supporting William Farnum in "The Plunderer" and "The Nigger." Her versatility has enabled her to play the winsome and sweet ingenue in "Heart and Soul" with Theda Bara to the fair-haired "vamp" in Virginia Pearson's next picture, "When Lying Tongues Speak."

HOFFMAN BUYS "ONE HOUR."

M. H. Hoffman has purchased from Harry Rapf the American rights to "One Hour," a six-reel love romance distinctly out of the ordinary. Some persons will be inclined to term it "sensational," for the reason that the events crowded into a single hour in the lives of the hero and heroine of the story are unique and extraordinary.

Star Series Profits to Red Cross

Net Earnings of "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement" to Be Given for War Relief, Says Quirk.

JAMES R. QUIRK, publisher of Photoplay Magazine, who is about to issue twelve single-reel motion pictures on a state rights basis, under the title "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement," announces that all the profits from the sale of these de luxe motion picture subjects are to be turned over to the American Red Cross. All of the net profit received from the sale of territorial franchises on Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement will be donated to the fund for aiding war-stricken Europe—helping Uncle Sam's soldiers and sailors to be more comfortable.

"In these strenuous times, when the whole civilized world is struggling in defense of humanity, when every man, woman and child is being called upon to aid the cause in which we have taken up arms, I feel that the least Photoplay Magazine can do is to contribute its bit toward alleviating the sufferings of those who are stricken," said Mr. Quirk. "The idea of making and distributing pictures of the stars as they are—unique and unusual views of the players 'off-the-screen,' under the title 'Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement,' was not conceived with a thought of profit. We aimed solely to increase and augment our service to the picture fans of the country—to give them in motion pictures glimpses of the things they have read about the players doing in the pages of Photoplay Magazine.

"I want to thank the manufacturers who have co-operated to make this idea a success. Without their whole-hearted belief in the proposition it would have been impossible. I am sure every one of them will be with us strong on this idea of increasing the public interest in the stars, and at the same time helping the most worthy cause in the world. I am going to make sure these pictures reach the highest degree of excellence. They are going to reflect Photoplay Magazine throughout the country in a wonderful way, and I want that reflection worthy of the high ideals of the magazine itself. If I were not assured that the pictures reached this high ideal they would never be released.

"We have the pictures ready, and though many of them have been difficult to secure, we are not going to exploit them for profit. It is my plan to turn over every cent received from the sale of territorial rights on these twelve de luxe single-reel subjects to the American Red Cross—after deducting, of course, the sum necessary to cover the cost of the undertaking. This does not apply to any one release of Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement, but to the entire series of twelve subjects, which are to be released within a period of a year.

"I am more than glad to assure every buyer of territorial rights on 'Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement' that his money will not only secure for him what I believe to be the greatest box-office attraction ever offered him, but also will enable him to participate pro rata on what I hope may be a generous donation for the relief of the sufferers of all nations."

HOFFMAN TOURING FOURSQUARE CIRCLE.

Swinging around the Foursquare circle is the occupation which M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., is now following. Mr. Hoffman left New York on Monday, August 27, and the following day arrived in Chicago. From that city he sent the following wire to P. V. R. Key, his manager of sales and advertising:

"Chicago Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange will be established next week. Exhibitors here united in endorsing our policy of reasonable profits on strong features, and want our combined product. After visiting our exchanges in St. Louis, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia will return to New York. Toronto and Montreal Foursquare Exchanges will be next in order of establishment."

According to Mr. Key, Mr. Hoffman will personally proceed at once to finish starting the Hoffman-Foursquare service stations, and before the end of September not less than three other cities will be added to New York, Boston and those mentioned in the paragraph preceding.

"Mr. Hoffman's plans for exhibitors," said Mr. Key, "are certainly more than liberal. He feels that the quickest and surest way to build up a permanent patronage is to give big values for a sum considerably under what would ordinarily be regarded as reasonable.

"The Hoffman-Foursquare idea is to approach seriously the price question—among others to be corrected. And when we say we purpose putting our prices for each feature to the exhibitor on a basis allowing us only a small margin of profit, Mr. Hoffman intends to abide by that decision."

ATLANTA EXCHANGE MOVES.

The E. & H. Film Distributing Company of Atlanta, Georgia, has moved from 65 to 73 Walton. The firm has purchased all the fixtures of the Artcraft office, which was formerly at this address, and at the same time took over all the films controlled by the Strand Film Company, consisting of about twenty state rights features, including "The Ne'er-do-Well."

The E. & H. Film Company consists of two men—Chas. W. Harden and P. A. Engler. Mr. Harden has for several years been associated with several of the big film companies. Mr. Engler, the other member of the firm, is also an old film man.

"Today" and "Mad Lover" for State Rights

Pathe Offers Buyers Pictures Starring Florence Reed and Robert Warwick, Respectively.

PATHE announces that "Today," starring Florence Reed, and "The Mad Lover," starring Robert Warwick, are for state rights sale.

It is with full appreciation that the important state rights buyer demands productions that are "special" in every way—stories, stars, cast and direction—that Pathe offers these two photoplays, which are looked upon as state rights propositions extraordinary.

"It is no exaggeration to say," stated a Pathe official, "that judged from every angle and by every standard that makes a picture great, 'Today' is not merely one of the great pictures of the year, but one of the greatest that has ever been made, from a standpoint of box-office value."

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand theater, New York, called it one of the three or four best pictures he has ever seen. The picture was greeted by newspaper and magazine critics as a bigger hit than the play by George Broadhurst and A. S. Schomer, which played to tremendous business on Broadway for over a year.

Florence Reed, who has proven herself to be a splendid moving picture actress, says it is the best film she has ever appeared in. Her interpretation of the role of Lilly is a wonderful piece of screen acting. The picture was produced by Harry Rapf under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Robert Warwick is one of the most popular dramatic stars on the screen. The title, "The Mad Lover," is also a box office asset. Elaine Hammerstein, who made a hit with Mr. Warwick in "The Argyle Case," is the leading woman. Leonce Perret, the famous French producer, not only directed the picture but also wrote the story.

A. KAY DISTRIBUTING MASON COMEDIES.

The A. Kay Company has acquired from the Filmcraft Corporation the distributing rights to the Walt Mason Comedies, and has already started plans for the disposition of these pictures in state rights territory. Since the announcement that the A. Kay Company were to act as agents for the Filmcraft Corporation, numerous inquiries have come into the offices of the A. Kay Company from state rights buyers.

S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto theater, after seeing several of the Walt Mason stories, unhesitatingly placed his stamp of approval on them and gave it as his opinion that exchange owners, exhibitors and the public would be quick to appreciate the amusement and actual money value of such a line of clean, natural, humorous stories from a genuine poet-author who, during the past twelve years, has endeared himself to the hearts of millions of newspaper and magazine readers.

At present "The Dipper", "True Love and Fake Money", "Hash" and "Bunked and Paid For" are ready for release, and Filmcraft announces that these releases will be followed up regularly with others taken from the best of Walt Mason's stories.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS SHOWS DEPARTING GUARDSMEN.

By a fine bit of enterprise on the part of the Hearst-Pathe News many persons in New York, Newark, N. J., Albany, Newburg and Poughkeepsie who were unable to see the magnificent send-off which New York City gave the departing National Guard, saw the parade just the same, but on the screen. Pictures taken by a large squad of Hearst-Pathe News cameramen were speedily developed, edited, titled and printed and then put out as a "special" in the cities mentioned the night of the same day the parade was held—Thursday, August 30. This special was 400 feet long and was greeted with cheers by every audience to which it was shown.

Sixty-six of the most prominent theaters in New York City showed this special, among them the Strand. Much favorable comment was heard among exhibitors as to the interesting character of the film and the great speed with which it was issued.

"REDEMPTION" BOOKING BIG IN NEW YORK.

Announcement has been made by Nathan Hirsh, president of the Civilization-Pioneer Film Corporation, controlling the rights for Greater New York and New York State to Julius Steger's production, "Redemption," that a heretofore unattained record has been broken in booking the feature, inasmuch as twenty copies have been booked for September 10, the date of release. The picture has been booked by the entire Loew and Keith circuits, the Eighty-first Street theater, Mt. Morris theater, and other leading theaters in the terriory.

The Civilization-Pioneer Film Corporation also controls the exclusive rights to "Hate" and the Williamson Brothers' production, "The Submarine Eye."

"A MAN OF HIS WORD" (Falcon Feature).

George Loane Tucker is the producer of the fifth of General Film's series of Falcon Features, "A Man of His Word." It is a picturization of the famous play "Jelf's," by Horace Annesley Vachell. In this picture Henry Ainley, who does such conspicuous work as a principal in "The Manxman," is the featured lead. Opposite him plays Mary Dibley, one of the most versatile of the English actresses of the film.

Italian War Pictures Breaking Records

Chicago and Boston Follow New York in Acclaim of Films Controlled by Fort Pitt Theater Corporation.

CHICAGO has rallied to the first and only authentic Italian war pictures, "The Italian Battlefront," with audiences that have packed the big Auditorium from pit to dome at every performance. Beginning with the initial performance, when the entire house of four thousand seats was sold out two hours before the opening, with prices ranging from 50 cents to $2.00, the picture has played to a business exceeding that of any other production ever presented in Chicago, save one, according to announcement from the offices of the Fort Pitt Theater Corporation.

Notwithstanding the pace set by the opening performance, which was attended by Lieutenant-General Guglielmotti, one of the highest ranking officers of the Italian army, who, with his entire staff, went from Washington to Chicago for the premier, and Major-General Thomas H. Barry, Commander-in-Chief of the Central Department, who has since left for active service abroad, together with the Italian, French, British, Belgian, Russian and Japanese consuls, the picture has consistently maintained the high level of business with which it started.

This has no doubt been due to the fact that in common with the New York, Boston and Pittsburgh reviewers, the Chicago critics have heralded the production in a manner almost unprecedented. In Boston the films broke a long-standing precedent. For the first time in the history of the city, a Sunday night performance of a moving picture was held in a legitimate theater. A special dispensation, suspending Boston's ordinance having to do with exhibitions in a legitimate theater on Sundays, was obtained through the influence of Mayor Curley.

The chief executive of the city, together with Governor McCall, General Clarence Edwards, commanding the New England Department, and his entire staff, as well as many other notables, attended the opening performance of this production.

They were so impressed with the inspiring and patriotic character of the picture that when a request was made by the management to exhibit the production on Sunday evening, it was readily complied with.

"REDEMPTION" BREAKS RECORDS IN CANADA.

"Redemption," with Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, is reported to have broken all records for attendance at Loew's Yonge Street theater, Toronto. This is one of the largest and finest theaters in Canada, with both a theater and roof garden. It was packed continuously for a solid week with "Redemption," and the picture will probably be brought back for a return engagement later.

"Redemption" has also been engaged for an entire summer season's run at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, the vast amusement palace at New York's summer resort. It is playing to capacity at Gordon's theater, Rochester, where it was held over for an additional week because of big business.

Territory for "Redemption" has been selling very fast lately. The De Luxe Feature Film Company has bought the rights for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. The Exhibitors' Film Exchange has bought Maryland, Delaware and Virginia. The best proof that the picture is a remarkable business proposition is furnished by Jones, Linick & Schaffer, of Chicago, who bought the rights for the State of Illinois, and found that the bookings were so heavy that they have purchased the film for Indiana.

PRE-RELEASES PROPEL "MOTHER O' MINE."

"Mother O' Mine," the third "Bluebird Extraordinary," was released throughout the country Labor Day on staterights lines, although during the previous week it was shown on pre-release in several localities. The feature was shown two days at Marcus Loew's New York theater, during the benefit week for The Sun's tobacco fund for U. S. Soldiers in France.

Rupert Julian, who directed the production, is co-star with Ruth Clifford, while Ruby La Fayette, a veteran actress, made her bow before the moving picture camera, at the age of seventy-three, in the mother role. "Mother O' Mine" is the third "Bluebird Extraordinary" distributed indepent of the program, "The Eagle's Wings," an industrial preparedness feature that is being widely used as a patriotic incentive to enlistment, and "Hell Morgan's Girl," a story of the San Francisco fire, being the others. Herbert Rawlinson is star of "The Eagle's Wings" and Dorothy Phillips stars in "Hell Morgan's Girl."

Peter Pan Increases Output

R. M. Vandivert Tells of Novelties Additional to Motoy Comedies—Will Release 2,000 Feet a Week.

R. M. VANDIVERT, vice president and general manager of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, has recently returned from an extensive trip covering all the distribution centres of the United States. The purpose of this trip was to establish the exact status of the short subject upon the present day program. Mr. Vandivert has made a keen analytical study of the market conditions, and has submitted in his report to H. C. Allen, president of the organization, that there is a brilliant future in store for the short subject throughout the country.

"As regards our future plans," said Mr. Vandivert, "we have decided to launch into the short subject on a very elaborate scale. The first step toward this end was the moving of the studio from Chicago to New York. We have contracted for the services of one of the most virile and capable men in the novelty field—C. P. Jaeger, who is our director-in-chief. George W. Hanlon, a son of one of the famous Hanlon Brothers, has been engaged to assist him in the production.

"We have given very considerable thought to the type and character of short subjects that we could add to our program of Motoy Comedies in order to make the Peter Pan short features the leading factor in the independent field. To this end we have selected the Black Magic Comedies, which are a series of novelties in which everything is black and white, the actors either in white against a black background, or in black against white.

"The Mirror Comedies, the Shadographs, and the 'Honeymooners' are our other releases, the last being a series of foreign pictures, which Mr. and Mrs. Richard Schayer are taking on their wedding trip around the world.

"Our sales plan already is complete. Commencing September 15, the Motoy Comedies and the Black Magic will be released as a single reel, alternating each week with Shadograph and Mirror Comedies as a single reel. In addition to this the 'Honeymooners' will be released in a 1,000-foot reel each week, thus enabling us to give the exchange a weekly output of 2,000 feet of high-class novelty pictures.

DESERET BUYS "DEEMSTER" FOR ELEVEN STATES.

J. L. Adams, acting for the Deseret Film Corporation, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, have signed contracts whereby "The Deemster" becomes the property of the Deseret Film Corporation in eleven Western states—Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, California, Arizona and Nevada.

This leaves only one group of states on "The Deemster" available. It has not been decided what policy will be pursued by the Arrow offices for the immediate future, as nothing has been produced or obtained to follow the Hall Caine feature.

Commenting on the sale, Dr. Shallenberger expressed himself as highly pleased with the result, and stated that he was delighted with the knowledge that his picture would be in such efficient hands for exploitation throughout the Western half of the United States.

LION COMEDIES BOUGHT FOR WEST.

The Peerless Film Service, of Los Angeles, has closed a deal with the A. Kay Company, in which it becomes the exclusive distributors of Lion Comedies for California, Nevada and Arizona.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

LITTLE ZOE RAE IN "THE LITTLE PIRATE."

Little Zoe Rae will be the star of the Butterfly feature to be released September 10. "The Little Pirate" is the title of the picture in which Zoe will have the lead, supported by Gretchen Lederer, Frank Brownlee, Charles West, Lillian Peacock and Burwell Hemerick.

Directed by Elsie Jane Wilson from the story by Norris Shannon and Elliott J. Clawson, "The Little Pirate" brims with human interest, and offers the small leading lady the best part she has depicted up to date on the Butterfly program.

It tells the story of a married couple who become estranged when the wife refuses to allow her husband to raise some necessary cash on the bonds that are held in trust for their small daughter, Margery. Virginia Baird not only fails to comprehend the vital urgency of the request, but when she overhears a conversation in which her husband's lawyer advises him to utilize the bonds without consulting her, she decides to place them in the hands of Charles West, a friend of long standing. This leads to an open rupture, and Virginia leaves the house. Margery tries to console her father, and failing in this, she sets out that evening on her pony to bring her mother home again. But she is held up on the road by Captain Kidd, Jr., who adopts her forthwith as his trusty first mate, and the two children take up their residence in a grass hut on a nearby island, where they live a life of gay piracy until they finally take part in a denouement that brings happiness to all the principals in the story—except the unfortunate villain responsible for the act of grand larceny, which furnishes most of the suspense to the plot.

"MEN OF THE DESERT" (Essanay).

The public mind generally associates the feuds of old with the mountaineers of Kentucky and Tennessee, yet history will show that perhaps the most terrific of these internecine quarrels were fought out on the great deserts of the West. For a quarter of a century, up until as late as 1895, cattlemen and sheepmen fed their factions against each other in bloody battles for the possession of the best grazing lands. Deeds of heroism beyond the ken of the Easterner were but a part of the ordinary day's work in the thrilling lives of these people.

"Men of the Desert," the fourth of Essanay's series of Western photodramas, is a picturization of such a feud. It will be released through the K-E-S-E service September 24. It is being given trade showing now at all branch offices of the K-E-S-E.

Jack Gardner, the former musical comedy star, takes the lead as the nomadic cowboy who attempts to restore law and order to the feud-stricken desert. Ruth King, as the daughter of one of the feud leaders, is his leading woman. Carl Stockdale heads the remainder of the supporting cast, which is made up principally of cowboys and ranchmen noted for their daring horsemanship.

"Men of the Desert" will have a screen time of sixty-five minutes, approximately.

VIRGINIA PEARSON'S TENTH PICTURE.

Virginia Pearson appears in her tenth production for Fox Films in "When False Tongues Speak", a big surprise drama, which William Fox will release on September 9. The unusual scenes scattered through the picture make it one of the year's most distinctive features.

The supporting company includes among the principals Carl Harbaugh, who also directed Miss Pearson in the film; Hardee Kirkland, Carl Eckstrom and William Meehan. Meehan had a prominent role in "Turn to the Right", the big comedy success, which has been running at a Broadway theater for a solid year.

"THE PHANTOM SHOT GUN" (Falcon).

What some enthusiasts have described as "the fastest-stepping detective story ever screened," is presented in General Film's current Falcon Feature release, "The Phantom Shot Gun".

This is the fourth of the four-reel dramas scheduled under the Falcon brand and is one of the most admirable subjects for holding an audience spellbound that has so far been found in a detective story. It is a detective story unlike so many others which have a great wealth of mystery without the varied action of a typical drama. In "The Phantom Shot Gun" developments are continuous. Situations and new mysteries come one right after the other until suddenly the guilty person is discovered in a most cleverly built up denouement.

The story is by Stanley Clisby Arthur, noted magazine writer. The hero is Courtland, broker, a partner of Hamilton Forbes, who appears as the villainous element as far as the love interest is concerned. Both men are in love with Elizabeth Kennedy, their secretary. Forbes gets Courtland out of the way by nearly framing up a conviction for forgery. At the last moment a bribed witness becomes stampeded and flees, and Courtland sets out to find him to clear his name. Forbes makes Elizabeth believe Courtland is dead and she consents to marry him. They are on their honeymoon trip abroad an ocean vessel when Courtland, with Larkins, a newspaper reporter, comes aboard by chance, and the whole situation becomes dynamic. On the voyage Forbes and a half dozen others are shot down by an invisible gun. Forbes, Elizabeth and others are in turn suspected. On the fourth day out Larkins, who has been a silent investigator all along, turns up the murderer with a brilliant stroke of detective work.

Kathleen Kirkham is featured as Elizabeth and R. Henry Grey as Courtland. Frank Brownlee, Wm. Marshall, Gloria Payton, J. E. Nicholson, Barney Furey and Bruce Smith are other members of a most excellent cast. The play was directed by Harry Harvey, supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

The next Falcon Feature will be "His Unpolished Self" from the great play "Jelf's" by Horace Annesley Vachell. This is a George Loane Tucker production, and features Henry Ainley and Mary Dibley.

Art Dramas Fall Program

Crane Wilbur, Catherine Calvert, Jean Sothern and Marian Swayne to be Seen in Strong Features.

ART DRAMAS offers exhibitors a fall program of exceptional strength, with a wide range of stars and subjects. The schedule is typical of Art Dramas in that it possesses marked variety. Crane Wilbur, Jean Sothern, Catherine Calvert and Marian Swayne, Art Dramas stars of proven ability and certain drawing power, are represented in a list of features, whose stories are original and technically perfect.

Crane Wilbur will be seen in a Horsley feature, "Blood of His Fathers"; Jean Sothern in a Van Dyke production, "Peg O' the Sea"; Catherine Calvert in "Behind the Mask", produced by the U. S. Amusement Corporation, and Marian Swayne in "The Little Samaritan", an Erbograph picture.

"Blood of His Fathers" tells an unusual story, treating of the subject of heredity. In construction, too, it is out of the beaten track of motion pictures, necessitating the portrayal of three distinct characters by Mr. Wilbur. In the prologue, laid in Civil War days, the Horsley star portrays the role of a questionable captain of predatory guerillas. In its later development the story is entirely modern and of compelling interest. J. Francis Dunbar is credited with the authorship of "Blood of His Fathers", while the direction was in the capable hands of Harrish Ingraham.

"The Little Samaritan" is an elaborate production in which Marian Swayne is fitted with a role, similar to that which she so successfully interpreted in her former Art Dramas vehicle, "Little Miss Fortune", and "The Road Between". Miss Swayne's character is that of a little orphan in a New England village. Babbling tongues fire the minds of the small-minded villagers against her and heap down upon her unhappiness and misery. But she battles against the odds and finally is blessed with a bountiful reward. The story is replete with interesting details and strong situations and affords the appealing little star a wide scope in which to display the charm and ability which placed her at the top almost overnight.

Joseph Levering directed, while the story was especially written for Miss Swayne by the Rev. J. Clarence Harris, a practicing minister, also wrote "Little Miss Fortune."

"Behind the Mask", starring Catherine Calvert, is said to be the best production yet made by the U. S. Amusement Corporation. This picture, written by Charles T. Dazey, author of many film classics, is, like most of Mr. Dazey's screen stories, a marvel of workmanship. It is, indeed, such a perfect example of the best in the photodramatic art that Mme. Alice Blache, who directed, cited it to the Columbia University journalistic students in connection with her lecture on scenarios recently as a desirable form of study. "Behind the Mask" was adapted to the screen by Frederick Rath.

Next in order is "Peg O' the Sea" by Winifred Dunn. Jean Sothern, star of this picture, is seen as the daughter of an old fisherman, living in a New England fishing village. In her slackers and rain hat she makes an appealing picture. Comedy is mingled with pathos and the splendid coast scenes give the picture a background of rare beauty. Miss Sothern, her director, Eugene Nowland, George Wiley, president of Van Dyke, and the others of the company spent several weeks in the Atlantic Highlands "shooting" these scenes.

SELIG RELEASES BY GENERAL FILM.

William N. Selig announces the following releases in General Film service:

"The Victor of the Plot", a two-reel drama of British Army in India, featuring Miss Bessie Eyton, supported by an all star cast.

"The Voice That Led Him", a one-reel drama, will be released Saturday, September 15. This is a gripping drama of the African jungle, with Kathlyn Williams in one of her most sensational roles. A number of wild beasts are engaged in the scenic action.

On Monday, September 17, "The Law, North of 65", is the two-reel Selig release. In this, a strong drama of the Canadian Northwest, winsome Bessie Eyton is seen in an entirely new characterization. Colin Campbell is the director.

"Vengeance Versus Mercy" is the title of a single reel drama announced for release Saturday, September 22. It is a gripping drama of vengeance thwarted by mercy, showing the infinite power of even a mere memory of a woman once loved, in the heart of a man.

The Selig Company promises excellent photography and strong plots. The principals announced speak for themselves.

TRIANGLE RESTORES MUSIC CUES.

The music cue sheet accompany each picture, which was lately eliminated from the Triangle service in order to ascertain whether or not it was of value to the exhibitor, has been restored in response to the demand for it. The number of requests indicate positively the value of this feature. It has become an essential part of the service provided exhibitors in connection with the showing of the picture. The Triangle policy of providing service men and every conceivable aid to theaters booking Triangle pictures demands a thorough investigation of the value of all material, insuring that effort is not being misdirected. The demand for the music cue is gratifying to those responsible for this service policy, for it proves that service is scarcely second in importance to the quality of productions.

West Pointers Graduate Early

1918 Class Which Will Help Train Half Million Soldiers Shown in Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, Sept. 5.

WEST POINT cadets who, under normal conditions, would have continued as students until June, 1918, were graduated on August 30, ten months ahead of time. Interesting views of these 154 highly trained young officers, who will aid in the instruction of the first 500,000 selective draft army, are shown in Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 140, released Sept. 5.

The remainder of this reel is filled with current news events of general interest. Monster celebrations in New York City and elsewhere in honor of the members of the National Guard who are leaving for Southern encampments prior to embarking for France; military activities throughout the United States; and scenes on the actual battle ground, in France, are shown. The Mutual Weekly is fortunate in being able to obtain weekly shipments of news negative direct from the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, whose large force of military cameramen co-operate with the French Government in the taking of these authentic war pictures.

Among other subjects of current interest, Governor Stephens, of California, is shown amid the giant redwoods of that state inaugurating the opening of the California State Highway. In Denver, women are acting as conductors and motormen on the city tramway. In New York City Bill Snyder, famous animal trainer of the Central Park Zoo, is teaching women to take the place of the park attendants.

JEWEL PRESENTS "MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY."

"The Man Without a Country", Edward Everett Hale's appeal to patriotism, is the basis of a multiple reel photoplay produced by the Thanhouser Film Corporation which Jewel Productions, Inc., will present at the Broadway theater, beginning September 9, featuring Florence LaBadie and H. E. Herbert, supported by an excellent cast.

The version is the work of Lloyd Lonergan, after the story written by Mr. Hale in the summer of 1863.

Ernest C. Warde, the producer of many well-known photoplays, including "The Vicar of Wakefield", is responsible for the staging of the Hale story.

Mr. Herbert made his first appearance on Broadway five years ago, as Billie Burke's leading man in Pinero's "Mind-the-Paint-Girls"; he had a leading role with Blanche Bates in "The Witness for the Defense", with Grace George in "Half an Hour" and with Mrs. Patrick Campbell in Shaw's "Pygmalion" and "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray".

VICTOR MOORE IN "SEEING THINGS."

Victor Moore releases on Sept. 3 a distinctly different comedy called "Seeing Things", writen by Edward McWade. Vic has been in a sanitarium for some time for the "cure", he having had "too many mornings after the night before." He is almost well and his doctor is about to discharge him, hoping that the change will also cure him of an optical delusion that he has. It seems Vic has a delusion that a certain "Gloomy Gus" looking creature is always following him wherever he goes and this serves to get him into no end of trouble. The doctor wires this fact to Vic's wife and prepares to start Vic on his way. Vic after bidding good-bye to the other inmates goes, only to be so he thinks followed by his friend "Gloomy Gus." He feels that he is with him all the way home, and he certainly has his troubles with him.

Vic arrives home much to the delight of his wife but much to the disgust of his mother-in-law. It is not very long after his arrival home that the "optical delusion" again starts working, and poor Vic gets himself into lots of difficulties, and at the finish gives it up as a bad job.

This comedy is unlike anything that Moore has made, and is distinctly novel. It should more than please the "Moore Fans", and give them lots of laughs.

Border Drama Heads U List

Helen Gibson, Mary Fuller, Lyons & Moran, Max Asher, Harry Carey and Alice Lake Give Class to Releases for Week of September 10.

FOLLOWING the release, on Monday, September 10, of the Butterfly feature, "The Little Pirate", starring Little Zoe Rae, the week's schedule of Universal pictures opens on Tuesday, the 11th, with a Gold Seal drama, entitled "The Perilous Leap". The scenario was prepared by George Hively from a story by T. Shelley Sutton, and J. D. Davis directed the production. Helen Gibson and Val Paul have a lot of thrilling work to do in this story of opium and Chinese smugglers, and they are ably supported by a fine cast. The scene is laid near the Mexican border.

On the same date Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts appear in a rollicking Nestor comedy, "The Boulevard Speed Hounds". As Clinton Syx and Steele A. Ryde, they are arrested for speeding, but stall the officer with the pretext that Syx is a doctor, hastening to Ryde's wife. The cop is suspicious and demands to see the wife. So the bluff has to be carried out, the utmost being made of the comedy opportunities. The real wife appears on the scene at a most embarrassing moment and adds to the amusing complications.

On Wednesday, September 12, Gladys Warden, Walter Stephens and Harry Griffith are presented in a two-reel L-Ko comedy, "From Cactus to Kale", in which the action rapidly shifts from a small town restaurant to a palatial residence in the metropolis and finally out into the very middle of the ocean. The plot involves the kidnapping of the weak-kneed heir to a fortune, and employing him as a stalking horse in the operation of obtaining a large amount of money. The climax is reached when the victim of the conspirators gathers his cohorts and starts in pursuit, several buildings being demolished in the chase. Universal Animated Weekly No. 89 is scheduled for release on the same date.

Mary Fuller is the star of the feature for Thursday, September 13. "To the Highest Bidder" will be the title of her vehicle, a swiftly moving drama of a country girl who is determined to get away from the deadly monotony of her surroundings to the city, where she will be able to make a career for herself. She carries out this determination, but becomes entangled in a Bohemian set, and after spending all of her funds one day announces at a party that at the end of the month she will sell herself to the highest bidder. The outcome of this unusual situation is both surprising and satisfying to the most jaded picture fan. Emmett Campbell Hall and Catherine Carr wrote the play, which has been ably directed by Lucius Henderson.

"Short Skirts and Deep Water" is the rather startling title of the Joker comedy released on the same day, featuring Gale Henry, William Franey and Milburn Moranti. It deals with the efforts of the Anti-Sin Society to enforce the rules regarding the wearing of decollette bathing apparel on the beaches. Allan Curtis and Tom Gilson prepared the script, which has been produced with many hilarious effects by Curtis.

Max Asher and Gladys Tennison are the featured players in "The Clutches of Milk", a Victor comedy released Friday, September 14. Written by Craig Hutchinson and C. B. Hoadley and put on by the former, the piece details the amusing mix-up that occurs when a husband of one of Max's numerous flames writes him a letter declaring that he intends to put him out of the way, via the poison route. The thirty-sixth issue of the Universal Screen Magazine will be released at the same time as the Asher comedy.

Saturday, September 15, will be signalized by the release of "The Texas Sphinx", a Bison drama of the Southwest, featuring Harry Carey and Alice Lake. The story was written by T. S. Sutton and George Hively and produced by F. A. Kelsey. It provides Carey with the sort of vigorous character, reflecting the color and primitive strength of the open range, that has already built up an enviable following for him. Alice Lake is both a beautiful and appealing foil for Carey's sunburnt type of hero.

"Nearly a Queen" is the Joker comedy in which Gale Henry and Milton Sims appear on the same day. Allen Curtis and Tom Gibson are also responsible for the authorship and direction of this tale of the strange adventures of a waif who is beguiled into believing herself the daughter of ancient kings. The eighteenth issue of Universal Current Events completes the list of releases for the week, with its usual quota of timely scenes, strikingly photographed.

SELIG'S WORLD LIBRARY NO. 17.

The Selig-World Library No. 17, released in General Film service on Wednesday, September 5, is of unusual excellence, according to the Selig Polyscope Company. The famous beach resorts on our Atlantic Coast are pictured, including the homes of millionaires at Newport.

The mussel pearl industry is another interesting picture. Fishermen drag mussels from the bed of White river, Arkansas, and the value of the pearls discovered amounts to thousands of dollars yearly. Out of the shells pearl buttons are made, and this is the most profitable part of the industry.

In Africa the wife must be her husband's barber. The primitive method of pulling out the hairs is still in practice.

Java possesses a soil of astonishing fertility and a vegetation unsurpassed in its luxuriance. One of the chief articles of export is sugar. Preparing the soil, the plant, the harvest of sugar cane, the manufacture of sugar.

"A MIDNIGHT BELL" (Selig).

"A Midnight Bell" is the title of the latest Charles Hoyt comedy to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company, Monday, September 3, in K-E-S-E. Those who have been permitted to view this two reel comedy pronounce it as being one of the best of the Selig-Hoyt series that have proven so popular.

A comical story of rural life is "A Midnight Bell", involving the rival affections of the Punktown Chief of Police and Ezekiel Slover, chief of the fire department, for the heart and hand of Amy Grey, the village belle. The rivalry is not confined to love making, however, for professional jealousy crops out between the two village functionaries and this leads to many and varied developments.

Scene from "A Midnight Bell" (Selig).

J. A. Richmond, responsible for the popular Selig-Hoyt comedies, is the director in charge and the cast includes William Fables, James Harris and Amy Leah Dennis.

The fire at Punktown's city hall is said to be among the funniest of motion picture episodes and carried out with all the enthusiasm and the blunders so common in "tank towns". The K-E-S-E reports that the Selig-Hoyt comedies are increasing in popularity and that reboomings are common with many of the K-E-S-E exchanges.

Following "A Midnight Bell" the Selig Company announces the following Hoyt comedy in two reels for release Monday, September 17, "A Contented Woman". For release in K-E-S-E service Monday, October 1, "A Bear Fact". This comedy was not written by Charles Hoyt but is said to be a clever comedy in every detail.

FOUR COMING FOX FEATURES.

Miriam Cooper, Virginia Pearson, George Walsh and Dustin Farnum, four William Fox stars, are announced as the principal players in the first four feature releases during September. This group of films consists in a picturesque comedy drama of a thrilling romance in Mexico, a mystery photoplay of suspense and action built around present day life in New York City, a refreshing and fast moving story of a love affair which began in a Chicago cabaret and ended with a wedding ring in a Balkan principality, and a powerful visualization of a big man's struggles in the great snows of the Northwest.

These are the productions, with the dates of their release: September 2, R. A. Walsh's drama "Betrayed", with Miriam Cooper; September 9, Virginia Pearson in "When False Tongues Speak"; September 16, George Walsh in "The Yankee Way"; September 23, Dustin Farnum in "North of Fifty-three".

"Betrayed" has a score of deft, unusual touches.

While it is necessary to dwell lightly on the story of "When False Tongues Speak", that the novel twists shall remain undisclosed until the screening the fact that the script was written by George Scarborough is conclusive evidence of its merit.

"The Yankee Way" is described as a "star-spangled comedy". It presents the genial George Walsh as Dick Mason, a young millionaire who happens into cabaret just in time to end one flirtation and start one of his own.

"North of Fifty Three" was taken from the story of that name by Bertrand W. Sinclair. The picture, with the inimitable "Dusty" Farnum as "Roaring Bill" Wagstaff, will undoubtedly have the same wide vogue as that enjoyed by the novel.

AMERICAN MADE WARES IN DEMAND.

The scarcity of foreign made motion picture machines and equipment has created a demand upon the American manufacturers for such wares. The Precision Machine Company recently received orders for twenty-eight Simplex Projectors to be delivered to the Scandinavian countries. A special letter of assurance from the British Embassy was granted for these shipments, so that there would be no delay in the projectors reaching their destination. Other equipment such as screens, generator sets, carbon, etc., were also purchased to be used in the above countries.

General Forecasts "O. Henry"

Releases for September and October Include Five Four-Reel Features and Four Two-Reelers.

WITH three directors working at one time on the new "O. Henry" Broadway Star Features, the production of these dramatic releases is definitely established for two months ahead, announces General Film. Five of the very greatest of O. Henry's intensely human stories will be filmed and distributed during this period in the four-reel feature form. A number of the shorter stories that carry all the inimitable sentiment of the great author's characteristic treatment will also be ready within the same span.

The big O. Henry features will be these, named in the order of distribution: "The Defeat of the City", with J. Frank Glendon and Agnes Eyre, directed by Thomas R. Mills; "Blind Man's Holiday", with Carlton King and Jean Paige, directed by Martin Justice; "The Duplicity of Hargraves", with Charles Kent, J. Frank Glendon and Myrtis Morgan, directed by Thomas R. Mills; "The Ruler of Men" and "A Night in New Arabia".

The new series of two-reel O. Henry stories starts with the "John Tom Little Bear" story, with Al Jennings, Dan Duffy and little Roberto Turnbull, followed by "The Last of the Troubadours", with S. E. Jennings, Dan Duffy and Nolan Leary. These are directed by Dave Smith. Succeeding them will be "The Lonesome Road" and "Law and Order".

"JACK AND BEANSTALK" IN ST. LOUIS.

"Jack and the Beanstalk", William Fox's cinema spectacle, which concluded its run on Broadway on August 26, opened at the Belasco Theater in Washington, D. C., on that date. A week later the picture will go into the Garrick Theater in St. Louis, while still showing in Washington.

"RASPUTIN, THE BLACK MONK" (World).

"Rasputin, the Black Monk", is the title of a newly completed World-Picture Brady-Made about to be published on the World program. This photoplay has been in preparation for several months under the direction of Arthur Ashley, with a most unusual assemblage of star players. These include Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Arthur Ashley, Henry Hull, Julia Dean, Irving Cummings and Hubert Wilke.

Mr. Love appears in the name part; Miss Elvidge personates the wife of Rodin (Mr. Ashley), the early leader of the revolutionists, betrayed by Rasputin; Mr. Hull is seen as Kerensky, the hero of the hour in Russia, to whom the young American actor bears a quite striking likeness; Miss Dean is the Czarina's favorite lady in waiting under such hypnotic fascination for the black monk that she eagerly performs his bidding in all things; Irving Cummins plays a gallant young prince whose influence, thrown to the revolutionists at the crucial moment, enables him to overthrow the Government and accomplish the freedom of their country; and Mr. Wilke portrays the Czar whose rule is ended in the final episodes of the new drama.

It is declared that the present exposition of the conditions and influences which led to the great upheaval is entirely authentic, and that many details are brought to light for the first time, even to certain state secrets which have been guarded heretofore with the greatest care.

"Rasputin, the Black Monk", is described as an exceptionally "big" picture in theme and production. Several immense scenes have been built outside the studio from photographs brought to America by returning representatives of World-Pictures Brady-Made who had been in Petrograd for a long time prior to the culmination of the movement for freedom. In addition to the star cast large numbers of "extras", horses, etc., are employed in the several imposing spectacular episodes.

"CAMILLE" (Fox).

Theda Bara in a sumptuous picturization of "Camille" is the latest announcement of William Fox to the motion picture public. Once more the makers of Fox pictures have delved into the masterpieces of literature. "Camille", the story of Alexandre Dumas fils, has behind it a long history of successful engagements in every civilized country of the world. It has been acted on every great stage of Europe and both Americas, and, in book form, it has brought tears to the eyes of men and women all 'round the globe.

Theda Bara, as the unhappy Parisian girl who sacrifices herself on the altar of convention, has surpassed all her previous work in this production.

"Camille" has just been completed, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. Parisian life has been followed in every detail, so that the atmosphere of the story fits admirably with the acting in it.

"Camille" is the most famous French novel of the nineteenth century. The original story, known as "The Lady of the Camellias", was published in 1848. A year later its author recognized the dramatic possibilities of the piece and made a new version, which was acted on the Parisian stage in February, 1852. Its success was enormous.

The Fox version of this tremendously successful story play will be released to exhibitors on September 30.

"SANDS OF SACRIFICE" (American).

Human sympathy and devotion blend pleasantly in William Russell's next publication for the American, the issue of September 24, entitled "Sands of Sacrifice". Centered in "Big Bill" Darcey (Russell), they are played interchangeably between the two leading supporting characters, Nora Farnes, later Mrs. Darcey (Francelia Billington), and Billy's pal, the invalid "Sammy" Goode (John Gough).

When Nora is placed in compromising straits, "Big Bill" gets her out in marriage, and when "Sammy" is told he is going to die unless he burns out the poison in the hot sands of the desert, Darcey packs him off with him to the wilderness.

Mr. Russell had a hot time making the film. He and Gough, Director Tod Sloman, cameraman, assistants, etc., did the desert scenes in the midst of the July torrid wave which seared and parched California to the limit of endurance. But photographic conditions were excellent and some splendid exposures were made.

The same holds true of the mountain scenes, several in particular being magnificent panoramas of the famous "hairpin" curve of the San Bernardinos, down which Darcey's roadster races. Much of the scenery was obtained in the "big tree" country and has been reproduced in accordance with the American's high standard of workmanship.

Coming in the fall hunting season, the interiors of Darcey's mountain lodge will be specially interesting. These sets were built with great care and expense, and when shown will excite the envy of the sportsmen of the Adirondacks.

"THE AWAKENING OF RUTH" (Edison).

"The Awakening of Ruth", by Julien Hubbard, the five-reel Edison feature, one of the first Perfection Pictures to be released through the Kleine System on September 17, is a story of unusual charm and variety. Shirley Mason, Viola Dana's younger sister, is given an excellent opportunity to snow her subtle and versatile art and she is ably supported by George Forth and Donald Hall.

The suspense of the story is sustained through a plot in which life on an island off the Florida coast and the complex existence of the Great White Way are cunningly interwoven.

The love interest predominates and technically the pictures exhibit the perfection of detail which characterizes all of the Edison productions. This release cannot fail to be popular with all ages and classes.

"The Angel Factory" Heads Pathe Program

First Appearance of Antonio Moreno—"Seven Pearls" Serial Begins—Other Features for Week of September 16.

PATHE'S program for the week of September 16 marks the first appearance of Antonio Moreno as a Pathe star. It also brings Mollie King in the first episode of "The Seven PPearls" serial, Pearl White and a Lonesome Luke two-reel comedy as other features.

Antonio Moreno, one of the most popular male stars on the screen, is seen in "The Angel Factory." Opposite him is Helene Chadwick, who has been rapidly coming to the fore. Other important members of the cast are Suzanne Willa, Margaret Green and Armand Lopez. The story deals with a little East Side girl whose father is a drunkard and whose mother is a sloven. It tells how she comes into contact with the superintendent of a settlement house and finally develops into the kind of woman it was intended that she should be. The picture works up to a big punch at the end with a shooting and circumstantial evidence pointing to the guilt first of the heroine and then of the hero.

Mollie King stars in the first episode of the "Seven Pearls", entitled "The Sultan's Necklace". The story tells how the Sultan's necklace is stolen, how Ilma, a beautiful young American girl, must recover the seven pearls contained in it, or see her guardian die and herself enter the Sultan's harem. Creighton Hale appears opposite Mollie King.

Pearl White stars in the 11th episode of "The Fatal Ring", entitled "The Short Circuit", another thrilling chapter of a serial that is a guarantee of twenty weeks' big business. It is a knockout wherever shown according to all reports. The story tells how Pearl succeeds in recovering the Diamond from Carsake in an unusually interesting fashion, and how he in turn takes it from her. Warner Oland does especially good work.

Lonesome Luke is seen in "Lonesome Luke Loses Patients", a two-reel comedy produced by Rolin. Lonesome Luke is the Doctor Killem of a twentieth century sanitarium. An idea of the laughs in it can be seen from the following titles: "I hope you'll get well—or something". "This part requires practice and 'sang froid'—whatever that is". "My middle name is Cuddle". "He swallowed a buffalo nickel and it's kicking him". "I feel like a camel on the eighth day".

There is a Pathe scenic on the program entitled "Triple Divide Mountains, Glacier Park" and "Japan, the Floral" (colored). There is also an International cartoon and scenic split reel and Hearst-Pathe News No. 76 and No. 77.

INSTALLING SHECK ADAPTERS.

H. H. Cudmore, general manager of The Argus Lamp & Appliance Company, manufacturers of the Sheck Universal Adapters for Mazda projector lamps, in company with R. P. Burrows, manager commercial section, engineering department, National Lamp Works of General Electric Company, Nela Park, Cleveland, who has been directly responsible for the commercial development of the newly designed Mazda projector lamps, recently visited the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis and made several successful installations of the Sheck Universal Adapter with Mazda projector lamps in motion picture theaters. Successful installations were made in the "Cozy" theater, Seventh and Smith streets, St. Paul, Minn., of the Model "A" Sheck Universal Adapter with the 20-ampere 28-30 volt 600 Watt Mazda projector lamp, using the newly designed type "I" Ft. Wayne compensarc for directly controlling alternating current for the successful operation of Mazda projector lamps.

This theater was especially selected as being typical of all motion picture theaters of six hundred seats and under using alternating current where the Sheck Universal Adapter and Mazda projector lamps will successfully replace carbon arc projection apparatus and effect a current saving of at least two-thirds the cost of operating carbon arc projection apparatus.

A successful installation was made in the "Gem" theater, St. Paul, Minn., utilizing model "A" Sheck Universal Adapter with the 20-ampere Mazda projector lamp in connection with the newly designed Ward-Leonard 110 volt direct current rheostat.

All exhibitors who have seen these practical demonstrations of the Sheck Universal Adapter for Mazda projector lamps were very well satisfied and pleased and a large number of orders were placed with distributing agents for the Sheck Universal Adapters in the northwest territory.

Mr. Cudmore and Mr. Burrows contemplate visiting all of the prominent cities of the United States within the next few months for the purpose of making practical trial demonstrations of the Sheck Universal Adapter for Mazda projector lamps.

BILL DESMOND IN "FLYING COLORS."

William Desmond, the most popular of the Triangle stars, is to be seen in "Flying Colors," as a Yale athlete who puts into practical use some of the gymnastic stunts which made him a star at university field meets. In the cast supporting the star are: Golda Madien, Jack Livingston, Laura Sears, J. Barney Sherry, George W. Chase, John Lockney, Bert Offerd, Mary McIvor and Ray Jackson. The story was written by John Lynch and R. Cecil Smith, and produced under the direction of Frank Borzage.

Initial Hart Picture Nearing Completion

"The Narrow Trail," a Thrilling Drama of Western Bandit Life—Fritz, Hart's Famous Horse, Plays Opposite Actor.

WILLIAM S. HART'S initial Ince production to be released by Arteraft Pictures in October is now rapidly nearing completion at the Lasky studio in California. The photoplay, "The Narrow Trail," offers a dramatic Western story involving the life of a bandit and his great love for his beautiful pinto, the fastest horse in the community. Appearing opposite the star, with almost human intelligence, is Fritz, Hart's famous horse. The story allows for a great heart appeal, which is most effectively brought out by the splendid actor and his pony.

The exteriors for "The Narrow Trail" were staged in the range of mountains south of Los Angeles, and work is now being finished on several interiors at the Lasky studio, which will complete the production. One of the thrilling bits of play is a fight between Hart and two other members of the cast. The scene was staged last week at the Lasky studio, and is expected to become established as the greatest rough and tumble scuffle ever staged before the camera. Hart, as well as his opponents, were severely bruised as a result of this encounter in which blood flowed. Many other tense scenes of equal effectiveness have been staged which are contrasted with views of the bandit and his horse disclosing various pictures of particular human charm.

The story for this production is the creation of William S. Hart himself, and is adapted to the screen by Harvey F. Thew, of the Famous Players-Lasky staff. During Hart's recent trip across the country, when he appeared personally before many audiences, he received so many requests for information regarding his popular horse that the star decided to feature the animal in his next picture. Fritz was purchased by Hart from an old Indian several years ago for a trifle. At this time the animal was nothing but a raw-boned pony. As a result of great care from the hands of the actor himself the pony developed, not only in one of the most beautiful animals ever screened, but became one of the swiftest horses on the West Coast. An exceptional supporting cast has been given the star, including Sylvia Bremer, the talented beauty who appeared with him with such distinction in "The Cold Deck."

"ARMS AND THE GIRL" COMPLETED.

"Arms and the Girl," the latest Billie Burke picture for Paramount, has been photographed in its entirety. The film is now being cut and assembled—in itself no mean task, as many scenes had to be taken over and over to insure getting perfect results.

This picture will be one of the most spectacular, according to the belief of those responsible for its production, ever turned out by Paramount. Director Joseph Kaufman has permitted no opportunity of enhancing the war scenes and rendering them realistic to escape his attention. One member of the cast who saw the battle of Arras in films declared that some of the scenes were almost paralleled in "Arms and the Girl," despite the fact that the director had not seen the actual war picture.

"COMPLICATED COMPLICATIONS" (L-Ko.).

Director Phil Dunham, of L-Ko, having graduated from General Director Blystone's acting forces, shows how well he can produce pictures as well as create laughs on his own account in "Complicated Complications," set for distribution through Scene from "Complicated Complications" (L-Ko.).

Universal sources Sept. 26. Lucille Hutton and Billy Bevan will be the featured players in an oddly-conceived and amusingly executed two-reel laugh-maker. While it is fair to presume that the methods for surprising laughs out of audiences have been pretty well covered by the producers of rough-house comedy, it is declared that Phil Dunham has discovered a few remaining wrinkles in the game that will be first exploited in his initial L-Ko.

Change in Triangle Program

Substitutes "Idolaters" for September 2—September 9 Releases Include Bessie Love in "Polly Ann" and Winifred Allen in "The Haunted House."

OWING to the fact that the cutting and sub-titling of "The Man Hater", the Saturday Evening Post story starring Winifred Allen, has not yet been perfect, that play has been taken off the Triangle schedule for September 2, and "Idolaters", starring Louise Glaum, substituted. "Idolaters" is the story of a woman who worships the false god of vain success, setting aside all else to satisfy her ambition. The action parallels the lives of two women who are determined to win places for themselves on the stage. One proceeds to four-flush her way, the other to make good by hard work.

This is the production for which Triangle built an elaborate Egyptian setting, representing the apartment of "the peacock woman", played by Miss Glaum, who, as "vanity", wears innumerable gowns of bizarre fashion.

The tale of a ghost that turned human is the theme of "The Haunted House", an Allan Dwan production, featuring Winifred Allen, which will be presented on the program for September 2. The locale is a New England village, where superstition continues to stalk in the minds of the austere residents. Denied the ordinary pleasures of youth, the girl of the story devotes herself to imaginative fancies. Being of a sensitive, spiritual temperament, she believed the spirits of the wood commune with her, as they did with Joan of Arc. The mystery of the haunted house, which holds in awe the superstitious villagers, is not penetrated until one night a young desperado, seeking refuge, dares to invade its premises and finds the ghost to be exceedingly human.

As a small-town slavey who becomes a barnstorming Bernhardt, Bessie Love makes her appearance in "Polly Ann", the other release for September 9. She is an orphan inmate of a poor farm until the village tavern keeper engages her as slavey of all work. When a fly by night company of players comes to town, Bessie is smitten by the romantic demeanor of one of the actors. She determines to become a player and proceeds to give her version of Ophelia, Portia and other great characters of dramatic literature. Later she becomes an heiress and experiences a real adventure, as romantic as any ever presented by the strolling players.

"His Precious Life", featuring such famous Keystoners as Louise Fazenda, Charlie Murray, Slim Summerville, Dora Rogers and Wayland Trask, will be released by Triangle on the week of September 9.

"A Warm Reception", with Alatia Morton, Marianne de la Torre, Pietro Bianchi, Pat Kelly, Jack Dillon and Larry Bowes, is the Triangle comedy accompanying "Polly Ann."

"A Dark Room Secret" will be the supplementary feature with "The Haunted House". The comedians of this one-reeler are: Elizabeth De Witt, Lillian Biron, Harry Depp, Lloyd Bacon, Marie Manley and Ben Horning.

BOYS' PRANK HELPED CHAPIN.

Boys will be boys, but their pranks can be an inspiration, Benjamin Chapin has discovered. The result is "The Call to Arms" chapter of the Lincoln Cycle has been materially helped and here is how: Mr. Chapin found himself ready to do a scene showing Willie and Tad Lincoln, but the boys who were to play the parts had disappeared. There is a swimming hole near the Chapin studio at Ridgefield Park, New Jersey, and Mr. Chapin's own knowledge of youthful ways led his steps to it. But "Willie and Tad" were not there. At length he discovered them stealing into the studio with soaking wet bath towels under their arms. They had beaten him to it, but a Chaplin lecture on "Lateness" followed just the same. At the conclusion of it Mr. Chapin sat down.

Were the late actors impressed? Did they give way to tears? As we have said, Mr. Chapin sat down. But he also stood up. He didn't relish sitting on wet towels. He thought it a corking "situation," however, and that is why you find the incident repeated in "The Call to Arms" and get a big laugh from a little happening.

"If nothing else, this incident should show how laugh currents are worked up in production," says Mr. Chapin. "They are likely to come to one at any time and nothing should be overlooked if usable."

CAST FOR GOLDWYN'S "CINDERELLA MAN."

Casting Director Adolph Klauber of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has completed the list of principals for Mae Marsh's new screen vehicle, "The Cinderella Man", and work upon Edward Childs Carpenter's whimsical story is already well under way at the Fort Lee studio.

Barring "Margie", which Mae Marsh will play, the most important part in the new Goldwyn film is "Tony". He is the so-called "Cinderella man", who lives all alone in his garret under the eye of his former butler, until "Margie" slips across the roof one Christmas Eve from her aristocratic house to bring him friendly cheer—and food. For "Tony", Mr. Klauber has selected Tom Moore.

In George Fawcett Goldwyn has secured an admirable "Caner". Another distinguished character actor, who has left the legitimate stage for the screen, is George Farren, who will play "Sewell".

Alec B. Francis has been chosen for the part of "Romney". Others in the cast are Louis R. Grisel, Elizabeth Aarionsm, Mrs. J. Cogan, Dean Raymond and Harry Scarborough.

Fine Production of "On the Level"

Strong Cast and Admirable Story Make This Paramount Picture Unusually Attractive.

When "On the Level" is released September 10 as a Paramount feature it will be found that, in addition to the star, Fannie Ward, there is a cast which throughout is of unusual strength, a story that is both thrilling and convincing, and a production leaving nothing to be desired. In the cast are such well known and popular players as Jack Dea, Harrison Ford, Lottie Pickford, James Cruze, James P. Mason, James Neill, Edythe Chapman, Jane Wolff and Henry Woodward.

The direction of George H. Melford is a guarantee of the excellence of the picture in this respect, while the fact that the story was written by Charles Kenyon, the well-known playwright, and the screen arrangement by Marion Fairfax, assures its perfection.

SHECK SALES MANAGERS.

H. A. Brereton has been appointed sales manager of the Argus Lamp & Appliance Company, 322 Euclid avenue, Cleveland, manufacturers of the Sheck Universal Adapter for Mazda projector lamps.

H. L. Nebeker, formerly manager of the Chicago office of the Victor Animatograph Company, manufacturers of semi-portable motion picture projection machines, has been appointed Chicago district manager. Mr. Nebeker will handle all of the business in the Chicago district territory and Indiana and territory adjacent to Chicago.

A large stock of Sheck Universal Adapters for Mazda projector lamps and the necessary current controlling apparatus will be carried in Chicago to take care of the extensive demand for their products, at 708-10 First National Bank building.

SAME CAST IN ALL "BAB" PICTURES.

For the five big five-reel productions, starring Marguerite Clark, and adapted from the "Sub-Deb" stories by Mary Roberts Rinehart, the same cast will be used throughout, according to Hugh Ford, Eastern production manager, who has just completed his arrangements for these exceptional Paramount productions.

The principal players in the "Sub-Deb" or "Bab" pictures, and who will appear in each of the five big productions, are Marguerite Clark as Bab Archibald, Leonora Morgan as Jane, Nigel Barry as Carter Brooks, Richard Barthelmess as Tommy, Frank Losee and Isabel O'Madigan as Mr. and Mrs. Archibald, Helen Greene as Leila, Guy Coombes as Harry and Jack O'Brien as Harold.

"THE SPOTTED LILY" (Bluebird).

Ella Hall makes another appearance as a star among Bluebirds with the release of "The Spotted Lily," on Oct. 1. This feature previously referred to as "Bitter Sweet" is a story of pathetic sacrific, having the outrage of Belgium as its basis, with its final scenes translated to the United States for the happy ending. J. Grubb Alexander wrote the story, Fred Myton prepared the scenario and Harry Solter, veteran among moving picture directors, made the production. In Miss Hall's support, Charles Hill Mailes will play the role of a Roman Catholic priest who suffers indignities through his protection of a defenseless girl, and finds recompense in the surety of his charge's future happiness in America. There is just enough battle and carnage to develop the motive of the plot, but while they last the war episodes are sharp and sensational. Ella Hall, who has made an enviable name as an interpreter of juvenile roles, finds opportunity to display her more widely developed talents in playing the part of a little girl and, later, her mother grown up.

Paramount Chooses Serial Title

"Who Is Number One?" Will Be the Name of the Fifteen-Episode Mystery Drama.

PARAMOUNT has selected the title for its first serial. The fifteen-episode mystery drama, starring Kathlen Clifford, is to be called "Who Is 'Number One?" and the story by Anna Katharine Green, great writer of mystery fiction, will bear the same title when it is published in book form after the serial has completed its run.

Paramount has demanded that its first serial satisfy in every particular the standard that exhibitors have learned to expect from Paramount pictures. A corps of motion picture expert writers, art directors, photographers, producers, editors and artists are concentrating their efforts toward making "Who Is 'Number One'?" a serial of undisputed quality.

Thousands of feet of retakes are being made, entire episodes are being reconstructed in order that no part of any episode shall drop into the category of ordinary serials. Paramount realizes the importance of gaining for its serials the same confidence that exhibitors place in its other productions, and "Who Is 'Number One'?" will not be shown anywhere until the entire fifteen episodes have passed every test.

When "Who Is 'Number One'?" is ready—some time in October—exchanges will be furnished prints of the entire production, so that if exhibitors choose they can see every reel of the serial before they sign a contract.

GAUMONT FOR WEEK OF SEPTEMBER 17.

The Gaumont-Mutual Weekly which will be released September 19 will contain the usual unusual scenes of timely news interest which the public confidently looks for in this news reel. As the Weekly is an up-to-the-latest-minute release, it is not possible to say in advance just what happenings will appear in a number until it "goes to press". But a staff of enthusiastic news-photographers stationed all over the world, including the military cameramen of the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont who are with the American expeditionary forces in France and on the battle front, insure that spectators of the Mutual Weekly will receive the earliest possible photographic advice of the march of our boys toward Berlin.

"Reel Life," the Mutual film magazine, does not show news events, but longer, fuller subjects which are current at all times. Issue No. 73, which will be released September 20, contains three subjects which are real features: "Running an Airplane Without Danger" shows how aviators can learn to fly before they leave the earth. "Student Officers" illustrates how the young commanders of our new army are learning the up-to-date methods of modern warfare. "The Principle of the Gyroscope" is a rare, scientific article so clearly pictured that no one can see it without being entertained. A picture of the weaving of President Wilson's portrait in fabric, and an animated drawing from America's leading humorous weekly, "Life," showing how you feel when a big car passes your "flivver", complete the reel.

CABANNE FINISHING "DRAFT NO. 258."

Although Director Wm. Christy Cabanne's contract with Metro expired on September 2, he will continue with that organization until the completion of his newest war picture, "Draft No. 258." The possibilities and magnitude of this production were not realized until Director Cabanne had gotten well into it. He estimates now that it will be a picture seven or eight reels in length, with stupendous scenes and groupings.

There will be no definite announcement of Director Cabanne's plans until after "Draft No. 258" is finished. The dynamic director has a number of offers under consideration, but has decided to take his time in making a decision. Several propositions for the production of his own pictures on a basis of state rights have made the most direct appeal to him so far.

The conspicuous position which Director Cabanne occupies in the motion picture world among producers and exhibitors, to whom he has never offered a failure, and the further fact that he has been the author and director of some of the most popular of screen dramas, makes his future plans of general interest. His most recent picture, "The Slacker," of which he was author and director, is playing to crowded houses from Coast to Coast.

"THE BRIDE'S SILENCE" (Mutual).

Gail Kane, the Broadway star who is making a series of pictures for the Mutual release at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., Santa Barbara, is starred in "The Bride's Silence", a five-reel mystery drama, scheduled for release September 10.

"The Bride's Silence" is the fifth of Miss Kane's Mutual productions. It was staged under the direction of Henry King. The story is by Daniel Frederick Whitcomb, author of "Little Mary Sunshine" and more than two hundred other successful motion picture productions. The story involves a prominent New York family. Miss Kane is supported by Ashton Dearholt, a stage and screen actor of note; Henry A. Burrows, James Lee Farley, Robert Klein and Lewis J. Cody.

"THE YANKS ARE COMING!" IN UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS.

Universal covered the big military parade in New York, August 30, with six of the best cameramen on the staffs of the Animated Weekly and Current Events. Every interesting feature in connection with the greatest mustering of armed troops that the city has witnessed since Civil War days was pictured, from the start at 110th street to the disbanding of the husky 30,000 at Washington Square. Although the parade was not over until three o'clock, the Universal version was shown on the screens of the Broadway and other leading New York theaters the same evening. Some 450 feet of selected views have also been incorporated in the 17th issue of Current Events, released September 1.

Besides picturing Manhattan's farewell to her boys, the Universal scored a beat on competing news weeklies by securing permission to send a cameraman with the 22d Engineers to Spartanburg, S. C. In this way, the entire journey of Colonel Vanderbilt's famous regiment will be pictured from the time it left Fifth avenue until it turns into cantonments prior to its embarkation for France.

This issue of Current Events will also contain a series of exclusive views of the graduating exercises at West Point.

"WHO SHALL TAKE MY LIFE" (Selig).

Thomas Santschi and Fritzi Brunette enact important roles in "Who Shall Take My Life?" the Selig feature film written by Maibelle Heikes Justice, and presenting a convincing plea against the evils of capital punishment. The drama not yet presented to the general public is said to be one of the most gripping productions of the film world. Santschi enacts the role of "Big Bill" O'Shaughnessy, a bridge tender, while Fritzi Brunette plays the part of a girl of the underworld who loves the bridge tender and, when cast aside, becomes embittered and revengeful. How the web of circumstantial evidence enmeshes "Big Bill" O'Shaughnessy, how the girl finally confesses her part in the plot against him, how the bridge tender is led to the electric chair and then—— Well, "Who Shall Take My Life?" is a stirring and convincing plea for the abolishment of capital punishment.

"Who Shall Take My Life?" and the propaganda it advances has been endorsed by the Maurice Kovnac, National Secretary of the Anti-Capital Punishment League of America; former Warden Osborne, of Sing Sing Prison; members of the Anti-Capital Punishment League of Chicago, all of whom have viewed the film.

EDITH STOREY IN DUAL ROLE.

In "The House in the Mist", the forthcoming Metro wonderplay in which Edith Storey will make her bow to Metro screen patrons, the favorite star will be seen as both mother and daughter, first in fascinating crinolines and powdered hair, and later in the mode of the present moment.

In this story, adapted by June Mathis from the novel of Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy, the mother of Carma Carmichael marries the wrong man. She marries Roger, a carefree ne'er-do-well, whereas it is his brother, Quincy Carmichael, who has a heart's devotion to offer her. She makes her choice between the two at a costume ball where the guests are garbed in the manner of 1832. Miss Storey has never looked more attractive than she does in the full panniers and silk brocades of that period. The ballroom scene is a brilliant one, resplendent in laces, frills and powdered wigs, with men and maidens dancing the minuet and quaint old-fashioned "square" dances.

Later, as Carma Carmichael herself, Miss Storey appears in modern evening gowns and "sport" clothes. Plenty of incident is arranged for the Cohen-Giesy story, and Tod Browning, who is directing the production, has developed it in terms of good red-blooded action.

Two Mutual Features for Sept. 10

Ann Murdock and Gail Kane Are Starred in Five and Six-Reel Subjects.

THE first of the Frohman Empire All-Star subjects will be released on the Mutual Film Corporation's schedule September 10 when Ann Murdock returns to the screen in "Outcast", a six-reel picturization of the Broadway success. On the schedule with "Outcast", under President John R. Freuler's policy of "two star productions a week", will be released "The Bride's Silence", a five-reel American Mutual drama starring Gail Kane.

"Outcast" is a screen adaptation of Hubert Henry Davies' startling and sensational play, which scored a hit on Broadway with Miss Murdock in the stellar role. The picture was directed by Dell Henderson. Miss Murdock is supported by a notable cast, which includes most of the original company of players who appeared in the play.

"The Bride's Silence" is the fifth of the series of American Mutuals starring Miss Kane, who deserted the footlights of Broadway to go to Santa Barbara to make pictures for Mutual. The picture was originally announced under the working title of "The Unafraid". It was directed by Henry King. It is an unusual and thrilling mystery story by Daniel Frederick Whitcomb. Miss Kane's return to the screen has been justified by the success of the series of productions in which she has recently been starred.

"Jerry's Whirlwind Finish", a one-reel Cub comedy, is on the Mutual release schedule for Thursday, September 13. The picture features George Ovey, the funny man of the Cub's. On Wednesday will be released Mutual Weekly No. 141, carrying current news, on September 13 Reel Life No. 72, the Mutual-Gaumont screen magazine, will be released. It shows "Tree Planting in the National Forests," most of the pictures being taken in the Wind River nursery of Washington. "Hunting Turtle Eggs" is another subject covered, while "Testing an Auto Tube" shows a remarkable exhibition of the strength of the inner tube of motor tires, the experience of motorists notwithstanding. The reel carries an interesting picture of the midnight sun from Alaska.

"LOST IN TRANSIT" ABOUNDS IN HUMAN INTEREST.

While patrons of the photodrama have grown accustomed to expecting genuine touches of human interest in all of George Beban's productions, it is safe to say that they will be agreebly surprised when "Lost in Transit" is shown, for it contains a greater amount of those features which appeal to human sympathy than anything in which he has heretofore appeared. September 3 is the release date of "Lost in Transit," and the fact that it is from a story by Kathlyn Williams, also a Paramount star, is an added feature of interest. The scenario was prepared by Gardner Hunting, and the direction was most capably handled by Donald Crisp.

In the supporting cast, besides Bob White, the child actor, are Helen Eddy, who has been seen so often in Mr. Beban's pictures for Paramount; Henry Barrows, Pietro Sosso, Vera Lewis, Frank Bennett and others.

The settings are extremely realistic, and not a point has been overlooked that would tend to make the picture more pleasing or natural.

HARTFORD THEATER SAFE ROBBED.

A. C. Morrison, managing director of the Majestic theater, Hartford, Conn., writes that the safe of his house was broken into on August 2 and $100 in change taken. It is believed that the house was entered by someone who had the keys. The last person seen about the place was Guy Bottume, eighteen years old, who had been employed as doorman. He came to the theater on the night of the robbery to polish some brass and disappeared from Hartford the same night, leaving about 4 a. m. on a bicycle. Bottume is of light complexion, wore a blue suit and a straw hat at the time of his disappearance. It is thought he might be working in New York City. A warrant has been issued for Bottume's arrest and ten dollars will be paid for information leading thereto. Information may be sent to A. C. Morrison, owner of the Majestic theater, or to the Chief of Police of Hartford, Conn.

EVELYN NESBIT'S SECOND PHOTOPLAY.

A company of forty people has left New York for the Adirondacks, where Miss Evelyn Nesbit, assisted by her son, Russell Thaw, and a cast of excellent players, will begin her second photoplay, under the personal direction of Julius Steger. The title of this picture is "The Greater Love," by James M. Starr, the scenario version of which has been made under Mr. Steger's supervision.

PATHE FRENCH WAR PICTURES SHOWS DESTRUCTION BY GERMANS.

Under the title of "In the Wake of the Huns," Pathe will release on September 23 the first authoritative pictures taken under French Government supervision of the occupation by French troops of the territory recently evacuated by the Germans after the battle of Arras. As a contribution to history, as well as for its great interest and timeliness, this two-reel picture ranks very high. Unlike many of the war pictures which have found their way to this country, "In the Wake of the Huns" is beautifully photographed. The cameraman or cameramen who took these views were artists. By intelligent selection of foregrounds there is a wonderful effect of depth obtained in the longest "shots," as well as those with more limited backgrounds.

The havoc in the evacuated territory is almost beyond belief. Stately chateaux, churches, city halls—all manner of buildings, both public and private—are shattered apparently beyond repair. Particularly interesting are the scenes of the famous castle of Coucy before and after German occupation. This castle, one of the most famous of mediaeval strongholds left in the world, was not under French bombardment, but the Germans, when they abandoned the section, blew it up, for what reason it is hard to say. Such senseless destruction is all too apparent in almost every scene in these pictures.

NEWMAN BRASS INSTALLATIONS.

The Newman Manufacturing Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, with branch factory located at 68 W. Washington street, Chicago, Illinois, have recently furnished the New Rialto Theater of Brockton, Mass., with the entire equipment of brass work, including a brass ticket booth, special brass Unit frames to fit around the corners of lobby, and brass railing work and brass ticket chopper.

Mr. Papouleas, the owner of this new theater, wanted only the very best brass work which he could obtain and selected the Newman Manufacturing Company to do this work for him. He had them build special hinged one sheet frames to fit the entire length of his lobby, which is 71 feet long. These one sheet frames are made with lion heads and leaf ornaments on the face of frame, making same very attractive.

The Newman Manufacturing Company are also furnishing the Dusenbury Theaters, at Columbus, Ohio, namely the Grand and Vernon, with special Unit frames to fit around the corners made of corrugated moulding. This is the very latest style of display frames. This concern is running a night shift in order to take care of orders and thus give prompt service.

EMMY WEHLEN IN "NOBODY."

Exquisite Emmy Wehlen, one of the most delightful of Metro stars, has commenced work on her new Metro wonderplay, "Nobody", a screen version of the novel of the same name by that prince of story tellers, Louis Joseph Vance. Charles A. Taylor has adapted the story for the screen. Directing "Nobody" is William C. Dowlan, and assisting him is Benjamin S. Kutler. "Nobody", published by the Charles H. Doran Co., was originally issued in serial form under the title "An Outsider". This "Outsider" is Sally, who up to the time the story opens has been a shop-girl in a department store. So well does the role of Sally fit Miss Wehlen that Mr. Vance might easily have written the story with her in mind.

A capable cast has been chosen for the star for this production. Herbert Hayes will play Trego, the western millionaire. Florence Short will play Mrs. Standish, the clever society woman who steals her own jewels. Ilean Hume, the clever and pretty Metro player, will have the part of Lucy Spode, a young worker in New York's art colony. Virginia Palmer and Boyce Combe are other members of the cast.

BROWNIE VERNON IS A BUSY LADY.

Since her elevation to stardom, in conjunction with Franklyn Farnum, on the Bluebird program, Brownie Vernon has found nothing dull, from a professional standpoint, in her moving picture life. She appeared in seven exciting comedy-dramas as co-star with Mr. Farnum and when it was decided to continue Farnum as a lone-star on the program Miss Vernon was transferred to Elmer Clifton's company as co-star with Herbert Rawlinson.

"Flirting With Death", the first Rawlinson-Vernon Bluebird, will be released Sept. 24, and a second Bluebird, "It's Up to You", has just been finished for the same stars. Now Miss Vernon has begun work under Allen Holubar on "The Twisted Soul", in which she will be individually starred.

"UNDER FALSE COLORS."

On September 23 Pathe will release another Gold Rooster play, in which Frederick Warde and Jeanne Eagels have the leading parts. It is called "Under False Colors," written by Lloyd Lonergan, directed by Emile Chautard and produced by Thanhouser. The last time these two stars appeared in the same production was in "The Fires of Youth," which was more than ordinarily successful and was very well received by the critics. The story is most timely, dealing as it does with Russia just prior to the dethronement of the czar.

Petrova Organization Completed

Many Well-Known Experts Join the Staff of Petrova Pictures—Baron Dewitz Engaged.

MADAME PETROVA has announced the personnel of the staff that will assist her in the production of Petrova Pictures. An innovation, so firmly grounded on hard common sense that it will probably be adopted by all studios seeking to produce perfect dramas, is revealed in Petrova's engagement of an art connoisseuer-regisseur, in the person of Baron Dewitz, to see that the actors appearing in Petrova Pictures dress, bow, eat, fence, write telegrams, telephone and dance in strict accordance with the social customs and practices of the country in which the scene of the play is laid.

The Baron's first duties will be to co-operate with Director George Irving in making the big spectacular scenes and the locale of her first picture absolutely authentic and correct. A regisseur can best be described as "a consulting technical director." His work consists of removing all of the little inconsistencies which are apt to creep into the film, and which, to an exacting audience, are inexcusable. A few years ago such defects would have passed without a murmur, but today the engagement of the Baron is Petrova's answer to the public's just requirements. It is therefore safe to say that when an audience views a scene in Petrova Pictures it can be sure that it is an accurate representation.

Other experts who will assist Director George Irving in the production of Petrova Pictures are: Robert North, studio manager, who brings to his new work a fund of experience gained while serving in this capacity with other companies. Harry B. Harris, camera man, was associated with Petrova in former pictures, and assisted her director, Mr. Irving, in the production of "Raffles." Mrs. Emma B. Clifton will be the continuity writer for Petrova's first picture, the story having been written by Petrova herself. Mrs. Clifton has collaborated with Petrova on former occasions. Messenier, from the Biograph Studios, will be Petrova's technical director.

It has been decided by Frederick L. Collins, president of Petrova Pictures Company, to present Petrova Pictures to the public through one of the most powerful, yet dignified publicity campaigns in the history of motion pictures. The plans embrace magazine, newspaper, billboard, and direct-by-mail advertising on a countrywide scale. Daniel M. Henderson, who has had charge of advertising campaigns for McClure Pictures and Superpictures, will manage the advertising and general publicity campaign for Petrova Pictures.

Madame Petrova has engaged Miss Beulah Livingstone as her personal representative, in charge of her special publicity work. Miss Livingstone was formerly associated with Thomas H. Ince as his general publicity representative in the launching of "Civilization" in New York. She was general publicity representative last season for Henry W. Savage, and previous to that conducted special publicity campaigns for David Belasco, F. Ray Comstock, Elizabeth Marbury and others. She also handled the New York publicity for Arthur Hopkins when he had Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle on their whirlwind dancing tour of twenty-four cities.

New Fairbanks-Artcraft Picture Finished

"The Man From Painted Post" to Be First Artcraft Release in October—Star and Company to Arrive in New York Early Next Week for New Production.

A TELEGRAM received at the New York headquarters of Artcraft Pictures from John Fairbanks, general manager of the Douglas Fairbanks company, announces the completion of "The Man From Painted Post," which has been in the course of production during the past month in Wyoming. The entire Fairbanks organization is highly enthusiastic over its newest offering.

Replete with the swift action and thrills of a story dealing with the cattle rustling days of the West, together with the most beautiful scenic displays of Wyoming, the latest Fairbanks-Artcraft picture discloses the popular exponent of the smile in a role said to be quite different from any of his previous screen efforts. In addition to being a typical Fairbanks vehicle of the rapid-fire variety, the story allows the player a great opportunity of proving his dramatic ability. Various scenes of tense interest afford the star a chance to display his versatility as an actor. In contrast to these situations are many humorous bits showing the experiences of Douglas as a supposed "tenderfoot" among the cowboys.

Douglas Fairbanks and his company is expected in New York early next week for the production of several scenes of his next Artcraft picture. The company will remain in New York only long enough to film the desired scenes, after which it will return to California to finish the picture.

"THE LOST EXPRESS" (Mutual).

Helen Holmes' latest Mutual-Signal fifteen chapter photonovel "The Lost Express," the first chapter of which will be released on September 17, is without doubt the most thrilling adventure drama in which the intrepid young star has appeared on the screen.

The story, which was written by Frederick B. Bennett, is based on the amazing disappearance of an express train between way stations on an absolutely straight piece of railway track with no switches or sidings. How this train is disposed of by a band of robbers constitutes the mystery of a drama that is as full of mystery as it is of adventure, and which is engrossingly interesting in every one of its fifteen episodes.

The new photonovel has been directed by John P. McGowan, who has directed most of Miss Holmes' plays and one of the most widely traveled men in the motion picture world. McGowan knows how to get the right atmosphere in "outdoor stuff," and his genius in the selection of locations for "thrillers" is not to be outdone.

Included in the cast of "The Lost Express" are Leo D. Maloney, Thomas Lingham, William Brunton, Edward Hearn, Al J. Smith, Andrew Waldron, V. O. Whitehead, S. A. Sues, R. V. Phelan, Clyde Roe, William Behrens, Charles U. Wells and Lenren Maxem, all regular actors in the star's support.

All the theaters on the Keith circuit will show these latest pictures of the war. Beginning Monday, September 17, and continuing for three weeks, these pictures will be the headline feature of the Keith vaudeville houses.

Globe Feature Film Works Out Complete Scheme for Percentage Basis for Its Pictures in New England—Paramount-Artcraft Changes—Notes.

By Richard D. Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—An important change in the policy of the Globe Feature Film Corporation, which went into effect September 3, is announced by General Manager Harry G. Segal. Under the new plan all feature productions released through this organization will be sold to the exhibitor on a straight percentage basis.

A careful survey of the entire New England territory has been made by General Manager Segal and Exchange Manager Robert W. Cobe, each city and town has been figured down to a certain specified percentage basis. The figures for the new proposition have been derived not from the estimated population of the city or town, but from the actual industrial conditions of the community.

Mr. Segal states that while prices may fluctuate, the price to the exhibitor will remain the same. It is announced that productions will cost the exhibitor the same amount on release date as one year later. One price will be set and there will be no bargaining on sales.

One, two or three-day runs will cost the exhibitor the same identical price and no reductions or excess charges will be made to exhibitors playing a three-day run or the man using a one-day run. All charges will be the same.

Frank McKay Will Be Fox Sales Repsentative.

Boston, Mass.—Frank McKay, formerly manager of the Kriterion Film Company, of this city, has resigned his position and joined the Boston office of the Fox Film Corporation as a sales representative in Massachusetts and along the Cape. Changes in General Officers and Staff of Paramount-Artcraft.

Boston, Mass.—Several important changes have been made in the Boston, New Haven, Conn., and Portland, Me., offices of the Paramount and Artcraft Pictures Corporation as a result of the new selective series booking plan of these concerns.

The general management of the joint business in New England is in the hands of Harry Asher, formerly manager of the Boston office, and he will now have supervision over all of the New England offices of the two concerns.

Manager Asher brings to Boston as publicity manager of the two interests John P. McConville, a Portland, Me., newspaper man and formerly secretary to former Governor Curtis of Maine. An account of Mr. McConville's experience and a picture were recently printed in this paper.

Joseph A. McConville, a brother of John P. McConville, who was formerly assistant manager of the Boston office of Paramount, has been advanced to branch manager of the New England office of both Paramount and Artcraft.

George K. Robinson, formerly Paramount publicity manager, becomes sales manager in the Boston office of both concerns, and Samuel Bernfield, continues as branch manager for Artcraft.

Other changes include: A Barry, formerly Paramount booker, becomes booker for both interests; Moxley Blumenberg, the Portland, Me., manager, becomes manager for the Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont interests of Artcraft and Paramount, and Henry T. Scully takes over the whole of Connecticut, a part of Rhode Island and Massachusets, as his district in the management of the joint interests, with headquarters in New Haven.

Boston, Mass.—General Manager Arthur S. Kane, of the Louis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc., has appointed Samuel J. Steinfeldt to represent the Selznick productions in New England. For some months Mr. Steinfeldt has been a sales representative in Massachusets for the Fox Film Corporation under Manager William D. Shapiro, of the local exchange. He was very successful while with Fox and will be greatly missed by that organization.

J. Lester Reardon, owner of the Cross Street Orpheum theater in Somerville, Mass., and former manager of Greater Vitagraph's Boston office, who a few weeks ago was appointed head of the New England Selznick office, remains with the Selznick Enterprises as an assistant to Manager Steinfeldt.

General Manager Kane located the new Boston offices of the Selznick company temporarily at No. 69 Church street, in the exchange of the E. W. Lynch Enterprises.

Manager Steinfeldt has taken on Max Carmusion, formerly Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont representative of the Universal, as a New England salesman. Mr. Carmusian is a widely known roadman and should be a big asset to the Selznick people.

M. J. Coyle Joins Eastern Feature Staff.

Boston, Mass.—Herman Rifkin, president and general manager of the Eastern Feature Film company of this city announces the acquisition of M. J. Coyle, an experienced roadman, to his staff of New England sales representatives. Mr. Coyle has been assigned to the Massachusetts territory and feels sure of success in his new appointment. Exhibitor Hawes Was on His Job.

Boston, Mass.—The alertness of Manager Charles Hawes of the Puritan theater, a moving picture house on Washington street, this city, averted a possible panic in the theater when the blowing out of a fuse caused a flash of flame to burst forth frightening the audience.

Some excited person in the audience shouted "fire" and women and children rushed for the exits. Many were caught and trampled upon before they could be rescued. Manager Hawes immediately leaped upon the stage of the theater and, shouting to the excited audience, told them to keep their seats. His quickness prevented more serious consequences. Manager Hawes and Special Officer John E. Smith quieted the crowd and the performance was resumed.

M. H. Hoffman Chooses Boston Offices.

Boston, Mass.—The New England headquarters of the M. H. Hoffman Productions, Inc., will be at No. 16 Piedmont street, which is the general office of the Federal Feature Film Corporation, of which Samuel V. Grand is president and general manager.

Halifax Family Theater to Play Up Pictures

Has Been a Vaudeville House With an Occasional Picture—Contracts for Universal Output and Begins With "Red Ace."

By Alice Fairweather, The Standard, St. John, N. B.

HALIFAX, N. S.—Some decided changes have taken place in the Family theater, known as "Acker's", in Halifax, N. S. This has been a vaudeville house, with just an incidental picture. Beginning August 25 L. R. Acker will show entirely Universal pictures, with four acts only of vaudeville. He has booked the Universal service for twenty-six weeks and asked for an option later.

He starts the serial, "The Red Ace", on the same date and through the week will use as a feature Bluebird, Butterfly and L-Ko comedies. G. A. Margetts, of St. John, has just returned from Halifax and will go back this week to start the advertising campaign. I believe the Herald and Mail, leading morning and evening papers, are to carry a large space, starting off the pictures thoroughly.

The theater is to be redecorated throughout, the seats upholstered in cretonne, new seats put in the balcony, new electric light fixtures installed and a regular little palace made of the house. An American decorator is doing the work.

The owners of the building are making several necessary alterations to comply with the building and fire regulations of the City of Halifax.

G. A. Margetts Will Manage U. State Rights.

St. John, N. B.—G. A. Margetts has been appointed manager of the State Rights Department of the Universal for the Maritime Provinces. He will handle at least twelve big productions during the year besides the Alice Howell Comedies. Mr. Margetts continues as manager at the St. John office of the company as well.

It is expected to have one of the comedies here for screening during the coming convention.

Local 497 Gets Charter.

Halifax, N. S.—The moving picture machine operators and theatrical stage employees of Halifax have secured a charter in the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees of United States and Canada. The number of this local is 497, and the charter gives it jurisdiction over all operators and stage employees in the Maritime provinces. The officers elected for the ensuing year are:

F. P. Metzler, president; Tom S. Daley, vice-president; H. J. Ward, financial secretary; A. A. MacDonald, corresponding secretary, Strand theater, Halifax; W. B. Fox, recording secretary; A. Flynn, J. O'Brien, E. Harrington, trustees; M. Lannigan, sergeant-at-arms.

Mr. Daley, the vice-president, is a former St. John boy, having been operator at the Gem theater, St. John, for some time.

Perkins Interests Get Government Films.

St. John, N. B.—Allan Christie, manager of the Perkins Electric and the Independent Film and Theater Supply companies, has received news from Montreal that this company has been appointed by the British Government to handle all official films, such as British cinema war weeklies and all big war pictures. The company expects to have four prints. The first is to be the arrival of the United States Fleet in British waters. This picture is exclusive and an official Government picture. It has been booked by the Imperial theater, Montreal. "The Battle of Arras" will probably be shown in Halifax very shortly, and the fleet picture will be in St. John in September. Allan Christie has just returned from Halifax, where he was in the interests of the electrical side of his business. He states that business in that line is fair.

Jottings from Maritime Provinces.

St. John, N. B.—C. J. Godet, of Happyland theater, Prince Edward Island, was in St. John last week. Mr. Godet is an ardent horseman and was one of the judges at the races run at Moosepath, St. John, N. B., recently.

Charlottetown, P. E. I.—J. G. Armstrong, who is associated with F. G. Spencer in the capacity of treasurer, is visiting C. J. Gallegher, of the Prince Edward theater, Charlottetown, P. E. I., for some weeks.

Kellermann Players Net $4,000 for Hospital.

BAR HARBOR, ME.—Society paid more than a dollar a minute to admire itself and see Annette Kellermann do a three or four-minute swimming exhibition at the fashionable Bar Harbor Swimming Club.

The exhibition was for the benefit of the Bar Harbor Hospital and Miss Kellermann, who is here making a new sub-sea picture —"Queen of the Sea"—consented to give the performance. Nearly $4,000 was raised and this will enable the hospital to keep open throughout the year.

Miss Susette Sturgis arranged the affair and every cottager in Bar Harbor was there. The congestion of automobiles at the entrance to the club house was so great that many of the box holders were unable to get in to the beginning of the exhibition, which was delayed in order that as many as possible might be present.

After the swimming exhibition, which was repeatedly applauded, Miss Kellermann was given a reception on the lawn and a tea by Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mrs. William Lawrence Green, wife of the president of the club, and other prominent social leaders.

The boxes, holding five persons, sold for $50, while the reserved seats were disposed of for $5 each.

Handsome New Theater Promised Baltimore

Parkway Theater Company Plans a 2,000-Seat House in the North Avenue and Charles Street Section—Will Be the Homewood.

J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The announcements were made last week that Baltimore is to have one more large and handsome theater in the North avenue and Charles street section. The Parkway Theater Company, Harry W. Webb, president, plans a playhouse to have a seating capacity of 2,000. This company is now operating the Parkway, Strand and McHenry theaters and the new building will probably be called the Homewood. It will be on the northeast corner of Charles street and Lafayette avenue. According to the present arrangements of the company work will begin immediately and it is thought that the new theater will be ready for the public about January 1.

On August 24 the Homewood Amusement Company filed incorporation papers with the State Tax Commission, its capital being $100,000 preferred and $100,000 common stock. Among the directors of the new company are George A. Finch, Howard M. Emmons and Edward C. Sandell. The last named is of the Lord Calvert Theaters Company and it is understood that he will manage the new house. Blanke & Zink are the architects and the general design will be on the Colonial lines. Work will be rushed so that the new house may be opened by December 1.

Beautiful New Theater for Hanover.

Hanover, Pa.—On Friday, September 14, the Strand, a new and beautiful motion picture theater, will be thrown open to the public. It is in the new $800,000 building now nearing completion. M. Schaeffer will be the proprietor.

This theater is fireproof throughout. The seating capacity is 498, with standing room for 200. The chairs will be the orchestra type, upholstered with green leather, which carries out the general color scheme of the decorations. The auditorium of the theater will be decorated very artistically by a series of dark green panels with trimmings of gold leaf. The woodwork will probably be done in white with the walls of old ivory, the cornice being done in old ivory and gold. A mellow glow of light is obtained by the indirect system.

The operating room is equipped with metal doors. Two Power's 6B projection machines have been installed. The throw to the screen is 90 feet and it is a Mirror screen measuring 13 by 16 feet.

Perfect ventilation has been obtained by building a system of eight ventilators, each measuring about three feet across, on each side of the theater, each of which is equipped with a powerful exhaust fan. The lobby is trimmed with marble.

Smith of the Vitagraph, was represented on this occasion by Nat S. Stronge, the publicity director for this company. Mr. Bliss is a widower who is employed in the engineering department of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Stanley Theater Organization Has Outing

Over 200 Persons Connected With the Stanley Theaters and Exchanges Enjoy a Picnic at Doylestown—Merry-Making and Athletics.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The first Stanley outing, including the employees of the Stanley theaters and those of the exchanges belonging to this organization, was held on Sunday, August 26, at the National Farm Schools, near Doylestown. The happy crowd, 200 strong, were fully prepared to start the day with merry making of all sorts. Headed by a committee, consisting of B. F. Tickner, Jules W. Catsiff, David S. Fuhrman and Miss C. W. Wachwitz, they assisted in amusing the crowd with their various contests.

A strong line-up for a ball game was headed by Robert Lynch, captain of the exchange men's team, which was pitted against Captain Jules W. Catsiff's team of theater employees. The game has hotly contested until the eighth inning when the theater employees' team gracefully retired in favor of the exchange mens' team, who were leading by the score of 10 to 6. H. Tyson and Bill Bethel on more than one occasion brought home the bacon by driving out home runs at opportune moments and making several spectacular plays.

A general rumpus was started by a pie-eating and watermelon contest. Bert Tickner succeeded in consuming more watermelon than the rest of the party and David Fuhrman and Jules Catsiff ran a dead heat in the pie-eating contest. Miss Anna Laverty and Miss C. W. Wachwitz were two of the popular girls present who attended to witness this massacre. The theaters represented were The Stanley, Great Northern, Imperial and Rialto, and the exchanges represented were Metro, Goldwyn, Selznick and Peerless.

An intensely human story, gripping in every situation, and splendidly portrayed, makes "The Honor System," a Wm. Fox production, at the Stanley, one of the season's film masterpieces. It has been booked for a two-week engagement at the above theater, starting from August 27. The Regent opened with "The Girl Without A Soul," in which Viola Dana is the attractive heroine, this picture already having won local approval. During the last part of the week Mary Anderson will be the star in "Divorcee." For the opening week of its new season the Strand is offering the ever-popular Douglass Fairbanks in "Down to Earth". This will be replaced in the latter part of the week by "The Law of the Land", another new production in which Olga Petrova appears. At the Arcadia this week is H. B. Warner in "God's Man", a gripping film by George Bronson Howard. The Palace has one of its best attractions of the season in the presentation of the new Herbert Brenon picture, "The Lone Wolf,' from the well known novel by Louis Joseph Vance. This cast is headed by Hazel Dawn and Bert Lytell. The Victoria will divide the week, opening with "The Silent Witness", in which Gertrude McCoy is the heroine. This will be followed on Thursday by Mme. Petrova in "To the Death", in which she appears as Blanca, a Corsican girl. "Redemption" a Success.

Philadelphia, Pa.—At the Forrest theater the screen production, "Redemption", with Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, has reached its last week. The presentation of Evelyn Nesbit in pictures has excited an interest only equaled by the appreciation of her work. The picture has proven very popular. The story of the film is built largely around the star's own tragic experience and critics say that accounts for the realistic way in which she plays. Miss Nesbit has proved herself a very earnest artist and the public is recognizing her as such.

NEWARK, N. J.—After several months of extensive remodeling and renovating the Newark theater, at 195 Market street, will reopen its doors September 2 to an invited audience composed of city officials, press representatives and others to the number of 2,500. The theater in its new dress is hardly recognizable.

The property on which the show house is situated was sold two years ago by the H. C. Miner estate to the Beaver & Market Realty Corporation, of which Max Spiegel is president and Edward Spiegel acting director. The concern has spent over $400,000 in improving the theater, which has been practically reconstructed, steel and reinforced concrete being the principal materials used.

The proscenium arch has been set back to provide larger capacity, the old boxes have been removed and boxes of a recent design have been substituted and the old gallery and balcony have been replaced by one large balcony. The inaugural attraction is Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

Wilmington, N.C., 5 Cent Shows Charge 10

Jitney Theater Raises Its Price Under Stress of War Times—Old Days Recalled When a Show Was Somewhat Different from Now.

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—Effective next Monday, Sept. 3, the Bijou, which has the honor of having been the first motion picture house in the South, and which has the unique record of never having changed admission charges of strictly five cents during the twelve years of existence, will change its policy and increase admission price to ten cents.

The Bijou was started in a tent on the same site of the present building, by Messrs. Howard & Wells, pioneers in the motion field in the South. Sawdust carpeted the floor, a few incandescents strung from pole to pole, were the illumination, and in winter a big coal heater gave the heat, and it had a phonograph ballyhoo out front. In its early days, before the public had learned to grasp the meaning of the flashing pictures, the operator acted as spieler, yelling from the porthole of the booth a description of the action as it was unfolded on the screen. Three reels of pictures was then considered a whale of a show, and only one reel was changed daily, giving one new reel and one repeater every day. An illustrated song, of course, was necessary to complete the program, together with that other relic of a prehistoric past, a slide bearing the reading: "Just One Minute Please, to Change Reels." The Bijou building was erected on the same lot five years ago, and has been one of the most successful theaters in the South, from which the owners have enlarged their activities to the point where they control all five of the Wilmington theaters at present.

Prosperity Comes to Charlotte, N. C.

Charlotte, N. C.—Charlotte last week enjoyed their first season of "war prosperity" attributable to the immense army of workmen employed at the cantonment grounds erecting the mammoth city for the forty thousand soldiers who will soon invade the place for training. The first pay day for the three thousand workmen was Saturday, September 25, and $130,000 was loaded on to a large van from the Realty National Bank, and escorted by soldiers with drawn bayonets was taken to the cantonment camp office where it was distributed to the men. Saturday night a general invasion of the city took place and the shows did the biggest business in their careers, records being smashed all down the line. Proprietors of Charlotte's theaters are very optimistic over the outlook for the biggest season in the history of the city, with the coming next month of the soldiers and theatrical stocks are on a big boom.

"Womanhood" Breaks Record of Strand.

Fayetteville, N. C.—Manager H. T. Drake of the Strand, Fayetteville's most modern and newest theater, reports all house records broken with "Womanhood" this week, due to co-operation of the War Department in putting it over big. Mr. Drake notified the Adjutant General at Washington of his date, and Corporal Williams was sent down from Washington to assist in staging this mammoth patriotic spectacle in a proper manner. A tent was rigged up in the lobby of the theater, with stacked guns, bayonets and small cannon much in evidence. Mr. Drake is attending the convention at Ocean View, Va., this week.

DETROIT JOTTINGS.

The formal opening of the New Adams theater, Detroit, devoted to stock and the property of John H. Kunsky, took place Saturday, Sept. 1, to big crowds. R. G. McGaw is the house manager for Mr. Kunsky.

Milton Bryor, formerly Pathe salesman in Detroit, has been transferred to Chicago.

George W. Weeks, division manager at Detroit for Foursquare pictures, is back from Chicago, where he had a conference with M. H. Hoffman.

Unless granted exemption it looks very much as if A. I. Shapiro, Goldwyn manager at Detroit, will see training within the next 30 days, inasmuch as he is in the first selective draft and passed an excellent physical examination.

Jules Levy, now covering the state for General, has booked service into 90 per cent. of the houses he calls on, which is a mighty good record.

Earl H. Rathbun, of the State Film Co., Detroit, has been examined for the first draft, but will probably be exempted owing to dependents.

Detroit Operators Dissatisfied With Scale

Demand Increase in Wages of From $3 to $5 a Week—Got Increase Last Year—Put Joker About Rejecting Slides in Demand.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—A serious problem confronting the motion picture business of Detroit right now is the demand of the union operators for increased wages, a new schedule of hours and several other demands that are meeting with opposition from the exhibitors. The latter have been holding daily conferences, some with members of the union in an endeavor to come to some amicable understanding, but up to the time of writing no final agreement had been reached from both sides.

In the first place, the increase in wages amounts to from $3 to $5 per week. Last year the unions were granted an increase, and the new agreement is for one year only. Then there is a schedule of hours which is not considered fair to the industry for the reason that some theaters operate on a different schedule of hours than called for in the agreement. Then again the union demands 80 cents per hour for all overtime, with not less than $2 for extra matinees and not over three hours' work. Another clause in the contract gives the union the final right to reject any slides to be thrown on the screen other than the regulation theater slide. This is resented by exhibitors, who feel that they have a right to be the final judge of what goes on their screen, being their property and not that of the operators' union. However, this is a clause which will be readily stricken out, inasmuch as it was put in the agreement only as a "joker," as one operator expressed it.

Exhibitors grant that the operators are entitled to some wage concessions, but they also feel that inasmuch as they are now paying increased taxes, increased film rental, and that last year the operators refused to carry film, putting them to an expense of $3.50 per week extra, they are going pretty near the limit. We trust that by the time our next letter is ready the whole matter will be satisfactorily adjusted on both sides.

Two More Theaters May Be Started.

Detroit, Mich.—A number of new theaters are contemplated for the city of Detroit, which is very encouraging to the industry in the face of building conditions, such as the high prices for materials, labor and the uncertainty of getting orders property filled.

The DeVoe Construction Co., with offices at 521 Book building (a Chicago company, which recently opened Detroit offices), are considering the erection of a theater seating 1,800 on Grand River avenue, about a mile past the Grand Boulevard, in a district that is growing very rapidly. They plan to own and operate the enterprise.

Another theater is under consideration for the east side by the Schram Amusement Co., who now operate the Bijou, Monroe and Bernhardt theaters, and who are building the Farnum theater in Hamtramck district.

Theaters under construction right now in Detroit are the Farnum, the DeLuxe, one at Fort and Military, and another in Springwells for J. L. Selling.

Palace Theater at Flint Has Premier.

Flint, Mich.—The Palace theater, in Flint, Mich., was officially opened on Thursday evening, August 30, with vaudeville and pictures. Several dozen Detroit exhibitors and exchange managers were on hand for the opening to extend felicitations to Col. W. S. Butterfield, the owner. Frank Butterfield is the house manager. The new Palace seats about 1,500 on two floors, although most of the seats occupy the main floor. The booth is 24 by 50 feet and is equipped with Power's machines and a Hertner transverter. Most of the equipment was installed by Ray Branch of the United Theater Equipment Co. The Hertner transverter was installed by M. S. Bailey, the New Michigan representative. The policy will be six acts of vaudeville and short reels of film. Quite a crowd of noted theatrical men from Chicago and New York were also on hand for the opening.

Exchanges Moving Into Film Building.

Detroit, Mich.—The first exchange to move into the new film building, Detroit, at John, R and Elizabeth streets, will be the Mutual. Next will follow the K-E-S-E and possibly Pathe. By the 1st of October most of the exchanges in town will be over there, exclusive of Paramount, Metro and the John H. Kunsky enterprises. The building is the finest of its kind in the country, with fireproof steel and concrete vaults, safes and everything right up to date to conform to the building code.

M. S. Bailey Exploiting Hertner Transverter.

Detroit, Mich.—M. S. Bailey, formerly manager of the Universal branch in Detroit, is back in the picture business, but this time in the supply end of it. He is also president of The Metropolitcan Co., specializing in cartoon film advertising. Mr. Bailey has offices at 908 Peter Smith building, and has already secured the exclusive state agency for the Hertner Transverter, made in Cleveland. He is going to make a strong drive for business and has already made several important sales. J. H. Chambers, sales manager for Hertner products, was in Detroit last week and closed up the deal with Mr. Bailey. The latter has other lines for which he is now endeavoring to secure the Michigan sole agency.

O. Henry and Other Short Films in Big Demand.

Detroit, Mich.—Dave Prince, manager of the General Film, Detroit, is confident that short subjects are coming back. He said to the World: "We are doing an enormous business on O. Henry, Stingaree and Black Cat subjects, all two reels each, and we expect to do equally as well with the new four-reel Falcon Features and the new four-reel O. Henry subjects. I don't say that exhibitors want a program of short subjects seven nights a week, but surely out of the seven they can easily devote two nights to such a program, and give their patrons something away from the long feature. The best indication that short subjects are coming back is the big business our exchange is doing."

Interesting News Notes from Detroit.

J. M. Duncan, manager Vitagraph exchange, Detroit, reports heavy bookings on "The Fighting Trail."

M. W. McGee, manager Majestic theater, Detroit, returned August 28 from a two-weeks' motoring trip to Chicago.

J. O. Brooks, manager of the Madison Film exchange, Detroit, reports that bookings are heavy for fall and winter on "The Crisis," "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "Idle Wives" and "On Trial." Mr Brooks, by the way, will also be special field representative for the Columbia Booking exchange, another Kunsky enterprise, which will book vaudeville to theaters.

Buffalo Feels Need of Exchange Building

Fifteen or More Exchanges Now in the City Are Scattered—Film Center Would Add Efficiency and Solve Rent Prob lems.

By James A. McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The opinion has frequently been expressed that Buffalo is sorely in need of a film exchange building. This city has developed into a live film center in the past few years. The fifteen or more exchanges are scattered here and there about the downtown business section, and it is generally conceded that for efficiency reasons they would have many special advantages if concentrated under one roof.

Some other cities the size of Buffalo boast of such buildings, whose tenants are delighted with the benefits derived from having the film industry so centralized. The exhibitors, express companies and the exchange men are quick to realize that this concentration offers advantages over Buffalo's plan of having the exchanges spread over a wide area. Buffalo's capitalists are often alert when it comes to dropping their surplus coin into some wildcat venture, but they seem to sink into a state of coma when urged to consider the erection of a fireproof film exchange building in this city.

Some of the local exchange men say their present facilities are adequate, while others claim their locations are far from satisfactory. New exchanges coming to Buffalo often have a great difficulty in finding suitable quarters. Many of the landlords object to the presence of film in their buildings on the ground that it means a sharp advance in the insurance rates. They say that film vaults, no matter how fireproof, are objected to by the other tenants.

It is said a new "film building" in Buffalo would be a paying investment from the beginning and would soon have its full quota of tenants. Such a structure, it is said, would attract more exchanges to this city, and as competition is the life of trade, such an enterprise would thus give a powerful impetus to the local film industry.

H. E. Lotz Heads Buffalo Triangle.

Buffalo, N. Y.—H. E. Lotz has been appointed manager of the Triangle Film, Buffalo. Mr. Lotz, who was born in Buffalo, left this city twelve years ago to enter the moving picture business in the West. He was with the General Film Co. for two years in the capacity of general manager in Canada, and had supervision of all the Canadian branches. Later he came to the United States as special representative of the same company in the east and south. Last year Mr. Lotz resigned from the General to become branch manager of the Pathe in San Francisco.

Tag Day Nuisance Condemned.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Buffalo Chamber of Commerce, of which some of the moving picture men are members, has adopted a resolution against "tag day," conducted in the streets for charitable purposes. Local showmen for a long time have been opposed to "tag days." These were quite the vogue not very long ago and were so overworked that they became a nuisance. Solicitors were accustomed to run rampant in the streets, hold up citizens for funds, follow them into the lobbies of the theaters and elsewhere, and hold up business men and their staffs. Local theatrical men realize that unscrupulous persons have been using "tag days" as a means of collecting and pocketing funds and condemn the system as no longer coutenanced by progressive cities.

Buffalo Expects Good Fall Business.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Buffalo film men are alive with enthusiasm for the coming season. There is every indication that business through Western New York will be brisk and attractive. One of the new films commanding attention is "The Slacker," released by the Metro. This new war picture has proved a wonderful aid in securing recruits in Buffalo. The Metro plans to release one big feature a month. The K-E-S-E reports that the Little Mary McAllister pictures, "Do Children Count " are proving a success.

Changes in K-E-S-E Buffalo Staff.

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. V. Allen has been transferred from the New York office of the K-E-S-E as assistant to Louis Green, Buffalo manager. L. A. Schaeffer, formerly booker, has been appointed salesman to work out of the Buffalo office of the K-E-S-E.

Have Responded to Bugle's Call.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Among the patriotic young film men who have answered the "bugle call" are H. Lawrence, Isadore Wartikowski and John Child of Buffalo. Mr. Lawrence is a salesman for the Mutual, Buffalo, and Mr. Wartikowski was night shipper on the same force. Mr. Child has been with the World Film for two years. He left Saturday for New York City. George Landis, formerly of Chicago and Indianapolis, is taking Mr. Child's place, covering Western New York.

Cleveland News Letter

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

A Romance in Cleveland's Filmdom.

CLEVELAND, O.—The fade out in the last reel of a real moving picture romance occurred in Cleveland last Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Helen Muckley, photoplay editor of The Leader, became Mrs. John DeKoven Hilt, formerly photoplay editor of that paper, who recently received a commission as a lieutenant in the officers' reserve.

Miss Muckley met Mr. Hill when he was "doing" movies about a year ago and she was working in the Sunday department of the paper. She wished to write about films, so Mr. Hill took her to screenings and soon she was assisting him in his daily work.

Whether this was a "labor of love" or duties imposed by the managing editor, we won't say, but along about last Valentine Day Mr. Hill presented Miss Muckley with a handsome engagement ring as her valentine. Miss Muckley immediately started to wear it—in the little plush box, so no one working on the paper or film men saw it. The engagement was kept a secret until last Wednesday, when Lieutenant Hill returned from the officers' camp at Fort Ben Harrison, Indiana, and obtained the wedding license. The same day in St. John's Episcopal Church the wedding occurred, and Mrs. Hill, who had just returned from a vacation the previous week, plunged into her work, forgetting any such thing as a honeymoon.

New Gaiety Theater Has Its Premier.

Cleveland.—Max Lefkowich, one of the pioneer exhibitors of Cleveland, was in his glory Thursday night, August 23, when his new Gaiety theater was formally opened to the public.

Max has operated the little Wonderland theater on East Ninth stret for many years. The new house, which seats close to 500, is only a few doors south of the Wonderland.

The Gaiety has all the modern improvements. There is a long lobby leading to the auditorium, which is in the rear of the building.

At the opening Max showed the Standard Film Company's production of "The Girl Who Doesn't Know", with Marie Empress in the title role. The equipment was furnished by the Oliver Motion Picture Company.

Jewel Productions Opens Offices.

Cleveland.—The new Jewel Productions, Inc., have opened up quarters here at 812 Columbia building, in charge of A. J. Mentz, a well-known film man of the Middle West.

The first production, "Come Through", will be ready for release shortly.

Leon J. Bamberger, who is establishing the offices, also has announced that an exchange will be located in Cincinnati.

The Stillman Will Remain Picture House.

Cleveland.—Marcus Loew came to Cleveland recently and left the same night, after looking over his latest theater project—the Stillman.

Mr. Loew announced that the Stillman would not show vaudeville, but will continue pictures and the prices will be lowered. He also stated that Jack Kuhn, of New York City, has been made manager of the theater.

Elyria Theater Wants New Name.

Elyria, O.—Melton Phelos, manager of the Strand theater, Elyria, together with Chris Neufer, Sam Sadaris, H. A. Dykeman and John Grumbos, have taken over the Elyria theater, formerly the Opera House and will show pictures in it. They will install new equipment and a prize has been offered for the best name for the house to be suggested to the Daily Telegram, an Elyria newspaper.

Trade Notes in Cleveland.

Cleveland.—Agnes Eyre, a young moving picture actress, who was seen in Cleveland last week in "To the Death", featuring Mme. Petrova, is spending her vacation in Cleveland, staying at the Ford residence, on Euclid Heights.

Cleveland.—The Consolidated Film Company, Cleveland, now has a complete laboratory and an expert cameraman, who is taking many local pictures for exhibitors in northern Ohio.

Dayton Weekly News Letter

By Paul J. Gray, Alhambra Theater Building.

Clay E. Brehm to Manage Keith's Strand.

DAYTON, OHIO.—According to an announcement made Saturday, the 25th, Clay E. Brehm has been appointed manager of the Strand theater here. Mr. Brehm is very popular in Dayton through having served in managerial capacities with the World Film and also the Universal Film. He was at one time manager of the World Film Exchange in New York and made quite a success with it. The Strand is one of Dayton's largest theaters and it takes a twenty-four man staff to keep things going fast in a theater that seats eighteen hundred, with balcony and gallery. The house is operated by the Keith interests and runs Paramount and Artcraft pictures, first run exclusively. If advance notices are lived up to the Strand will be one of Dayton's best managed theaters.

Little Things Are Often Best Publicty.

Dayton, O.—A novel way to restore lost articles to his patrons is practiced by Bert Frala, manager of the Alhambra theater in Dayton. On a big night when the house was filled a small boy turned in a diamond ring that he found in the theater. Not knowing who the ring belonged to and knowing that the party that lost the ring was probably not aware of it, Mr. Fiala quickly made a slide which read as follows:

Did you lose a diamond ring?
We found one.

About two minutes after the slide came off the screen a lady came to the box office and described the ring perfectly. The boy received a liberal reward and the theater too, for next day everybody within a radius of ten squares of the theater knew of the incident and advertised the theater in a way which no paid advertising can do.

Mr. Fiala is to be complimented on his quick action and also for creating something better than a press story for publicity.

New Dayton Theater Nearly Ready.

Dayton, O.—The new Dayton is rapidly nearing completion and will soon be opened. The Dayton will seat 2,500 and will be the most modern theater in Ohio.

Jottings in Dayton.

Dayton, O.—Assistant Manager George Wilson, of the Standard Film Co.'s' office in Cincinnati, was in Dayton last week and reports that the Billy West comedies are going strong in this section. While in Dayton Mr. Wilson secured eight contracts for the Billy West comedies.

Dayton, O.—Through having held a private exhibition of their latest serial, "The Fighting Trail", at the Globe theater last week, the Vitagraph Co. has contracted with quite a few Dayton exhibitors to run this picture in its entirety. This is a new departure in Dayton and was appreciated by exhibitors here, as a few of them are too busy to go to Cincinnati, where the nearest Vitagraph exchange is.

Globe Films Limited Establishes Offices

Arthur Cohen Heads Film Corporation—Office in Rialto Building on Yonge Street, Toronto—Personnel of the Globe Staff.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, East, Toronto.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—A Canadian development of prime importance has been the establishment of the Globe Films, Limited, with officers in Toronto and Montreal. The chief of staff is Arthur Cohen, who is also head ofthe Globe Securities, Limited, operating the Globe and Rialto theaters, Toronto. In addition, Mr. Cohen is the "resigned president" of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Ontario. He is not the whole works, however, as he has gathered about him some of the most able exchange men in the country. His associates include Phil. Kauffman as vice-president, who was formerly general sales manager for the Famous Players Film Service, and Harry Kauffman, of Montreal, who has become general manager of the Globe company. Harry Kauffman remains in Montreal.

The Globe interests recently acquired possession of the second and third floors of the Rialto building, 219 and 221 Yonge street, Toronto. During the past few months the company has absorbed two Canadian exchanges, All-Features and the Peerless, and has also secured the Canadian rights for Ivan and King Bee releases, in addition to a number of state rights attractions, chief of which is "Redemption". The company already has four prints of "Redemption" in constant use in Eastern Canada alone. A new De Luxe edition of ""The Spoilers" has also been secured for early release. One of the principal bookings for "Redemption" is that of the St. Denis theater, Montreal, the largest theater in Canada, for the week of September 17. The Photodrome, Toronto, also took this feature for two weeks, starting August 27.

When Phil Kauffman left the Famous Players Film Service he was presented with a large diamond stick pin by fellow officials and employees. He was succeeded as general sales manager by L. Soskin, who has been with the Famous Players for a considerable period. The Globe company has also closed with Mr. Humble, a Toronto writer and advertising specialist, as manager of the publicity department. There are two road men atached to the Toronto office also.

Globe Films, Limited, is in a position to negotiate for large or small state rights propositions for the whole of Canada. President Cohen is particularly anxious to secure the largest independent releases available.

A recent change has been made in the management of the Rialto theater, Toronto, which is closely associated with Globe interests. W. J. Stewart, formerly manager of the Casino, Ottawa, has become manager of the Rialto in succession to R. E. Willis, who has returned to Winnipeg to manage the Rex. The manager of the Globe theater, Toronto, is T. Coulson.

The plans of the Globe company include the opening of branches in Western Canada before the end of the present year.

Herman Fischer Will Look After U. State Rights.

Toronto.—Herman Fischer formerly manager of the United Photo-Plays, Limited, has joined the force of the Canadian Universal. Mr. Fischer has taken charge of the State Rights Features Department at the Universal headquarters here and will look after the distribution of a number of attractions, the Canadian Rights Features Department of the "U". These include the special releases, "God's Law" and "Come Through". Century Comedies, featuring Alice Howell, will also be handled in Canada by the State Rights Features Department of the "U". Special managers for the distribution of these pictures from Universal branches from Coast to Coast in Canada are to be appointed, it is announced.

Attractive Fronts and Favorable Business.

Toronto.—A very noticeable increase in attention to lobby displays by exhibitors of Toronto has taken place during the past three or four weeks. Most everybody is doing it now and the theater managers are enthusiastic in their belief that the attractive fronts have caused a substantial increase in business. Judging by statements of various managers, there is scarcely a theater in town which has not enjoyed far greater patronage this summer than during the 1916 hot season. Not one Toronto theater had a special lobby display during the summer of 1916, and therefore attention to this detail is more than probably responsible for increased attendance this year.

Toronto theaters which have had special lobby decorations this summer include the Strand, Rialto, Globe, Photodrome, His Majesty's, Red Mill and Colonial. Outside of the big Regent, these are practically all of the downtown theaters of the city.

T. J. Peart Starts Theater at New Toronto.

Toronto.—T. J. Peart, 591 Indian road, Toronto, has started the construction of a two-story moving picture theater and office building at Fifth street and Lake Shore road, New Toronto. The structure, which will cost $20,000, will include the theater, three stores and accommodation for a number of offices. The theater will seat 400 people. New Toronto has become a hustling industrial center, several large factories having been erected in the vicinity during the past year. The theater building will be of brick construction, with hardwood floors, etc., and will be ready before Christmas, it is announced.

Sam J. Massoud Buys Empress Theater.

Toronto.—Sam J. Massoud has purchased the Empress theater, 317 Yonge street, Toronto, and has made a number of improvements in the house. The ventilation arrangements have been improved and new equipment includes an organ costing $2,500. Massoud has decided on two changes of program each week and performances are given from 1 p. m. to 11 p. m. During his opening week Manager Massoud gave a nine-reel show.

Notes of the Trade in Ontario.

Orangeville, Ont.—Dr. T. G. Phillips, 185 St. Clair avenue, West, Toronto, has offered his moving picture theater at Orangeville, Ontario, for sale or rent. Orangeville is a wide-awake Ontario town and the house would make a fine opening for a hustler.

Toronto.—Announcement is made by General Manager Mulhall, of the Atlas Films of Canada, Limited, that A. Dunbar is no longer associated with that company as a director.

Toronto.—Harold Hitchinson, formerly of the Toronto World, has become assistant treasurer of the Strand theater, Toronto.

Toronto.—Many Toronto exhibitors witnessed the special presentation of the first four episodes of the new Greater Vitagraph serial, "The Fighting Trail", at the Strand theater, Toronto, on Wednesday evening, August 22.

Memphis Foresees Good Picture Season

Road Shows Have Been Hit by War Conditions—Special Shows Will Have their Place; But the Mainstay Will Probably Be Pictures.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—Operators of theaters playing big stage productions are of practically the same opinion as the vaudeville and moving picture managers in West Tennessee, to the extent that the road shows in 1917-1918 will suffer materially from the war and its consequences. This city being in a direct line of the high-class productions from Chicago to New Orleans, will receive its share of the best shows, but the general opinion pravails that another unusually successful season for the moving picture and combination vaudeville and picture houses will arrive with the cold weather.

All three of the larger Memphis theaters will be open in September. The Lyceum, under the local management of Mr. Stainback, is on the Loew Circuit, and will step from its summer to the winter season shortly. The Orpheum, on the circuit of the same name, opened its winter season August 27, and will continue to run under the active supervision of Manager Arthur Lane. The moving pictures at this house have been one of the bright spots on its program all season, and under no circumstances could the management consider removing this service from the daily performances. News and travel pictures have in the past proven a stimulus to patronage. The policy of the Orpheum will be as it has been for the past several winters, namely two performances every day, consisting of three sets of moving pictures and several vaudeville acts.

Manager Frank Gray will be in charge of the Lyric. This house will operate as a legitimate, but it is understood that a few of the largest screen productions may be worked into the bookings as the opportunities arise.

The straight moving picture houses, too numerous to mention, will continue to run as usual, with a number of improvements contemplated for the larger uptown houses. These, in addition to the new theaters put up during the summer, will furnish a battery of substantial moving picture shows for Memphis.

Open Booking Also Has Its Disadvantages.

Nashville, Tenn.—In conferring with local theater managers as to the respective merits of open booking and contract program service, it has been pointed out by one Nashville manager that while there are a number of advantages to be derived from the open booking plan, at the same time it carries its disadvantages.

"For instance," said the theater man, "I have just returned from the Southern film market centers, where I went into booking arrangements with a number of exchanges for the coming season. I found at one exchange that service which I formerly paid a moderate price for had materially increased. It looks as if they had set out to make up on the two good pictures they made each month what they would naturally lose on the bad ones. Of course, everybody will pick out the two good ones each month, which will rush the number of prints in circulation, and create a one-sided arrangement, so to speak." This is a feature of the open booking question which might not have appealed to many of the theater managers, but is worthy of note. The majority of the Tennessee managers, however, are strongly in favor of open booking.

Strand Will Reopen With 35-Cent Seats.

Nashville, Tenn.—Manager Carson Bradford announces that the Strand theater will close on September 3 for a period of one week, during which time a complete remodeling and renovation will be undertaken. A number of high-class attractions have been lined up for the reopening, the first of which will be "Within the Law." Manager Bradford intends to book a big Vitagraph picture after the house is re opened, and will institute a 35-cent admission price—the first of the kind to be charged in Nashville, but the picture will be nine or ten reels in length and based upon an unusually strong theme.

Fire Inspectors at Memphis Busy.

Memphis, Tenn.—Seeking to reduce the possibility of fire loss to a minimum, a score of trained underwriting engineers, representing the Conservation Association of Tennessee, will conduct an immediate survey of local warehouses, grain elevators, groceries, store rooms, and adjacent moving picture theaters, being authorized by the United States Government to take these steps as a means of protection to the food supply of the country. It was point ed out that the loss by fire resulting from burning film in projection machines has caused fires over the United States from year to year, and while modern apparatus has brought this loss down to a much lower figure than in the past, at the same time the danger incident to certain moving picture theaters was apparent.

Cotton States Convention Filmed.

Memphis, Tenn.—The entertainment and business features incident to the convention of the Cotton States Convention Association will be recorded in moving pictures by a cameraman connected with the Majestic Amusement Company. A novelty in connection with the pictures will be the fact that all photography will be taken at night by the aid of flares, being in charge of D. B. Griswold, of the Majestic company. The films will be displayed first at the Majectic theater, and later over the South.

Nashville Orpheum to Reopen.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Orpheum theater, under the management of William H. Moxon, will be opened to the public on September 10, instead of Labor Day, September 3, as previously planned. Mr. Moxon has been in New York, but will return shortly and set to work on his plans for the winter. Some minor repairs will be made to the theater, but the larger items, such as painting and redecorating, were attended to prior to its closing several months ago, and the interior is still in good shape.

Columbia Another Long Show Town.

Columbia, Tenn.—The Vogue theater of this town is another moving picture house showing from seven to nine reels for a ten-cent admission. A goodly sprinkling of comedy relieves the performance of any tediousness which might be prevalent if the entire show was composed of drama. A recent program consisted of two reels of the serial, "Patria," a two-reel Lonesome Luke, a single reel Big V Comedy, Pathe News Reel, and Mutt & Jeff Cartoon. Columbia is a good picture town all the year around.

War Time Prices for Seats in Louisville

Fifteen Cents or More for a Seat Is the Rule Now—Changes in Policy in Several of the Big Theaters—Ready for the Soldiers.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—All of the large theaters of Louisville are now charging war time prices with the exception of the Mary Anderson, and the management of that theater expects to increase the ante to fifteen cents within a few days, the matter being under consideration. The Alamo theater has gone from a dime to fifteen cents, while the Majestic has been getting fifteen cents and the Strand twenty cents for some time past.

Some Big Pictures Ready for Release in Louisville.

Louisville, Ky.—The Big Features Rights Corporation has secured several new pictures which will be released in this district shortly. The principal pictures are "On Trial," seven reels, state rights in Kentucky and Tennessee; "The Deemster," seven reels, state rights in Kentucky and Tennessee; "One Law for Both," in eight reels, Kentucky, Indiana and Tennessee; "Babbling Tongues," seven reels, Kentucky, Indiana and Tennessee; and "Two Men and A Woman," five reels, Kentucky and Tennessee. This list constitutes a formidable array of big new features, and coupled with the new Chaplin releases handled by the local company in this territory, gives a good list of material to book for the present time.

C. N. Koch Plans to Film Army Scenes.

Louisville, Ky.—C. N. Koch, manager of the Rex theater, recently returned from Clarksville, Tenn., where he made a two-reel picture of the Odd Fellows' home. Mr. Koch is now planning to make a series of army pictures at the local cantonment, these pictures to be released through the string of theaters controlled by the Broadway Amusement enterprises.

Louisville Ready for Soldiers.

Louisville, Ky.—The cantonment at Louisville has been completed, and drafted soldiers from Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois will be located here within a few days according to the press. It is estimated that between 40,000 and 50,000 men will be located here, and prospects are for the local moving picture theaters handling the largest business on record. It is thought that every theater in the downtown district, and all of those near the camp will do capacity business, while the few vacant theaters will be placed in operation as soon as the camp is occupied. Just now the outlook is far more favorable than ever before in the moving picture or other theatrical field.

Several Important Leases Expire.

Louisville, Ky.—As stated several weeks ago some big changes are likely to be made shortly in local moving picture circles. Starting September 1, the Walnut and Casino theaters were darkened. The lease of the Princess Amusement Co., on the Casino, the oldest Fourth avenue house in operation, expired on August 31. However, it is rumored that arrangements will be made to continue operations at the house. At the Walnut theater a two-year lease expired, and the owners refused to rent the house at the old figure except on a sixty-day clause in the lease and this was refused as it would make it impossible to book pictures ahead for any length of time.

Theater Jottings in Oklahoma.

By Kansas City News Service.

Bartlesville, Okla.—Carl Gregg has recently bought the Lyric theater here. He will open with "Within the Law" on September 3.

Geary, Okla.—Rex Dunn, of Shattuck, has recently purchased a moving picture theater at Geary.

Lawton, Okla.—The Temple, a new moving picture theater here, has been formally opened to the public.

Miami, Okla.—The Miami Business Men's League will lease the city park from the city for five years, upon which there will be erected an open-air theater.

Cincinnati News Letter.

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First Nat. Bk. Bldg., Cincinnati.

Myrtle Theater Will Become Store.

CINCINNATI, O.—The Myrtle theater, on Woodburn avenue, Walnut Hills, one of the smallest of the Hynicka holdings, has finally been disposed of, after being on the market for several years, and will no longer be used as a photoplay house. It has been leased by a florist. The house was one of the first picture theaters in the Walnut Hills district, and did fairly well until the popularity of the Orpheum, a few blocks away, took most of the business in that section.

"Four-Minute Men" at Cincinnati Theaters.

Cincinnati.—The "Four-Minute Men" are again at work in the moving picture houses, emphasizing the need for the whole community assisting the Government in the great work of carrying on the war. The following theaters are being visited by the speakers: The Strand, Forest, Orpheum, Keith's, Walnut, Norwood Plaza, Family, Lyric and Grand.

Cincinnati Film Men Pleased With Fox Method.

Cincinnati.—The announcement by the Fox Film Corporation that exhibitors' deposits hereafter are to draw four per cent. interest has been well received here, and bids fair to dispose of the irritation which the deposit system has caused, at least as far as this company is concerned. The chief objection of reliable exhibitors to the system has been that they were deprived of the use of their money, and the allowance of interest will meet this objection. Walter Lamford, head of the publicity department of the company, was in Cincinnati lately, visiting this among other western offices.

Notes of the Trade Around Cincinnati.

Cincinnati.—George M. Cohan in "Seven Keys to Baldpate", of the stage version of which he was the producer, was the Artcraft offering at the Walnut for a week, meeting with marked success, as Cohan appears in only a few film productions, and the public seem anxious to see the famous actor-author-composer-manager-producer.

Cincinnati.—The usual engagement of the Lyman H. Howe pictures, which serves to mark the end of the summer season of pictures at the Lyric and the beginning of the regular season, started on Sunday, August 26, the travel offerings of the Howe organization for this season being the remarkable pictures taken in the Antarctic regions by the Shackelford expedition. Higher prices prevail for this engagement than for the summer moving pictures, but the houses are always large.

Hamilton.—The Grand theater, which has had a splendid summer season of moving pictures, is being prepared for its regular winter season of vaudeville and pictures combined by complete redecorating, white and gold, with green draperies, furnishing an attractive color scheme. Manager Goodwin also announces that a larger orchestra than ever before will be employed.

Youngstown.—The management of the Grand Opera House reports a pronounced hit by the Metro patriotic production featuring Emily Stevens, "The Slacker".

Akron.—The marked success of the first week's engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Colonial was instrumental in bringing about a second week's run of the great feature. In spite of the high prices charged, ranging up to $1 at the afternoon performances and $1.50 at night, full houses were the rule during the entire run.

Camp Gordon Makes Boom City in Georgia

Atlanta Feels a Bit Left-Out Through Lack of Transportation to the Camp Site —Chamblee Becomes a City.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—While the people of Atlanta, and especially many moving picture exhibitors, are awaiting to find whether or not they are to be isolated from Camp Gordon by lack of transportation facilities, the people of Chamblee, Ga., are preparing to do what Atlanta expected to do—take care of the 40,000 soldiers who will begin arriving at Camp Gordon on September 5.

This became evident Wednesday when it was learned that over forty stores have already been built at Chamblee and between fifteen and twenty more are planned, that four motion picture houses and other amusements will be established, that two hotels have been projected and that what was little more than a hamlet is soon to be a thriving city in its own right.

Even more interesting was the statement by a citizen of Chamblee that these enterprises are in large measure being financed by business men in Macon, Jacksonville, Columbia, Chattanoga and cities other than Atlanta, and that these men are preparing to reap the "golden harvest" which Atlanta merchants and theatrical men expected to reap, but which they are not going to reap unless a way is provided for the soldiers to come eleven miles to the city of Atlanta.

It isn't that Chamblee wants to take anything away from Atlanta. On the contrary, the people of Chamblee would be delighted to see the Georgia Railway and Power Company build a double track extension. As proof of this fact, the Chamblee committee on public safety has invited the power company not to stop its extension on the edge of Chamblee, as it plans to do, but to continue the line right on up to the Chamblee depot. The town of Chamblee will be glad to give the power company a right-of-way through Chamblee.

Sixty days ago Chamblee, Ga., was only a mile in circumference and consisted of one main street, one postoffice, one depot and two stores. Now it has forty shops already established and is surveying and grading for fifteen more.

Camp Gordon has been the making of Chamblee, but even that which has been done could not have been done if the citizens of Chamblee had not been enterprising and farsighted enough to see what was coming, and patriotic enough to co-operate to the fullest with the Government authorities.

When the Government wanted to move some houses from the camp site of the Southern Railroad the people of Chamblee said "Go Ahead!" Now the Government has returned good for good by announcing that property owners can begin erecting permanent structures on the town side of the railroad, assured that the Government will not want this land.

H. R. Bannister Now Heads Atlanta K-E-S-E.

Atlanta, Ga.—Harry R. Bannister has been appointed manager of George Kleine's Kleine - Edison - Selig - Essanay branch at Atlanta, succeeding J. T. Ezell. Mr. Bannister possesses every qualification for making a successful manager, and it is expected that K-E-S-E service at Atlanta will do well under his direction.

C. A. Nathan Now With New York Concern.

One Four-Minute Man Sees His First Show.

COLUMBUS, IND.—In addition to doing many other things since the war broke out, patriotism has taken the Rev. W. H. Book, pastor of the Tabernacle Christian Church, of this city, to his first moving picture show.

The Rev. Book has always been opposed to the class of pictures shown frequently at local photoplay houses, and had the distinction of being about the only person in the city who had never attended a single show. But the call of his country came and he put patriotism first, and answered the call. He was selected as one of the "four-minute men" and spoke between reels last Saturday night at the Crystal theater.

The Rev. Book said he had seen moving pictures of religious work in churches, but last Saturday was his first experience inside a real moving picture theater. As it was his first opportunity he decided to make the best of it, arriving at the theater when the show started and remaining nearly the entire evening. Following the show, the Rev. Book said he spent a most enjoyable evening and was somewhat surprised to see the large number of his church members in attendance.

E. E. Norman, manager of the Crystal, and Ernest Rogers, manager of Crump's Theater, have agreed to the proposals of the local council of defense and have made arrangements to permit the four-minute men to make speeches at the theater any time the committee may ask.

Joe Gavin to Run the Isis Theater.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The recent announcement of the appointment of Joe Gavin as house manager of Barton & Olson's Isis Theater, on North Illinois street, is welcome news to legions of Indianapolis amusement patrons, whom Mr. Gavin has served for many years. Mr. Gavin began his theatrical career as treasurer for Dickson & Talbott, working in the old Grand and Park Theaters. When the Valentine Company secured the lease on English's opera house, some twenty years ago, Mr. Gavin was made resident manager. He was treasurer of the Indianapolis baseball club from 1886 to 1900, and again from 1908 to 1910. His last theatrical work was the management of the Illinois theater, of which he was the owner.

Progress Film a New Producing Company.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Progress Film Company, established recently with home offices in the Indiana Pythian building, in this city, has filed incorporation papers with the secretary of state to engage in the manufacture and production of motion picture plays. The capital stock is announced at $20,000. The directors are Louis M. Emmons, Carey L. Smith and Elizabeth D. Kimball.

The first photoplay to be filed by this concern, it is announced, will be entitled "Society". It is the plan in this film to depict society events of all kinds—events in which the acme of American fashions and styles may be shown as a further proof of the superiority of American fashions. "Society" will be filmed in this city and will be given its premier showing in the principal theaters of Indianapolis before being released throughout the country.

play used for the showing of "Womanhood", by W. F. Warneford, manager and owner of the Gem theater at Lawrenceburg, Ind. Mr. Warneford is one of the foremost exhibitors in the state and spends a great part of his time sitting up late at night figuring out attractive lobby displays for his theater. Judging from the success he is enjoying the most skeptical could be convinced that "advertising pays".

Goshen, Ind.—James Bourcas and S. Reynolds, motion picture exhibitors of South Bend, were in Indianapolis last week negotiating with H. F. Kidder for his double room on East Lincoln avenue, which was formerly a portion of the Irwin theater, destroyed by fire early last winter. If successful in closing the deal with Mr. Kidder the two men expect to open a modern motion picture theater in the place. An Elkhart exhibitor has also been trying to lease the room, it is reported.

Twin City Film Men Enjoy Big Picnic

Cold Drizzle Didn't Dampen Baseball or Other Outdoor Sports—Many Amusing Events on Program—Who Were and What They Did.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The front line had nothing on Spring Park, Lake Minnetonka, for activity Thursday, August 23, when Minneapolis and St. Paul exhibitors and exchangemen got together for their seventh annual picnic and field day. A damp polar breeze and a little damper drizzle failed to check the festivities and all of the events went off as per schedule. Hardly had the boat carrying the merrymakers from the street car to the island docked when ball players began to gather on the diamond and at the end of five innings of play Newton Davis' Bluebirds had warbled a three to nothing victory over Ira Mantske's pet exchangemen's aggregation. Frank Thayer, manager of the Calhoun theater, Minneapolis, and A. A. Hixon, Metro, made up the Bluebird battery, and this pair, aided by Mortensen's heavy clubbing, did much to put the Bluebirds on the long end of the score.

The other athletic events on the program brought out some sterling material. Lee Horn, Long Acre exchange boss, ran away from a good field in the 100-yard dash; Ira Mantske, Mutual, nosed out Horn in the 50-yard sprint, and Horn and Thayer came back and won the men's three-legged race hands down. Joe Cohen, Lagon, Minneapolis, won the fat men's wobble, otherwise known as a race. Mrs. Margaret Chambard, Art Dramas, was a double winner among the ladies. She was a victor in both the ladies' free for all and married women's races and finished second in the hop, skip and jump. Ethel Mortensen, Mutual, won the ball throwing contest, and Ethel Swanson, of the Selznick exchange, proved the best jumper among the feminine contingent. In a special professional 100-yard dash Fred Meyer, general manager, beat out Otto C. Stelzner, Minneapolis Star theater sprinter, in a neck-and-neck race. The two demons of the cinder paths raced on a winner-take-all basis. Mr. and Mrs. W. Al Steffes, of the Minneapolis Northern theater, were winners in a prize old-fashioned waltz contest. The Steffes plan to build a school with the prize money received and name it "Castles-on-the-Mississippi."

Mike Conhaim and a select bevy of bathing Venuses, Hugh C. Andress, Minneapolis Lyric manager; Eddie Westcott, Fox; Frank Burke, Westcott exchange; Harry Rathner, Selznick; Henry Breilein, Breilein theaters, St. Paul; Lew Francis, Dolly McCallum, Jack Elliott, Tom Hamlin, Clyde Hitchcock, Ira Mantske, George Law, Harry Cohen, Art Lund, Olga Mortensen, Bill Cutter, Henrietta Oftedahl and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Blotcke were among the many prominent film people much in evidence at the picnic.

H. J. Breilein Leases Arcade Theater.

St. Paul, Minn.—Henry J. Breilein, owner of the Verdi, Faust and Victoria theaters on University avenue here, has leased the Arcade theater on Dayton's Bluff. The Arcade, a two-year-old, handsome, neighborhood house, has been managed by William Cutter, former K-E-S-E roadman. William Maitland, Mr. Breilein's chief of staff, is expected to look after the Arcade's destinies.

Mr. Bromley has recently seen service with the Chicago Triangle and Fox exchanges. A few years back he was considered one of the greatest footbal linemen in the country.

A. A. Hixon Again on Metro Sales Force.

Minneapolis, Minn.—No permanent manager for the local Metro exchange has been appointed—yet. A. A. Hixon, former assistant manager of the exchange, has joined the sales force again. It is rumored he may be put in charge of the Milwaukee office, recently vacated by Daddy E. H. Hoyt, resigned.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Bayley, of the Greater Vitagraph, has booked "The Fighting Trail" in the Minneapolis Pantages and St. Paul Hippodrome theaters for first run.

Levi Chandler, former Universal and Bluebird exchange man, has been appointed assistant manager of the New Garrick theater, St. Paul, Minn.

New Policies in Crescent City Theater

New Orleans Has Several Picture Houses of the Highest Grade—What Is Being Offered—Smaller Houses Dropping Out.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—With the return of the summer vacationists the outlook for the motion picture business for the coming season takes on a most hopeful appearance. Marked changes are to be noted in the lineup of theaters and in the policies of their owners and managers. There is a growing death list of store shows. Alert managers are bending every endeavor to present attractive theaters and the best programs possible during the winter months.

It behooves them to do so. With the opening of the magnificent Strand theater a few weeks ago, a new mark was set for the exhibitors. The Strand is managed by men who make the showing of pictures a profession and not a mere occupation. Success is their natural reward. The Diamond theater has made a record for itself and its bank accouht by adhering to the fixed policy of showing only such pictures as meet with the personal approval of the management, regardless of the picture's relation to any or no program. The Triangle theater's manager started on the road to much greater achievements when he opened the house. In fact Ernst Boehringer may be regarded as the pioneer in modernizing the motion picture business in New Orleans.

Policy of Leading Houses.

On September 1 Marcus Loew launched the Crescent theater as a motion picture enterprise, using vaudeville acts at certain hours of the day as an added attraction. A feature production and single and special reels will make up the program. The opening offerings were of Paramount service, and other brands will also probably be shown later on. The Crescent will be one of the units in the Loew circuit of theaters.

Upon the same day the Palace theater which is the old Triangle, made notable as a motion picture house under the Boehringer regime, opened as a motion picture theater under the direction of the Orpheum circuit. The program of each of these theaters is to begin showing pictures at 11 o'clock in the morning and to continue until 11 at night. At stated intervals vaudeville acts will be introduced and prices are to range from 5 to 30 cents.

The Strand theater is presenting a program of feature and special pictures interspersed with high class music under the direction of Don Phillipini at the head of thirty-five expert musicians. The Strand entertainment is very similar to that of the Rialto theater in New York. Every appliance of the pleasure and comfort of the patrons of the Strand has been provided and the house has leaped into immediate and widespread popularity. Managing Director Cornelius was the first motion picture theater manager to inaugurate the noonday musical concert, rendered by the full Phillipini orchestra and the great pipe organ, and these concerts have attained statewide reputation and incidentally have proven to be a very noticeable aid to the cash box. The Pearce interests are tightening up their exhibition forces and are planning an aggressive campaign with special features for the winter months.

New Liberty Theater Coming Along.

Still another element to be reckoned with before the season is ended will be the Liberty theater, which is being built for the Boehringer Amusement Company under the supervision of Ernst Boehringer. Work was advancing rapidly upon this theater when the government commandeered the steel frames for the structure and an unavoidable delay was thus caused. Manager Boehringer took the delay with greater good humor than he usually displays when his enterprises fail to run smoothly, and he is pleased to do one of his "bits" to help his country in this manner. A reserve force of workmen are held in readiness to proceed with the building upon the moment of the arrival of new steel, which is now on the way.

In addition to the activities in motion picture circles in the downtown sections the suburban houses are manifesting marked activity. Much improving and remodeling is under way and the new and pretentious houses recently opened are building up remarkably liberal patronage

Pearce Interests Take the Dreamworld.

New Orleans, La.—On October 1 the Josiah Pearce & Son's interests will take over the Dreamworld theater at the corner of Canal and St. Charles streets, but no announcement has been made as to the future policy in the operation of the house. The Dreamworld is one of the pioneer houses of the city and in its early days was a good money maker for its owner, Herman Fichtenberg. Later it passed under the control of the Saenger Amusement Company, along with the Picto, a small theater adjoining. The Saenger interests still control the Picto and rumors of new enterprises are numerous.

Notes of Interest in the Crescent City.

New Orleans, La.—The Dreamland, one of the Pearce smaller houses, on St. Charles street, was closed on August 23 and the furnishings were removed. The lease on the building had expired.

The Symphony orchestra of the Strand theater, under the direction of Don Phillipini, at the request of Mayor Behman, of New Orleans, gave a concert at Camp Nicholas on Sunday, August 26, at which over 2,000 soldiers and their friends were delighted. Manager Cornelius of the Strand is endeavoring to arrange another concert at the earnest solicitation of the soldiers.

The Avenues theater, which was the old Mercedes, on St. Cloud street, has been remodeled and reopened. This house is in a good suburban neighborhood and it has been enjoying a liberal patronage since its rehabilitation.

C. E. Tandy, at the head of the Southern Paramount Pictures Corporation, which controls the output of the Paramount production for eleven Southern states, was a recent visitor to New Orleans.

The Diamond Film Company has opened a suite of magnificent offices in the Audubon building and the work of renovating the studios on Bayou St. John is well under way. A contract for the making of the first five-reel feature has been signed with Richard C. Travers and negotiations are under way for securing the services of a leading lady. The best actress that money can secure is sought.

Houston's Hour of Terror---Texas Notes

Exhibitor Polmanakes of the Crown Theater Tells of Turmoil When Negro Troops Run Amuck—Drought Partly Broken.

By Douglas Hawley, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—Theodore Polmanakos, of the Crown at Houston, told of the reign of terror which existed there as a result of the outbreak of negro troops. Much was carried in the papers, says the Houston theater man, but only those who were in the city know the actual feeling which existed and the actual terrorization of the people which resulted.

"'Twould have made a picture full of action, wouldn't it?" it was suggested to Mr. Polmanakos.

"It might have", he said, "but it would have required a man nervier even than Charley Van Loan's Gabby to have ground a crank while the actual shooting was going on."

The city was soon quiet after the outbreak, says Mr. Polmanakos, and within a few hours was back at its normal temperature, despite the seriousness of the situation. It will be remembered that negro troopers of the twenty-fourth infantry, stationed here, ran amuck, and that seventeen people were killed.

"Down to Earth" Makes Record at Old Mill.

Dallas.—Douglas Fairbanks in "Down to Earth", played to the biggest business Hulsey's Old Mill theater has done in some time, on its five-day run here. Observant local critics declared it to be the best thing the versatile player has done.

As this is written, Arbuckle's "Wedding Night" is beginning a run at the same theater, which bids fair to set a new mark for that cherubic scion of avoirdupois.

J. D. Wheelan Comes Back with Newport Theater.

Dallas.—Away back in the pioneer days, when folks scoffed and predicted that the motion picture "craze" was an ephemeral thing of faddish conceit, doomed to exist for but a span, J. D. Wheelan entered the business as a local exhibitor. The ephemeral didn't ephem, and Wheelan got rich. He got out of the business later, and has been taking life easy. But now he's back again. His name is back of the reopening of the Newport theater, Dallas, closed for the last several months. The theater is a small one and not elaborate, but it enjoys an ideal location and is doing well, apparently.

Drouth Broken in Parts of Texas.

Dallas.—A number of sections of the heretofore drouth stricken region in West Texas have been blessed with life-restoring precipitation, and as a result the feeling is much better. The effect is noticeable in a number of managers from what is inelegantly termed "the sticks" calling on booking agencies and branch houses in Dallas during the last week.

Fox "Siren" Too Daring.

Dallas.—Valeska Suratt, daring and dashing, has been ruled a bit too daring and somewhat too dashing as "The Siren" in the Fox film of that title, for Dallas motion picture patrons, by Mrs. Ethel Boyce, the Dallas censor. The picture was condemned for local showing. Under requirements of the local ordinance, a private showing was made, after which the censor acted. It is the third film which has come under the ban here during the last month.

West Wants Western Stuff.

Dallas.—They like Western stuff in the West, just the same as in the East, according to J. B. Dugger, V. L. S. E. branch manager here. Mr. Dugger is now on a Western trip, called out by the prospect for big business with "The Fighting Trail", a recent V. L. S. E. release. Incidentally, Dugger named the picture. His suggestion for a title was selected from the many sent in.

H. E. Fulgham Back With Vitagraph.

Dallas.—H. E. Fulgham is back on the road in the interest of Vitagraph. Mr. Fulgham has been on duty in the local office for the last several months.

Texas Trade Notes of Interest.

Dallas.—Joseph Clemons, of the Tivoli, Beaumont, and J. A. Holton, of the People's at Port Arthur, booked new stuff through local branches during the week and declared themselves satisfied.

Houston, Tex.—Oh, yes, there are lady owner-managers in Texas. Witness: Miss Edith Johnson, of the Liberty and Keith at Houston, booked several new things through Dallas branches during the last week and reported conditions and the prospect for the fall entirely promising.

Brenham, Tex.—W. A. Stuckert, of The Rex at Brenham, Tex., was another South Texas manager who said that section of the state was in good condition.

Iowa Film Trade News

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

"The Slacker" Does Big Business in Des Moines.

DES MOINES, IA.—The Palace theater in this city surely cleaned up on "The Slacker" the week of the 19th. J. Miloskowsky, who is usually reticent in his praise of pictures, went so far as to openly state that his business was something wonderful on the big Metro success. He would have held the picture over into the week of the 26th if it had been possible for the local Metro office to have obtained prints.

The picture is not only going big in Des Moines, but all over Iowa and Nebraska exhibitors are writing in and seeking dates on the feature. It is being booked in all of the smaller towns for more than two days, where no picture has ever been shown more than but one day.

News of Film People and Des Moines Visitors.

Des Moines.—J. S. Skirboll, general manager of the Metro out of Pittsburgh, Kan., spent one day in Des Moines, last week, visiting his brother, William N. Skirboll, manager of the local Metro exchange.

Charles B. Orr, of the photoplay house in Bagley, Ia; William Gleason, of the Little Gem in Duncomb, Ia., and the Misses Gerbracht, of Ames, Ia., were callers at the Universal exchange in Des Moines last week. Miss Ada and Miss Della Gerbracht are the sisters and partners of Joe Gerbracht in the ownership of the Twin Star theater in Ames.

C. W. Stombaugh, formerly manager of the General exchange in Des Moines, and now manager of the Standard office in Minneapolis, stopped over the latter part of the week, on his way home to Minneapolis after attending the burial of his father in Lincoln, Neb.

George Fowler, of the Unique in Menlo, Ia., and Charles Owens, of the Past Time in Bagley, Ia., were callers at the Pathe this week.

Charter Oak, Ia.—C. C. Cooper has purchased the Royal theater in Charter Oak from William Probasco.

Ackerman & Harris Circuit Is Extending

Takes Ten Year Lease on Cory at Fresno—To Build New Hippodrome in San Jose —Takes Over the Strand at Stockton.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Ackerman & Harris, who conduct the circuit of Hippodrome theaters on the Pacific Coast, and who already have fourteen houses under their control, are making preparations to add several new ones in California at an early date. This increased activity on their part has made necessary the securing of larger office quarters, and within thirty days they will remove from the Humboldt Bank building, where they have made their headquarters for years, to what will be known as the Circuit building on O'Farrell street, opposite the Alcazar theater, where a building is being fitted up to meet their particular needs. The Hippodrome shows are made up of vaudeville and moving pictures, with the latter receiving special attention.

A ten year lease has been taken on the Cory theater at Fresno, Cal., and it is planned to open this in October, after extensive alterations have been made by the owner of the property, L. L. Cory. The front of the house will be changed the interior redecorated, a marquise installed and other improvements made at an estimated cost of $25,000, under the direction of Eugene Mathewson, an architect of Fresno.

Contracts have also been signed for a new Hippodrome theater at San Jose, Cal. A two-story, reinforced concrete theater with a seating capacity of 2,000 will be erected by T. S. Montgomery, adjoining the Montgomery hotel, and opposite the T. & D. theater. This house, in a complete form, will cost about $150,000. The architects are Binder & Curtis.

The old Strand theater at Stockton, Cal., has also been taken over, remodeled and enlarged, and will be opened on August 29 as the Hippodrome theater, the initial moving picture to be shown to be the "On the Square Girl," with Mollie King. The circuit has also arranged to place its acts in the Wigwam theater in the Mission district, San Francisco, which is to be changed on September 2 from a stock to a vaudeville and moving picture house, the first picture offering to be "Lonesome Luke's Wild Women."

Theater Deal Falls Through.

San Francisco, Cal.—The deal whereby the Strand theater was to pass from the possession of Sid Grauman and D. J. Grauman to the proprietors of the Rialto theater, of this city, struck a snag at the last moment and will probably not be consummated. In speaking of the matter Sid Grauman states that a decision has virtually been arrived at not to dispose of the house, but to operate it in conjunction with the one to be opened shortly at Los Angeles. He said, "We have a fine theater in an ideal location and have about decided not to dispose of our interests here, where our name is an asset. Business is increasing in fine shape and it looks as though we would experience a wonderful fall and winter season".

Lasky Company Makes Coast Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—A company of players from the Lasky studio at Los Angeles were recent visitors here to take scenes for the "Clever Miss Carfax", featuring Julian Eltinge. The company came up the coast by boat and went as far as Portland, Ore., but adverse weather conditions prevented the taking of as many scenes as was desired. Mr. Eltinge was to have appeared in person at the Porter theater, in this city, but the boat was late and he was compelled to postpone the engagement. The company was in charge of director Donald Crisp and in addition to Julian Eltinge included H. B. Carpenter, Ernest Joy, Noah Beery, Fred Church, Miss Daisy Robinson, Miss Marie Stark, Mme. Rosita Marstini, Miss Camille Ankewich and Frank Deshon. Faxon Dean accompanied the party as camera man, having Farciot Eduart as assistant.

Goldwyn Author in Town.

San Francisco, Cal.—Roy Cooper Megrue, author of "Fighting Odds", in which Goldwyn will feature Maxine Elliott in its third release, is here for a short stay and will shortly go on to Los Angeles, having come by way of the Northwest. Harry Leonhart, the Western division manager for Goldwyn, is making a visit to the Seattle branch.

"British Tanks" Draw Crowds.

San Francisco, Cal.—Howard J. Sheehan, of the Rialto theater, advises that all former records at this house were broken during the recent engagement of the Pathe "Tanks at the Battle of Ancre." This showing is considered a remarkable one in view of the fact that this week also marked an advance in admission price from 10, 20 and 30 cents to 15, 25 and 35 cents.

Turner & Dahnken Activities.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. B. Johnson, secretary of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, will leave shortly for New York to attend a meeting of members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. While away he will also attend to details in connection with the opening of an exchange in that city. This is to be ready for business on November 1 and is to be in charge of Ralph Clark, manager of the T. & D. theater at Oakland.

This circuit has purchased the California, Arizona, Nevada, New York and Hawaiian Island rights to "The Curse of Iku", which is now being shown with great success in the local territory.

The new organ in the T. & D. theater at Berkeley is proving to be a strong drawing card and music is being featured as never before. Clarence A. Tufts is the organist and the services of well known solo artists are being secured from time to time to lend variety to the program.

A free recital marked the opening of the new orchestral organ at the T. & D. opera house on August 18. This organ has been entirely reconstructed and enlarged and is now one of the finest in the West. The opening concert was rendered by Gordon Bretland.

E. H. Kemp Installing Many Machines.

San Francisco, Cal.—Edward H. Kemp is busily engaged in installing Motiographs in Y. M. C. A. buildings at army camps in this territory and expects to put in about thirty in all. He has sold three Motiographs to be installed in the new California theater, these to be built especially for this house. A traveling equipment, with a portable electric lighting plant, has also been fitted up for use in Mexico.

New House for North Beach.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sam Gordon has sold his interests in the old Penny Arcade on Broadway and a new fireproof theater with a seating capacity of 2,000 is to be erected on the site for the Broadway Theater Company. The architects are Weeks & Day, Phelan building, and the theater will be conducted under the management of Max Blumenfeld.

Babies Are Tickets.

San Francisco, Cal.—During the recent engagement of "Skinner's Baby" at the Strand theater, manager Sid Grauman extended an invitation to mothers to attend the Thursday and Friday matinees, the only ticket required being a baby in arms. Hundreds accepted the invitation and baby buggies filled the lobby and all the available storage space in the house. Mothers were asked to check their tickets should they become obstreperous, but only a few found this necessary, the behavior of the little tots being most exemplary. The ticket takers had instructions to punch no tickets, but to smile at every baby, regardless of race or disposition.

Australian Film Man Visits San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—N. Crown, formerly of Dallas, Tex., but for the last three years located in Australia, arrived here recently to secure films to be taken to that country. He is negotiating for the Pathe release, "Les Miserables", the Hart feature, "The Cold Deck", and productions of a like character. He reports that so many men have left Australia that the theaters in many of the small towns have been closed, but that business is good in the larger places.

Pathe Exchange Notes.

San Francisco, Cal.—C. A. Meade, the special Pathe representative, who has been here for several weeks, has left for a brief stay at Los Angeles.

Nick Turner, formerly a well known exhibitor of northern California, and later connected with local film exchanges, has returned from an Eastern trip and has joined the Pathe sales staff.

H. Stuart has become assistant bookkeeper at the local office and Gilbert Moyle has been appointed cashier, replacing L. Adler, who has been transferred to the Dallas branch.

Sol Lesser Gets New Film.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sol L. Lesser has purchased the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to "The Cold Deck", featuring William Hart, and the All Star Distributors, Inc., is now booking this production locally. "The Garden of Allah" recently had a successful run at the Lyric theater at San Rafael and will shortly be shown here for the first time.

Demanding Safer Operating Rooms.

San Francisco, Cal.—Officials of the local Department of Electricity have been visiting the operating rooms of local houses of late and have insisted on improvements that have necessitated the purchase of considerable new equipment. The use of fireproof rewinds has been especially insisted upon.

Frisk Makes Theater Sales.

San Francisco, Cal.—Fred Frisk, of the United Theater Exchange, has effected the sale of the Rex theater at Santa Clara, Cal., from Hoots & McDaniel to John G. French, formerly of Angels Camp, and has sold a one-half interest in the Larkin theater of this city for Charles M. Goodwin to Louis C. Werner.

Selznick Offices Being Improved.

San Francisco, Cal.—Now that the uncertainty in regard to the plans of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises has been dismissed arrangements are being made to place the local offices on a permanent basis. A large film vault is to be installed at once and the quarters in the Easton building.

California Newslets.

Hollister, Cal.—The Opal theater has been taken over by Stark & Hodges.

Angels Camp, Cal.—E. A. Watkins has purchased the Angels theater.

Sacramento, Cal.—The Nippon theater has been opened by C. Rohrer.

Willows, Cal.—The Opera House will be opened by R. W. Claman.

Spokane News Letter

By S. Clark Patchin, E1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

Tyrone Power Addresses Spokane Audience.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Tyrone Power, Shakespearean actor and moving picture actor, swooped down on Spokane for the week of August 19 and was royally entertained by the people of the city, who hope to have him and C. J. Ward, his manager, establish a producing moving picture studio here.

In an address before the Spokane Transportation Club, Wednesday, August 22, he said:

"The man who would continue to play Shakespeare is on a direct road to the workhouse. I was on that road until the motion picture came along and said 'Eat'; and actors must eat. Ministers would fill their houses better if they had the Bible stories prepared for the screen, and when they announce their texts have the pictures, depicting the text, thrown on the screen. Some say they are oposed to pictures, yet on their windows and walls are highly colored Bible pictures and statuary.

"Whether I come here or not to make pictures someone is going to, for your scenery is ideal and conditions are most wonderful. You have a vast amount of virgin scenery here that has not been used up like the California scenery has. Things are ideal and it seems a great shame that it has not been taken advantage of sooner."

Pantages Theater Being Rebuilt.

Spokane, Wash.—Work on reconstructing the Pantages theater in Spokane has been started by Earl B. Newcomb, of Seattle, the contractor. The Pantages circuit shows are being produced in the American theater, which was dark, and are drawing large crowds. The house has just booked the Vitalgraph serial, "The Fighting Trail", which will start to run September 10. Additional to its moving picture portion of the program Ottavia Handworth, a moving picture actress, appeared on the stage the week of August 19.

Majestic Theater Changes Hands.

Spokane, Wash.—The Majestic moving picture theater, of Spokane, which was incorporated, has changed managements. On August 18 J. C. Knipe, C. Bowman and H. W. Koons purchased the controlling interest in the place and Mr. Knipe is the acting manager, taking the place of A. H. McMillan, manager, who will take up other duties after September 1. The purchase price was not made public.

Film Men From Seattle Visit Spokane.

Spokane, Wash.—F. A. Hill, representative of Goldwyn, with offices in Seattle, visited Spokane managers during the week of August 20.

G. A. Ferris, manager of the Vitagraph exchange in Seattle, and Ashley McRea, traveling representative of the company from the same office, gave private showings of "The Fighting Trail" and "The Common Law" in the Clemmer and Lyric theaters, August 23, to exhibitors from outside of the city. Mr. McRea announced that several good bokings resulted from showing the pictures to the men of the Inland Empire towns.

PORTLAND, ORE., NOTES.

C. W. Meighan Leaves the People's.

Portland, Ore.—C. W. Meighan has resigned his position as manager of the People's Amusement Company to accept the position of manager of the Columbia theater and publicity expert for both the Columbia and Liberty theaters.

Exchanges Make New Demands

Oregon Exhibitors See Serious Problems Ahead in Dealing With Exchanges—Raise in Prices—New Schedules Require Two Days' Run of Films.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—The reorganization that has been going on among certain film distributing companies has struck home in the usual and customary place, to wit, the ultimate consumer, the exhibitor. The past few weeks have found certain exhibitors in a frenzy to grab one or two certain picture programs and those programs have been demanding prices among the small showmen that by far top anything ever before asked, even in the palmy days of General Film monopoly.

To an exhibitor who for the past year or more has maintained an every day change policy, a film concern makes this demand: "$—— for our films in your locality for two days."

"But," says the exhibitor, "I change every day and never show a film two days."

"That makes no difference," answers the exchange, "the price of our service is $—— for your locality whether you run the picture one or two days."

All of which, the exhibitor believes, is a polite way of saying that the film rental charged by the distributing concern is about twice what it was before.

Nevertheless, competing exhibitors in a locality have, for the past few weeks, been engaged in a throat-cutting bidding fray for certain film service, which, it is argued by the onlooker, must eventually result disastrously even for the winner. Men who have held one brand of service for years are trembling for fear their competitors will take it away from them and the competitors are not backward about admitting that they are out to get it if possible.

One of the exchanges in question states that the increased salaries paid to stars and the increased cost of production are responsible for the increased charges in rental of service. However, the situation as it confronts film exchanges themselves appears to the exhibitors in the territory to be a most delicate one, and it is their opinion that only the exercise of excellent judgment and the most painstaking efforts to give the exhibitor a square deal will solve the perplexing problem in a manner that will guarantee the future prosperity of the distributors as well as the present. The activities of the old General Film regime still rankle in the breasts of Oregon's exhibitors.

No Sunday Express Deliveries in Portland.

Portland, Ore.—Starting August 26, Portland express companies will not make any Sunday deliveries and exhibitors who get their shows from Seattle will be compelled to personally call at the express offices to get their Sunday programs. The action by the express companies is a war measure, in line with the "one delivery a day" plan adopted by the Portland merchants. Neither will the express companies pick up film for out-of-town shipment after five o'clock. The rule applies to Portland, Seattle, Tacoma and Spokane.

The situation is just another argument in favor of Seattle exchanges putting branches in Portland so that its exhibitors can be effectively served.

W. E. Tebbetts Learns a Lesson.

Portland, Ore.—Ask W. E. Tebbetts, the popular owner of the Alhambra theater, whether two projecting machines are an absolute necessity or merely an improvement over the old way of doing business, and his answer will be "necessity" in positive tones.

After putting on faultless pictures for four years with a single machine, using 2,000-foot reels, Mr. Tebbetts enjoyed the disheartening experience of the old standby breaking down on a Sunday afternoon. Pete Sabo, projection expert, could have fixed it in 15 minutes, but he was out of town. Finally Charles Pumphrey was routed up from his Sunday dinner a few miles away and a temporary machine was secured after a few hours' delay.

Needless to say, Mr. Tebbetts bought a second machine the next day.

Ed. Hudson Leaves Triangle.

Portland, Ore.—Ed. Hudson, popular traveller in the Portland territory, has resigned his position with Triangle to accept one as travelling representative with Goldwyn.

During his connection with Triangle, Mr. Hudson has built up a reputation for square dealing, making personal service a selling point of his product. In that way he has established a regular clientele among the exhibitors in the territory.

Jack Hovick a Wise Money Spender.

Portland, Ore.—Jack Hovick, Jensen & Von Herberg publicity expert, holds an enviable position. He has the opportunities to spend just as much, if not more, money on advertising than any theatrical ad writer in the Pacific Northwest or on the Pacific Coast. Whole newspaper pages of Jensen & Von Herberg advertisements every few days is nothing in his young life. Recently he startled the staid Portlanders with a cut of Olive Thomas a page long. However, Mr. Hovick spends his bosses' money judiciously, as the business at the Portland Liberty and Columbia and the Seattle theaters for which he writes publicly will testify.

John Hovick in His Den at the Liberty Theater.

Goldwyn Goes Over Big.

Portland, Ore.—H. C. Arthur, Jr., road man for Goldwyn, was a recent caller at the League rooms and reports excellent business down the Willamette Valley and a big clean-up for Goldwyn.

Mr. Arthur reports that Maude Munson, the new owner of the Rainbow theater at McMinnville, has inaugurated a new policy in her theater and hereafter will show only the highest class of pictures. Increased admission prices are charged.

PIONEER DAYS (Two Parts).—General Herald of Fort Dearborn (LaFayette McKee); Black Partridge, an Indian Chief (Charles Clarey); Toinette, a French girl (Adrienne Kroell). Written by C. E. Nixon. Directed by Oscar Eagle.

In June, 1812, England declared war against the United States and secured the co-operation of the northern Indians as mercenaries and proceeded to devastate what was then the northwestern frontier.

At the mouth of the Chicago River stood Fort Dearborn, named in honor of General Nathaniel Dearborn, and established by the order of General Wayne. After the war with England started, General Wayne instructed General Heald to evacuate Fort Dearborn and go to Detroit.

Before he carried out this order Heald infuriated the hostile Indians in the vicinity by dampening all the surplus powder, emptying casks of liquor in the Chicago River and throwing all surplus muskets into a deep well at the fort.

On August 15, 1812, the men, women and children of Fort Dearborn started overland for Detroit. The hostile Indians attacked the troops and the famous Fort Dearborn massacre resulted, in which women, children and soldiers were slaughtered by the savages.

This massacre, together with other historical data of pioneer days, are thrillingly presented.

Bobbie induces his father, a school trustee, to "get" Miss Patience's job. The other children enlist on her side, and with their parents, threaten to "get" the jobs of the trustees if the teacher is discharged. The trustees changed their minds quickly.

STAR DUST (Black Cat—Two Parts).—The cast: Polly Parker (Marguerite Clayton); Capt. John Hastings (Mark Ellison).

Every girl has a soldier sweetheart these days; that is, every girl except Polly Parker. At her big university she alone is loveless and unloved. To a crowd of girls one day she reads a story she has written of Mary, a girl just like herself, who pines for a soldier's love.

Mary read of Captain John Hastings' return from the front and writes him, explaining her plight. An exchange of letters followed, then photographs. Finally the Captain was ordered back to the front. He took Mary with him as his happy wife. As Polly finishes the story she remarks that it is only "star dust"—a happy dream, but her audience is gazing across the campus in wonderment. There comes Captain Hastings for Mary, who, in reality, is Polly, herself. The "star dust" comes true.

THE FABLE OF THE WANDERING BOY AND THE WAYWARD PARENTS (Sept. 10).—Elmer (Rodney LaRock); his dad (Bobbie Bolder); his ma (Marion Skinner); heiress (Magna Anderson).

From a small seat of learning where even the consumption of water was regulated by the curators there was cast forth on the turbulent sea of worldly strife a youth, Elmer, by baptism. Teeming with big ideas was an accomplishment which had rendered Elmer immune from any contamination by the curriculum.

No sooner had the flow of family welcome been staunched than he gave vent to his pentup emotions, exposing to the fire of criticism his yearning for a wider pasture to gambol in. In spite of the mater's apprehensive visions of vampires, cabarets and improper camaradie, his telling arguments and debating society gestures had their effect. With a promise to spurn temptation's flirtatious advances he parlorcarred to the wider scope.

Lured by three ukulele thrummers from the old Alma Mater, he succumbs to their invitation to spend an evening. A meeting of the Civic Improvement League proves to be the main bout, and nothing more exciting occurs than making the acquaintances of an heiress. With her as his inspiration, he eventually becomes the dominating factor in a struggle against social obnoxities. Nuptials naturally follow, since Elmer is now wearing a frock coat and a thoughtful and detached air.

Imagine, then, his utter horror upon returning to the birthplace, to find it in the last stages of a virulent attack of speed. Haste in all its most compromising forms had superseded all other activities. The most indisputable evidence being father's position as president of the Country Club, while mother whiles her afternoons at bridge. Though Elmer's "What-are-we-coming-to" pose makes him the butt of many gentle jests, he persists until an exclusive soiree is given by mother for the benefit of those appreciating terpsichore unhindered by convention. He then wends his way back to wife and the sane life of the city, convinced that "sobriety is a sister to solitude and speed no respecter of persons."

FALCON FEATURES.

HIS UNPOLISHED SELF (Four Parts).—The cast: Richard Jelf (Henry Ainley); Thomas Jelf (Charles Rock); James Palliser (Gerald Ainley); Sir Jonathan Dunne (Philip Howland); Adam Winslow (Hubert Willis); Perkins (George Bellamy); Tom Harkaway (Douglas Munro); Hon. Archibald Mull (Hayford Hobbs); Countess of Skene and Skye (Gwynne Herbert); Lady Fenella Hull (Mary Dibley); Dorothy (Christine Rayner). From "Jelf's," a play. By H. A. Vachell.

Dick Jelf, who has been ranching in Arizona, is recalled to London by his uncle to take over the direction of the banking house of Jelf's. There is much misgiving among the representatives of finance.

Through Jim Palliser, also a banker, Dick meets Lady Fenella Hull and her aristocratic, though impoverished, family. Fenella is engaged to Palliser, but his bank is shaky and her mother insists on the engagement being broken. Dick is captivated by the beautiful girl, but she complains to her mother of his crudeness. However, she recognizes his strength and agrees to marry him.

Dick's unconventionality scandalizes Sir Jonathan Dunne, president of the Bankers' Association, but the ex-rancher shows brains and adaptability. The crisis comes when Palliser, faced by ruin, begs Dick to help him and Dick does so out of his own resources, for Jelf's bank must not be connected with Palliser's. Soon after Dick finds Jim Palliser making love to Fenella, but he keeps his word, even when Palliser telephones to a financial paper that Jelf's bank is supporting Palliser's. The news that Jelf's Bank is backing a rotten concern like Palliser's causes a run on the bank which Dick faces alone. A panic-stricken mob surges at the doors. Tom Harkaway, who is known by every sporting man to have $250,000 in Jelf's, can't trust his money with one who has been "fool enough to back Jim Palliser."

When the outlook is darkest. Fenella who has tried to induce Palliser to make amends, comes and stands at Dick's side. When the last moment comes and the cash is exhausted, Harkaway, impressed by Dick's honesty and courage, checks the crowd with a lusty bellow, telling them to leave their money where he is going to leave his—with an honest man. Then Sir Jonathan, who has been watching Dick closely, induces the Bankers' Association to stand by Jelf's, and the old bank weathers the storm and Dick wins the girl.

A BUSHRANGER'S STRATEGY, An Episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" (Two Parts).—The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Howie (Paul C. Hurst); Signor Corelli (Barney Furey); Jane Ryder (Edythe Sterling); Sergeant Whipple (Jack Waltemeyer). Story by E. W. Hornung. Directed by Paul C. Hurst.

Stingaree and Howie are surprised to meet, near this camp, an Italian violinist, who introduces himself as Signor Acampora. Stingaree recognizes the name as that of a master musician and is delighted at the meeting. Himself a violinist, the gentleman bushranger rejoices at the opportunity of hearing such a celebrated performer. But Howie suggests "if this feller's worth a barrel o' money, why not hold him for ransom?" The signor makes no objection to this, as he realizes that to be held for ransom by the famous Stingaree will be a great advertisement when he returns home. The bushrangers take the musician to their camp, and Stingaree appears disappointed when he hears the Italian play.

Jane Ryder, a former show girl, arriving in the bush country, finds that her horse has gone lame, and is forced to abandon him and proceed on foot. Approaching the camp of the bushrangers, she finds a handkerchief that the Italian musician has dropped, and appears to reognize it. The signor, while playing for Stingaree, sees Jane dodging through the bushes. Awaiting his opportunity, he slips away and waylays the girl. He binds her hand and foot, and hearing the bushrangers calling, hurries back to the camp.

While the Italian is enjoying a repast Jane manages to free herself and is soon lost in the bush country. Stingaree, again listening to the signor play, instructs Howie to fetch the Italian's horse.

Troopers of the New South Wales Mounted Police hear the strains of the signor's violin and approach. Coming in sight of the violinist, he signals them to approach further, and they surround the bushranger's tent. They see it move, and believe the bushranger to be inside. Rushing inside, they find the Italian's horse. Stingaree has escaped.

Riding away from camp, Stingaree and Howie meet Jane. She tells them her story. Penniless and desperate, she is following a man who had stolen the money she had saved to return to her home in England. He was the orchestra leader in the show in which she played. From her description, Stingaree knows that the fake Signor Acampora is the man. Riding off, he finds the Italian who, with the troopers, has resumed the search for the bushrangers. He takes him back to Jane and hands over to the girl the money which he finds hidden in the Italian's violin. Then, compelling the signor to take off his boots and socks, he gives him a canteen of water and sends him forth barefooted.

The feet of the troopers' accomplice are soon cut and scratched as he trods over the rough ground, while Jane thanks the bushrangers and accepts the loan of Stingaree's horse to ride back to town.

THE STRANGER AT DUMCRIEFF (Episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree)—Two Parts. The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Howie (Paul C. Hurst); John Stewart (G. A. Williams); Edith Stewart (Edythe Sterling); Stephen Hope (Edward Hearn); Jerome Moffitt (Frank Jonasson); Sergeant Deane (Barney Furey). Directed by Paul C. Hurst.

Just as Stephen Hope, the youthful minister of Dumcrieff, becomes engaged to Edith Stuart, a stranger calls. The minister recognizes him as Jerome Moffitt, who recalls to the days when they were cell-mates in prison. Moffitt demands money, and when refused spreads the news that the minister is an ex-convict. The villagers plan a public denunciation of Hope.

Stingaree enters the village in a disguise to purchase ammunition. He recognizes Hope as a man who once befriended him when Stingaree lived in England and plans to vindicate him. With Howie, Stingaree meets Moffitt, invites him up to his cabin and gives him several drinks until his tongue is sufficiently loosened to tell the story of Hope's arrest and conviction for a crime Moffitt himself committed.

The public denunciation of the minister at the Sunday service has begun when the bushrangers arrive with Moffitt. While Howie keeps guard outside, Stingaree holds up the church and forces Moffitt to tell the story of Hope's conviction. They are interrupted by the arrival of the mounted police. Hope persuades Sergeant Deane to allow the bushranger to complete his mission. Deane waits in the sacristy, facing the altar where Stingaree is standing. But Howie sneaks in and overpowers the trooper. After vindicating the minister, Stingaree is able to make a getaway.

Stingaree and Howie ride to their retreat, satisfied with their day's work, while Hope is reunited to his sweetheart.

STAR FEATURETTE.

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER (Two Parts—Sept. 10).—Story by Emmett Campbell Hall. Directed by Lucius Henderson.

Rose Weston looked up from her uncongenial task of churning butter, as Robert Wayne, her sweetheart, came up the path.

That night the family is gathered in the sitting-room. Robert and Rose's father talk "crops." Rose's fat brother is engaged in brushing flies from his forehead; her mother is sewing. Rose bangs at the piano unmercifully.

"Rose, child, what is the matter? Hush!"

"I am tired of stopping, hushing, being quiet, living in the country, listening to talk of crops!" She rushes blindly from the room.

Later Robert hands Rose a letter. She is still angry, so he kisses her and leaves.

Next day Rose receives a letter from a former schoolmate, Esther, who deplores the fact that the girl is going to marry a farmer, settle down in the country and be an old "drudge." Shortly, thereafter, Rose's father hands her a cheque for $500, which has been left her by an uncle. In the night, Rose slips from the house, having left a note saying that she is going to the city and Robert ought to be glad to get rid of her.

Rose goes to the apartment of Esther, where there is in progress a Bohemian party. The girl drinks her first glass of wine.

There follows many auto trips and suppers. Rose's funds are becoming very low. She announces, to friends, at the close of a day spent in the woods, that, at the end of a certain time, she will sell herself to the highest bidder.

Meanwhile a prospector has met Robert and discovered a copper mine, which the two develop. Robert comes to town, and with his partner is seated in a restaurant where there is a gay party. He is attracted to one of the women, and when she turns he sees that she is Rose. His partner tells him of her declaration to sell herself to the highest bidder.

Rose sees Robert and starts to speak to him. He repulses her. When she arrives home she finds him waiting for her. He remonstrates with her and she orders him out of the place.

The day of the auction draws near. Robert gives his partner a blank cheque telling him to bid anonymously for the woman.

The auction is at hand. Rose, mounted on a chair, goes under the hammer. Suitors bid for her. One offers riches in India; another spreads jewels at her feet; another lures her with the promise of making her a prima donna; Robert's friend offers wealth, in the form of a cheque, in behalf of an absent friend.

A message arrives. Rose announces that every one is outbidden.

Robert is dejected when his partner tells him the outcome of the sale. He packs up and goes back to the farm.

In the garden he meets Rose. She shows him her father's note, telling her he forgives her for having left home and explains this is a higher bid than any for her.

They are happily reunited, each the richer for their experiences.

The cop demands that he be allowed to get the wife's signature. Ryde has resumed his own clothes and hurries to borrow "a wife." GOLD SEAL.

THE PERILOUS LEAP (Gold Seal—Three Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: Joe Mead (O. C. Jackson); "Dad" Shannon (George Williams); Pete Larkins (George Routh); Effie (Helen Gibson); Ned Donnely (Val Paul). Story by S. Sutton, produced by J. D. Davis.

Joe Mead stood on the porch of "Honest" Dad Shannon's shack, to all intents an agent of a munition factory in search of quicksilver, but, in reality, the head of a clique of smugglers.

Dad Shannon believed in everybody, despite the fact that he knows Le Cruz, not far from the Mexican border, is infested with opium smugglers and Chinese.

He allows the "mercury" to be located in his shed, for Joe says the government is in need of it. Joe warns "Dad" to keep the affair a secret.

Pete Larkins, a renegade brakeman and member of the band, is in love with Effie, Shannon's daughter, but she cares nothing for him. But when she meets Ned Donnelly of the Secret Service, the attraction is mutual.

Ned warns the inspector to watch Mead. That night the Inspector sees Mead and "Dad" lifting boxes from an auto and carrying them into the shed. The Inspector approaches the shed and breaks the locks. He finds the boxes contain opium.

Mead meets Pete, who warns the former that Ned is in town and the two men hasten to look after their stuff. They see some one is in the shed, and, when the Inspector comes out Mead fires and misses, then the Inspector shoots and both men fall wounded, while Pete takes the guns and runs away. "Dad" rushes out and Ned and Effie join him. Ned concludes some one has tried to murder the men, for there is no weapon about.

Later Pete tells "Dad" it will go hard if they find the opium in his shed, but he is willing to keep quiet if "Dad" will let him marry Effie. Effie offers to marry Pete to save her father.

Ned receives word that Pete is identified as a member of Mead's gang. He stops to watch him. Ned then urges Shannon to make a clean breast of the whole affair. Shannon tells Ned Pete agreed to take the opium away and promises to help Ned catch the culprits.

Pete moves the stuff to the railroad yard and prepares to send it out on No. 7, along with some Chinamen. Effie informs Ned and he rushes to the depot where Pete is just resealing the car. Ned holds Pete up with his gun, but a Chinaman suddenly jumps from the car onto Ned, who is overpowered and thrown into the car. Effie has seen this act. She swings onto a car as the train passes, but is seen by Pete who runs to her, trying to prevent her from reaching the top of the car. They struggle. She gets away and climbs to the top of the car, but is caught and Pete tries to throw her in the refrigerator car. As they go under a bridge, Effie trips Pete, then grabs one of the girders and swings from the train, dropping onto the train several cars away from Pete, who seeing her trick, runs after her.

Meanwhile, Ned has had a desperate fight with the Chinaman, who is trying to knife him. Escaping, he climbs to the top of the car and sees the struggle between Pete and Effie. Ned knocks Pete from the train and catches Effie as she swoons. Finally the train is stopped. Pete is forced to confess to everything, exonerating "Dad," and Ned and Effie plan to be married.

The Deacon is observed by the president and determines to teach him a lesson. Donning a bathing suit with a long skirt, she veils her face and starts to lure the Deacon. The end of the yarn with which the bathing suit was made becomes entangled on a nail and the skirt is unraveled to an alarming shortness by the time she is seen by the Deacon. He follows and she proposes a boat ride. They land on an island, where she discloses her identity and maroons the Deacon.

Felix, her lover, is forgotten as she makes plans to go to her throne. But—she has reckoned without the cupidity of the stranger. He plans to get rid of the princess and have the throne to himself. His accomplices lure her aboard their boat, tie her in a sack and dump her overboard. Felix, however, is a stowaway, and manages to get her to shore. The stranger again come upon them. Belinda is the laughing stock on account of the airs she put on. But Felix gets on the job and once more they are happily reunited.

L-KO.

FROM CACTUS TO KALE (Two Parts—Sept. 10).—Directed by Noel Smith.

Gladys, the waitress in the restaurant, offers Walter a pail of water. He has had a bad time of it when he is mistaken for a cow and almost branded. He is inclined to be comforted, however, by Gladys, until the cook with floury gestures announces the house's slogan: "Shot at sunrise if you flirt with the waitress."

Walter is kicked out and lands on a cactus bush. He returns with a handful and throws it at the cook. The fight is on and the place is almost demolished.

In a sitting-room the no longer young Miss Young reclines on a sofa, and Harry gives the paper the once over. They both jump to their feet when he reads a certain paragraph and make a rush for the depot. But the train has already steamed out, carrying a mustached gentleman who carries some very precious papers.

Harry and Miss Young pursue the train in an auto and board it at the tank station. Miss Young engages the mustached gentleman in conversation. She winks to Harry. He follows to the rear end platform where he adminsters to Miss Young's companion a dose of chloroform and hurls him from the train.

The couple arrive in the town and Gladys and Walter make for the restaurant. They take Walter and tell him piles of gold await him in the city.

Walter, once arrived in the Metropolis, indulges in diversions, which almost put the precious trio in very bad. However, Walter and Miss Young land the young gentleman in a house, where there are a number of strange-looking inmates. One gives Walter the combination of a safe, after which he falls dead. When the couple see Walter has the safe's combination they attempt to wrest it from him, after having installed him as master in a large house, where he is giving a large dinner party. He is eating principally with his knife and shooting from the table live crabs and lobsters.

Meanwhile the mustached gentleman has picked himself up from the embankment, brushed off the dust from his coat and made his way into town and into the good graces of Gladys. He tells her Harry and Miss Young have kidnapped him and the couple pursue the trio and arrive just as the conspirators are wresting the fortune from the safe. They rush through the house, hands, arms, pockets filled with bank notes, Gladys, Walter and the mustached gentleman hot in pursuit. The race gathers momentum and grows as it continues through the streets, demolishes whole buildings and ends in the middle of the ocean, where the lovers are reunited.

BACKWARD SONS AND FORWARD DAUGHTERS (Two Parts—Sept. 3).—Directed by Phil Dunham.

Billy, supposed to saw wood, was possessed of other plans. He went fishing.

Lucille was rich. She held a mortgage to the soil where Billy was fishing. The Bevans, proud parents of Billy, were about to be ejected.

"I have a plan," said Lucille as she broke in upon them. "Your son", exclaimed the unhandsome spinster. They found Billy. But he had other plans.

Billy took Lucille for a boat ride, during which he managed to drop her in the middle of the lake, a stone about her throat. Then he packed his belongings and beat it for town.

In the hash house of the sweltering city he found employment and love, in the person of the proprietor's daughter. But Lucille, recovering, got on the job.

Bill had no intention of giving up his sweetheart, but he could not confide to her that a former would-be flame devoured corn flakes at one of her father's tables.

"Quick, a mustachio from the wigmaker", Bill appealed to a fellow slave. As they are cooing at the desk, Lucille has penetrated Bill's disguise and rushes toward him, throwing herself into his unwilling arms. "Out of my way", exclaims Bill, grabbing up about a dozen and a half plates, which he manipulates with telling effect.

A marconi battle follows, with more dishes thrown and a complete demolishing of the place.

Lucille goes back to the farm, much the worse for wear, and Bill takes into his arms the fair form of his beloved. The mortgage is lifted from the homestead, and Bill's parents welcome his bride. Lucille takes courage again in the smiles of a lean lodger, sure that he has at last found in her a much-needed and long-coveted meal ticket.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL.

THE GRAY GHOST (Episode No. 11—"The Flaming Meteor"—Two Parts—Sept. 3).—The cast: Morn Light (Priscilla Dean); Wade Hildreth (Emory Johnson); His Secretary Marco (Eddie Polo); The Gray Ghost (Harry Carter); Cecelia (Gypsy Hart); Arabian (Howard Crampton); Jerry Tryon (Lou Short); Williams (Francis Macdonald). Story by A. S. Roche. Directed by Stuart Paton.

Moonlight, Hildreth and Marco, stealing through the underbrush, suddenly paused in terror. Three weird shapes were approaching them. They moved as if encased in metal, as indeed they were. With indrawn breath came a sensation in the throat of each of the fugitives. They saw a stream of vapor coming from the mouths of the figures, which moved upon them.

"It is poison gas"! cried Marco. "Fly for your lives"! The sky grew darker and darker, and the whole atmosphere seemed charged with deadly fumes. Suddenly there came a crash. The sky seemed to split and a meteor plunged head on crashing the figures to the ground.

Cecelia, Morn Light's maid, had watched with jealous attention the progress of the Gray Ghost's infatuation. Now she searched him out, and informed him she knew the secret which enabled him to confront with such indifference the menace of his enemies.

"I'll inflict upon you the fate you reserved for me!" she cried, advancing with upraised knife; for she had learned that only a knife stab to the heart could kill him. As she approached he gave the signal, and she was surrounded by his henchmen and quickly disarmed. She fell into passionate sobbing, while he left her to seek Morn Light, who had been discovered wandering on the island. His object was to obtain the ring Hildreth had given her, and he exerted the mysterious influence he possessed to attain his end. Morn Light never knew why she acceded to his demands, but she was powerless in his hands. She was about to hand him the ring when Cecelia spoke.

"You're covered", she said coldly, and the master thief, turning, saw a revolver in her hands.

ISSUE NO. 36 (Sept. 14).

The first subject shows how inland sea-birds and myriads of sea-fowl live on Bird Island in the center of the great Salt Lake and keep the identity of the species intact. There is first a launch laden with nature students, leaving for Bird Island, and a flock of California sea gulls, with a group of baby California gulls. An afternoon siesta of thousands of pelicans on the surface of the lake, groups of sandhill cranes, blue heron and handsome specimens of the gull family, together with fine views from the summit of Bird Island, make this interesting.

What We Eat, the second subject, shows the various ways of making butter on the farm, from the separation of milk and cream to the moulding of one-pound prints of butter.

Letter Babies—For a perfect peach of a specimen, little Miss Romine Williams is seen being put through a third degree, just loving all manner of exercises to make sturdy and vigorous arms, shoulders, legs, spine and knees.

A splendid preparedness subject reveals the making of shrapnel and other shells, from the rough castings down to the Government inspection of them and mobilization for shipment to the front. Willie Hopkins contributes a number on "Swat the Fly".

THE TEXAS SPHINX (Two Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: Jim Cranman (Harry Carey); Bob Giles ("Hoot" Gibson); Dave Baxter (Ed. Jones); Steve (Vester Pegg); Elsie (Alice Lake); Dick Lonagan (Bill Gettinger). Story by T. S. Sutton. Produced by F. A. Kelsey.

Everybody knew Sheriff Baxter of Maverick was considerable of a coward and a "softie".

The stage coach approaches Maverick, with one lone passenger. Two men see it. One wants to rob it, the other demurs. The first man, Giles, decides to rob it alone. He does so, taking the money he finds in the possession of the lone passenger, who is Dick Lonagan. Giles returns to his companion, Clanman, and goes to Ballinger, where Pete Howell recently robbed the postoffice. Cranman proceeds after the stage coach to Maverick. The stage coach driver makes known the holdup.

Lonagan is introduced as a cattle buyer from El Paso. He says he is broke and is taken home by McGibben's daughter, and immediately takes a liking to her. Cranman arrives and is seen by the Sheriff, who becomes suspicious of him, but McGibben tells him he is not the holdup man. The Sheriff gets the idea that Cranman is the man who is wanted in Ballinger, and confers with McGibben. Cranman meets Elsie. Elsie likes Lonagan and Cranman is unable to warn her against him, although he believes Lonagan to be a bad character

Lonagan calls on the Sheriff and the Sheriff tells him that he suspects Cranman of being the bandit. He encourages the Sheriff's belief. The Sheriff decides to "get" Cranman. Elsie learns of this, and is cautioned by her father to stay away from Cranman. Lonagan presses his suit, favored by the father. Elsie agrees to marry Lonagan. Lonagan insists that the Sheriff arrest Cranman, and, believing the Sheriff afraid, he agrees to arrest him, giving the Sheriff the reward and the glory.

Lonagan lays for Cranman and covers him. No one but the Sheriff and Elsie (unseen) sees this. Elsie is not quite satisfied that Cranman is guilty. Lonagan places Cranman in jail; then urges Elsie to leave with him on their honeymoon in Oklahoma.

Meanwhile Giles arrives in Maverick. He overhears a conversation and learns Cranman is in jail. The Sheriff, Lonagan and McGibben meet Giles. He is recognized as the hold-up man. Giles admits Cranman is his partner, but does not reveal his character or business. Giles is denounced as the robber. Lonagan attempts to cover Giles, but the latter is too quick for him.

Giles disarms the men, keeping them covered, leads them up to the jail and explains that they held up the stage to get the evidence on Lonagan; that he is Pete Howell, and that they have the money he took from Ballinger. Giles turns over photo of Howell to Sheriff and convinces him.

REEL LIFE NO. 73 (Sept. 20).—"Weaving the President's Portrait:" A special loom weaves the portrait of President Wilson in cotton fabric. Other views are shown of a machine which weaves plain fabric, one which twists thread, and one which ties knots.

"Running an Airplane Without Danger:" After years of flying and instructing others how to fly, A. C. Beech has invented a machine on which every exercise of flying can be learned without leaving the ground. An enormous fan forces strong currents of air through the wings. As the tutor-machine is controlled by levers similar to those in a regular machine, its handling becomes instinctive.

"The Principle of the Gyroscope:" Prof. Newkirk, of the University of Minnesota, demonstrates the gyroscopic principle of the monorail car and the motion of the earth, the rotation of which causes the axis to set north and south. Wrestling bouts with the gyroscopic bar-bell and dumb-bell are clearer than words in explaining the principle; that a spinning body resists any effort to change the direction of the axis.

"Student Officers:" Young Americans who will fight Germany are taught how to handle big guns, battleships, and all the up-to-date methods of warfare.

"When a Big Car Goes By:" How we feel when our friends pass our "flivver" in their big car is shown in this animated drawing from "Life."

family and jealous of the family name, believes a member of that family responsible for the murder of Nathan Standish, her brother, who is mysteriously stabbed from behind a portiere.

Sylvia discovers the knife with which the deed was perpetrated and hides it. Bobbins, the footman, known to have hated Standish, comes under suspicion of the crime. To preserve the Standish name, Sylvia allows Bobbins to be dragged away to jail.

"Bull" Ziegler, a detective, suspecting that the surface indications concerning the murder are false, pursues his investigations privately, to the horror of Sylvia, who is haunted by remorse. On the insistence of her father, Sylvia marries Paul Wagner, the district attorney. Her fear of an exposure is thus emphasized.

Meantime Ziegler has become convinced that Bobbins is innocent, and that an effort is being made to convict him of another's crime. He suspects Sylvia. Having pursued the young wife to a retreat in the mountains, to which she has been sent by her husband, Ziegler is in time to witness the clearing up of the mystery and the clearing of the Standish name of the crime, through confession of a girl suicide that Chester Standish had been her betrayer and that she had killed him in revenge after secreting herself in his home.

OUTCAST (Empire—Six Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: Geoffrey (David Powell); Valentine (Kathryn Calvert); Hugh (Richard Hatteras); Tony (Jules Raucourt); Mr. Guest (Herbert Ayling); Lord Moreland (Reginald Carrington); Mrs. Guest (Kate Sargeantson); Taylor (H. Ashton Tonge); Gerald (V. L. Granville); Bemish (Maud Andrew); Miriam's father (James Malaidy); Miriam (Ann Murdock). Directed by Dell Henderson.

Miriam, a beautiful girl without near relatives, meets, loves and is betrayed by a handsome adventurer who later abandons her to marry an old woman with money. When the child is born, Miriam finds herself without friends or funds.

Compelled to take to the street for funds to save her child from starvation, she sells herself for naught, because the child dies. She buries her hopes with the baby and, despairing of any future for herself, adopts the life of a courtesan.

Taken up by Geoffrey Sherwood, a London barrister who has been jilted by his fiance, Miriam becomes Sherwood's mistress. She hopes he will marry her, but as time goes on and the influence of his former fiance is re-established, this hope lessens. Valentine is married to a man of great wealth, but remains unhappy. Sherwood convinces her that all must be over between them. He then offers marriage to Miriam, and after being wed in a little Scottish kirk they start for Buenos Aires.

THE RAINBOW GIRL (Five Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast: Mary Beth (Juliette Day); Richard Warner (George Fisher); Amos (Charles Bennett); Christiana (Lillian Hayward); Plugger (Louis Morrison; Mme. Lavarenne Du Bois (Emma Kluge); Eva Bangaway (Marie Robertson).

Mary Beth never was grum or grouchy, not even when her daddy came home to say his job was gone and he was too old to get another. She said: "Don't be sad. Here's my money to tide things over."

Mary had been saving a small legacy to get a musical education, but she gladly sacrificed herself to make her daddy comfy. To help out a little better, Mary put an ad in the paper for a roomer for the attic.

Richard Warner, a poor musician, was looked upon as a joke where he tried to sell his songs. He needed a room and took the one in Mary Beth's attic. They fell in love at once. Both lied and said they had been unfortunate in love, that they both had sweethearts and some day they hoped to patch things up.

Poor Richard got shabbier and shabbier and finally hungry. He just couldn't put his ballads over. He was desperate, so came home and chancing to find a book which quoted Pliny as saying it was fine to commit suicide, turned on the gas and closed the windows. But a plate of biscuits and a pot of tea saved him from the great beyond. Mary Beth brought them up and when he had eaten them he felt so good that he wanted to live.

It was well he did, for the next day Mary took his song about the rainbow girl to Old Plugger, the music publisher, and sold it. Now Richard had lots of money, yet he wasn't happy.

He was thinking about that sweetheart of Mary Beth's. He wanted to see the thing squared up, so he said, "I'll give her up and get out." But Mary Beth caught him in his exit.

"Aw, I fibbed," admitted she.

"Well! well, so did I," he breathed, close in her embrace. Can't you hear the sweet wedding bells.

Thurston's mansion is outside Capital City near Landport. With him live his daughter, Helen, and Gaston Pitts, private secretary. Thurston regards Pitts as a future husband for Helen, who distrusts the man.

The representative of a foreign government, Valquez negotiates for rights to Thurston's process. Thurston is obdurate. Valquez hires crooks to obtain the device. In this gang are "The Leach," "The Baron" and "The Hare." "The Hare" has a harelip. He resembles Pitts but for that deformity.

This gang burglarizes the Thurston place. Helen gives the alarm. General Thurston is paralyzed by a bullet wound.

Helen hires an express train to transfer the invention and models to a city bank vault. The express train completely disappears between stations from a single line of rail with no switches. Helen rescues the crew of the missing train in a desperate leap from a speeding engine to a wagon pulled by runaway horses.

CUB.

OFFICER JERRY (Cub—One Reel—Sept. 20).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Bill (George George); Pete (Gordon MacGregor); Jack (John J. Hayes); Tilly (Beulah Booker); Bess (Eve Southern). Written and produced by M. H. Fahrney.

Jerry becomes enamoured of a maid servant in the home of a wealthy newly married couple. His flirtation is interrupted by the arrival of Jack and his bride. Jerry sticks around while Jack opens a letter from Bill, a wild-eyed gun man who is enraged at Jack's marriage to Bess. Bill threatens Jack's life and Jack writes a note to the police demanding protection. He gives the letter to Tilly who has been granted an afternoon off. Jerry meets Tilly and promises to mail the note. Tilly leads Jerry to a dressmaker's where several dummies appeal to his sense of humor. Jerry and Tilly select a seat in the park where they expect seclusion but the inevitable cop drives Jerry from his new found love. Jerry opens the letter he promised to mail. A sergeant appears. Jerry peaches on the amorous cop who is fired. Jerry runs to the dressmaker's where he steals a dummy. Returning, he throws the dummy in the lake, rushes up to the humiliated cop and points to the dummy and tells him it is Tilly. The boy discards his uniform, leaps in the lake and drags the dummy ashore while Jerry dons his uniform and applies to Jack as preserver of the peace.

Tilly recognizes Jerry, serves him a repast in the kitchen while Bill and his chum Pete arrive and make matters uncomfortable for Jack. His bride covers Pete while Jerry, roused to action, covers Bill. The real cops arrive, ending the family's and Jerry's troubles.

fallen. Baird faces financial ruin. Weary and haggard he arrives at his attorney's offices. "Get those securities of Margery's and raise a few thousand on them to tide you over," suggested the attorney.

Baird explained his plight to Virginia, his wife, asking for the securities of Margery, their child, but she refused to give them up.

Virginia asks Drake to get the securities, and, though reluctant, he consents. Drake has just bought a new auto and asks Virginia to go for a spin with him. A bearing is burned out and the mechanic informs Drake it will take about an hour and a half to fix it. Virginia is hungry, so they go to a roadhouse, not knowing it is a notorious place. Virginia suggests Drake phone Baird of their predicament, but he says it is unnecessary.

That evening Baird tells Virginia he knows Drake is almost a member of the family, but others may put a meaning upon the easy companionship between them. Virginia says she is sorry she refused to let him have the securities, which she now offers him. Baird says he will get them from the bank, but she says she sent Drake for them. Baird is furious, saying she confides in Drake and mistrusts her husband, and insists she must think a great deal of Drake. Virginia, dumb with outraged pride, leaves the room. Baird has already received word that, thanks to an unknown friend, they have weathered the storm.

Drake has placed the securities on the table of his room when Baird arrives and asks for them. Drake goes to his room, only to find them gone, and the butler declares he has no idea who could have taken them.

Virginia has, meanwhile, left a note, saying she has gone to her Aunt Sarah's until he regains his reason and begs her forgiveness. Margery comes to him that night. Baird tries to comfort her. The child writes a note to her mother, saying everybody forgives her and loves her very much, so to come right back home again, and signs it, "Your Loving Husband." Margery dresses, leaves the house quietly and rides away on her pony.

A voice commands her to halt, and a blunderbuss is pointed at her through the bushes. It is a boy playing that he is Captain Kidd and searching for buried treasure. Margery joins his band and they row across the lake into his cave. Margery and "Captain Kidd" see a man bury something and then hurry away. They dig up what he buried and are disgusted to find only a package of papers, which "Captain Kidd" puts in his pocket. They eat most of their supplies, and terrified by stories the boy reads, Margery finally begins to cry and wants to go home. Meanwhile, the pony has returned home, and Baird is frantic. Searchers find hair ribbon in the lake. Baird goes to tell Virginia. Both forget their own troubles in the new one.

Captain Kidd and Margery finally start home in the boat, which begins to leak rapidly. At last there is a happy reunion. Margery shows the papers and declares the butler buried them. Though the butler jumps into the lake to escape, the detectives catch him.

Baird receives word that Drake is the friend who has kept him from ruin. Baird shakes hands with Drake, whom Margery hugs and kisses, declaring that when she grows up she is going to be a pirate's wife.

had flung Marie's mother across the room, where she collapsed and fell to the floor. Angry at the child's accusation, he attempted to seize her, but she ran out of the house. A policeman after a terrific fight arrested Marie's father. Later her mother was taken to a hospital.

Nowhere to go, Marie wandered into a park. She suddenly saw a dog. Picking him up she whispered that they were going to be friends. Her happiness was disturbed by the arrival of a maid, who claimed the dog. Marie refuses to part with her find. Unable to separate them, the maid brings them to the home of Bertrand Greer, a well-to-do broker. Bored with his continual plea for her to adopt a child, his wife finally consents. At this moment Marie was ushered in. Fascinated, Greer adopts Marie.

Marie's mother recovers and pays her a secret visit. Marie begs her mother to take her back, but she refuses, as she is unable to care for her. Finally Marie has her maid dismissed and has Greer hire her mother without letting it be known just who she is.

Sunshine reigns until Marie's father is released from prison. He writes a note telling her if she does not return he would steal the child, and carried out his threat. Greer learned of this and also the truth of Marie and her mother. Rushing to her old home, Greer and the mother find Marie's father had been shot by an officer.

Greer's wife takes an overdose of headache medicine and when Greer arrives he finds her dead. Marie and her mother enter. Greer is deep in thought when suddenly Marie steals over to him. Taking her mother's hand, she places it in Greer's. Her mother tells him she is going to leave. Grasping her hand tighter, and looking at Marie, he begs her to remain.

'phone, he receives a shock and endeavors to drop it, but is unable to do so. The man takes the Diamond and escapes. The housekeeper cuts the wires and saves Carslake. Searching the man's coat, which he left behind, Carslake finds this note: "Sapper—Get the Diamond. Bring it to me at Pearl Standish's lodge in the Adirondacks." Carslake leaves immediately. Gravina, one of the priestess' spies, starts on his mission to Pearl, meets Carslake; informs him where he is going and learns of the diamond. He advises he will send Pearl on the trail, but she need never reach Tom.

Sapper gives the Spider the diamond. He unwraps it and gives it to Pearl. Pearl learns of Tom's whereabouts and starts off. Galloping along, Pearl sees Carslake and his henchman rushing towards her. She is about to pass a low hanging bow. Reaching up, she grabs hold of it, letting her horse run from beneath her. Carslake catches her and demands the diamond. She hands it to him. Worried over Tom, Pearl gains the assistance of some constabulary officers. At sundown Tom is to die, according to the decree of the Secret Order. The Priestess takes the scimitar and is ordered to carry out the death sentence. She looks at it in horror and starts towards Tom. Raising the knife, she is about to strike as the film fades out; the cavalry gallops towards the den.

Pearl fires and hits the Priestess in the hand. She drops the knife and flees. Pearl rushes to Tom and unbinds him. "Now that I have you, I simply must get the diamond," says Pearl.

Carslake and his adherent catch a train as Pearl comes galloping towards the station. Seeing that she has missed the train, Pearl jumps into a machine and passes the train. She jumps out and on to the railing of the bridge. As the train is passing beneath, she drops on to the train and goes into the coach where Carslake is. Pearl speaks to the astounded Carslake. "The Diamond, please." Carslake smiles as his adherent comes behind Pearl and holds a stiletto at her ribs as the film fades.

SEVEN PEARLS (Episode No. 2, "The Bow String"). Two Parts.

Harry Drake discovers that the masked figure who held him up is Ilma. When they realize the intruder has departed, they discover the pearl has disappeared. Harry tries to comfort Ilma. He tells her that he loves her, but she tears herself away from him saying, "Love me? Do you realize how I must pay for those pearls?" She then tells Harry she must go into the Sultan's harem or see her father killed, if she cannot recover the pearls.

Harry offers to co-operate with her and Ilma suggests he pretend to join Grady's gang. He agrees to do so.

Ilma is traced by the Sultan's executioner, to Harry's apartment. Standing outside the door, he overhears their conversation. Nemesis, who secured the pearl from Harry and Ilma, has been overcome by the executioner who takes the pearl from him.

Harry again tells Ilma he loves her and is about to kiss her when he hears a knock at the door. He looks through the keyhole and assures Ilma no one is there. She points to the floor, starting back in terror as she sees a bow string, used to strangle women of the harem who flirt, slipped under the door. Later the pearl is mysteriously returned to Ilma, and Harry, gambling for Jack's pearl, loses his own.

That night, a member of the gang, sneaks into a rich man's residence. He is followed by Ilma. Entering a room used as a picture gallery, decorated by suits of armor, Jack dons one of the suits. Drawing his sword, he starts to cut out one of the pictures. He is interrupted by Ilma, who demands his pearls. He tells her he cannot get at them through his armor. He overcomes Ilma and, tying her to a chair resumes his work.

The door opens, and a scond figure in armor enters. Jack fumbles for his gun but is unable to get it from under his armor. The strange figure draws his sword and he and Jack fight like knights of old. Jack is overpowered. The stranger proves to be Harry. Recovering the pearls, Harry gives them to Ilma, and starts towards the window after Jack, who tries to escape. Ilma backs towards the curtain. In an instant some unknown throws a curtain over her head, takes the pearls and escapes.

IDOLATERS (Five Parts—Sept. 9).—The cast: Viola Strathmore (Louise Glaum); Curtis de Forest Ralston (George Webb); Anita Carew (Dorcas Matthews); Borul, Egyptian servant (Lee Hill); Burr Britton (T. S. Guise); Druce Winthrope (Hugo Koch); Oscar Brent, stage manager (Milton Ross). Story by John Lynch and M. Katterjohn.

Two girls become acquainted while waiting in a railroad station on the way to New York, where both expect to make careers. Violet Strjker, flashly dressed, expresses her opinion that a girl must four-flush to get ahead in the world, while the other, Anita Carew, believes that success is attained only by work.

The two are brought together later in a strange situation. Violet, under the name of Viola Strathmore, has gained success as an actress through the friendships of masculine admirers. One of these men is a young playwright, Ralston, whom Anita has married. In a vain attempt to keep his affection, Mrs. Ralston visits Viola to plead with her. She is spurned by the audacious beauty, and her pride is crushed when her husband makes his appearance in the apartment, shamelessly boasting of his love for Viola.

In Ralston's play, "Vanity," Viola makes her great hit, but it is not lasting, for the man who has financed the production turns against her when he discovers her faithlessness. In a moment of mad fury Viola kills Ralston, whom she believes to have caused her downfall. Her only friend is the Egyptian servant, who has cherished a certain love for her.

The climax comes when this barbaric lover defies the law that seeks to punish her, and the woman reaps the penalty of her lustful career.

TIDES OF FATE (Five Parts—Sept. 3).—Fanny Clawson is rescued from a runaway horse and a watery grave by Stephen King, a newcomer to the village. He is a flashy, agreeable adventurer, and Fanny's gratitude turns to love. When Claudia's husband, Ezra Nelson, the mayor of the town, expresses a doubt regarding King's character Fanny upholds King.

Captain John Cross, of the Northwest Mounted Police, is spending his vacation in the village. He is attracted by Fanny, but she has eyes for King only. On the day of his return to duty, Cross experiences a keen disappointment when he reads of the engagement of Fanny to Stephen King.

Ezra shows King a report from a private detective that King has served a prison term for counterfeiting. King denies this. He urges Fanny to marry him and go to the city at once.

In the Northwest, a year later, the Mounted Police round up a band of train robbers, and Cross, still suffering from the effects of his nervous breakdown, loses his nerve and deserts. Charged with cowardice, Cross is discharged without honor. Fergus, his friend, not believing Cross cowardly, resigns his commission to go with the dishonored man.

King's indifference to his wife, and the mystery with which he surrounds his occupation cause her unhappiness.

The appearance of a new counterfeit note results in the Government agents following a clue to the corner grocer, from where it is traced to Fanny.

In accordance with instructions received from King, urging her to express him the iron ore which he has hidden under the couch, Fanny pulls out a heavy box, speculating as to its contents. The Government agents come upon her with the box, which contains counterfeiter's plates. She is arrested and convicted on circumstantial evidence. Hoping to retrieve the past, Cross, accompanied by Fergus, enlists in the service of Uncle Sam. In the Philippines, they are among the soldiers sent to quell an uprising among the Moros. Cross, single-handed, volunteers to go for aid. Fergus follows. The natives are put to rout.

King escapes to the coal district, where he hides among the miners. At the prison entertainers give a performance. One, noting Fanny's distress, secures her services in helping to dress. After hearing her story she persuades Fanny to escape in a suit of boys' clothes.

At the mines, King gambles and loses his watch. The boss discharges King. The following day, after an accident, one of the miners is brought up dead. Because of the watch he wears, engraved "Stephen King," he is identified as King.

Broken in spirit, Fanny arrives at the home of Claudia, who makes her welcome. Fanny reads of the death of Stephen King, the notorious counterfeiter. Relieved, she looks forward to a new life, but her brother-in-law drives her from the house.

Their terms of enlistment having expired, Cross and Fergus return to America. Ill with fever, Cross remains in New York while Fergus continues to the Northwest. Under an assumed name, Fanny is living in New York. Cross rents a room in the same boarding house. Weakened by the journey, Cross drops a bottle of medicine and groans. The landlady and Fanny rush to his aid. Weeks pass, and with the return of his health, comes love for Fanny.

A Sergeant from the Mounted brings the news that Cross' commission has been restored at Fergus' intercession. His name cleared, Cross proposes to Fanny, who recalling her prison record, fears to share her disgrace with the man she loves, and does not give him an answer.

Later Fanny is seen by King, the fugitive from justice. He follows her to the boarding house, where he demands money. When she refuses, there is a struggle and Cross comes to her aid. Fanny calls for police, and in an attempt to escape King is shot by the policeman. In his dying confession, he clears Fanny of the counterfeiting charge, saying she had no knowledge of his work.

Cross tells Fanny King has cleared her name. They start life anew.

THE MARRIAGE MARKET (Five Parts—Sept. 10).—At an auction sale of thoroughbred horses, Helen Grant bids against Eric Foxhall for Dandy Dick. The horse goes to Helen for five thousand dollars. Foxhall, learning of activity in steel, requests the stock Grant had pledged to him. Grant stalls him off. Foxhall goes to Beale and Marlowe to purchase Southland stock. Here he is shown the stock certificates which Grant had left as security. Beale promises to secure the stock for Foxhall if he can. Foxhall is enraged to find it is the same stock for which Grant had given him a receipt as security for the loan. He confronts Grant, threatening to arrest him. When Helen learns of her father's predicament, she determines to do all in her power to save him.

She goes to Bradley Spayden for a loan of a hundred thousand, offering a pearl necklace and their home, but Spayden says she is the thing he desires most. Putting aside her love for Marlowe, she agrees to marry Spayden. He writes a check for a hundred thousand, payable to Mrs. Helen Grant Spayden. They are married and Helen rushes to her father's office. With the check she buys from Foxhall her father's receipt for the stock certificates. Foxhall remarks she sold herself cheaply—he would have paid a million! Marlowe denounces Helen. A shot rings out—her father ignorant of the fact that Helen has saved him, has killed himself. Richard pleads with Helen to annul the marriage before it is too late, but she decides to stand by her bargain. At his club, Spayden regards his marriage as an occasion for getting drunk. As time passes, Helen learns the full meaning of disillusion. Spayden exhibits her to his maudlin friends as the best little thoroughbred he ever owned. Mortified beyond endurance, Helen sells her jewels, and has Beale invest the money for her.

Beale advises Helen she must have five thousand dollars to safeguard her investment. She decides to sell Dandy Dick. She phones Foxhall. He asks her to come to his house. She writes Beale to have Marlowe meet her at Foxhall's at eight-thirty, that she may give him the money to cover her investment. Foxhall offers to lend Helen the money. She realizes his insinuation, and when he attempts to embrace her, she spurns him.

Not finding Helen at home, Spayden learns she has gone to Foxhall's.

The struggle between Helen and Foxhall ends in her shooting him with his revolver. There is a furious ringing of the doorbell. Foxhall rushes Helen into the bedroom. He pulls out his cigarette case, showing a bullet imbedded in it. Spayden rushes in, demanding to know where Helen is. They hear a noise in the next room. Spayden strikes Foxhall down, and drags Helen out. Believing she has killed Foxhall, she swoons. Spayden picks up the revolver and shoots Foxhall. He falls back dead. Horrified, Spayden leaves through a window.

Richard Marlowe finds Helen and Foxhall, both apparently dead. Helen comes to, and Richard believes she has killed Foxhall. He takes her to his mother's home. Marlowe is arrrested for the murder of Foxhall, and pleads guilty. In the days of her convalescence, all knowledge of Marlowe's trial is kept from Helen. Marlowe is pronounced guilty. Helen hears a newsboy calling an extra, and discerns Marlowe's name. With the aid of her nurse, she rushes to court, declares Marlowe innocent, saying she killed Foxhall. Among the spectators are Spayden and Grimes, Foxhall's butler. As Helen confesses, Spayden starts to sneak out, but Grimes yells to have him stopped. Spayden is brought back, and Grimes swears he saw Spayden kill Foxhall. Grimes tells his story.

For fifteen years he has been in the service of Foxhall, whom he hated and despised. After Spayden left, Grimes stole the money Foxhall had prepared for Helen. Spayden denies the story, but he is dragged off by attendants. In another room, he shoots himself. Helen and Richard are reunited.

BETSY ROSS (Five Parts—Sept. 17).—Betsy Griscom, living in Philadelphia at the beginning of the Revolution, is the daughter of a Quaker. Clarissa, her sister, wearing Betsy's cloak, keeps tryst with Clarence Vernon, an officer in General Howe's Army. On her way to meet Joseph Ashburn, owner of a trading vessel, Betsy meets Clarissa. Taking the wrap from her, Betsy goes on to her trysting place. When Joseph expresses a fear that her father will not consent to her marriage, Betsy is for declaring war on her father. Vernon sees Betsy in Joseph's arms, and he believes Clarissa is playing him false. When Betsy has left, Vernon says Mistress Griscom is his. In the duel, Vernon is struck down by Joseph. The town crier, Ketch, urges Joseph to escape. Throwing his hat and cloak into the river, Joseph departs.

Joel Radley, a renegade, finding Vernon wounded, realizes he will be well paid for befriending the rich officer. When Ketch calls for help, Radley kills him. Vernon comes to and Radley shows him Ketch's body, saying Vernon had killed the crier. Radley assures him he will save him if paid well. Radley helps Vernon to his home. Radley compels Vernon to introduce him as a trusted friend, saying he will make a valuable spy for General Howe.

Betsy learns Joseph has been drowned. A year later she marries John Ross, who is afterward killed. Then Betsy becomes proprietress of an upholstery shop. Later Joseph, under the name of Nathaniel Wheatley, has become aide to General Washington. Clarissa is driven from her home and Betsy cares for her.

Disguised as a Dutch vender, Vernon comes to Philadelphia. His resignation from Howe's Army has been accepted and he is waiting to join the American Army.

Betsy suspects Vernon is a spy, when Clarissa tells her she saw him in disguise. As Lieut. Wheatley, Joseph comes to Betsy's shop. Both are startled. Washington commissions Betsy to fashion the country's first flag. Joseph confesses he is a murderer. She promises not to betray him. Unable to go to Clarissa, Vernon urges his mother to reassure her. When the minister accuses Betsy of harboring a scarlet woman, she swears the child is her own. Mrs. Vernon insinuates Betsy's shop is a harbor for spies. Vernon peers through the shop window, and when Joseph is about to shoot, Betsy says a shot may alarm someone who is ill upstairs. Joseph believes she is harboring either a lover or a spy.

Betsy spurns the money offered by Mrs. Vernon, who says her son denies the marriage to Clarissa. Vernon rushes in. He is being pursued by American guards. He pleads with Betsy to hide him. Betsy sits in a chair and covers Vernon with the flag. Betsy smuggles Vernon into a closet. Washington calls to get the finished flag. Joseph asks to be permitted to retain the guard. When he refuses to explain why, he is placed under arrest. Washington gives him a letter to Benedict Arnold, ordering Joseph to report his arrest in person to Arnold. Arnold sends Joseph back to Washington with papers which had been captured on an enemy messenger.

Realizing that through his love for her, Joseph is being dishonored, Betsy confesses there is a spy in the house—her sister's husband. Joseph returns. Washington tells him his position has been explained by Betsy, and asks Betsy to turn her prisoner over to Joseph. When Joseph sees Vernon, he realizes he is not a murderer. Vernon is tempted to go to Clarissa, but he steels himself and leaves with Joseph. Betsy assures Clarissa that she has seen Vernon and heard from his lips that she is his wife. The next morning Betsy comes upon the packet which Joseph had brought from Gen. Arnold. She reads Vernon's name and realizes it must be his discharge from Gen. Howe's Army. Knowing his life is in jeopardy, Betsy rushes to Washington, only to find Joseph has taken Vernon to Gen. Arnold. Believing Vernon already convicted by the Court Martial, General Washington writes a release, with which Betsy goes on an adventurous ride to General Arnold's headquarters.

Radley is suspected by the Americans and arrested. Thrown into Vernon's cell, he confesses he killed Ketch. Vernon is found guilty. Radley is also sentenced to be shot. Betsy arrives, but is told the spy has been executed. As the body is carried out, Betsy finds it is not Vernon but Radley. As the squad aims to fire at Vernon, Gen. Arnold stops the execution, and Vernon is permitted to return to his wife and child, an honorable American. Joseph looks on, unable to understand the relation between Betsy and Vernon. Betsy explains, and his faith restored, Joseph folds Betsy in his arms.

If you are planning to buy a new projector, make sure that it is equipped with a lens, which will bring out sharply every detail in every part of every picture.

Marlux lenses combine the highest perfection of optical corrections with a mechanically perfect focusing construction.

Your operator will be delighted with the sureness with which the Marlux focuses, for as there is no rotation in focusing, there is no possibility of a displacement of the image on the screen.

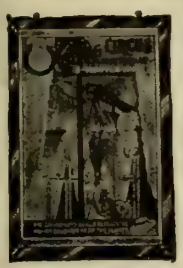
"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

Read What Josiah Pearce & Sons Say About Our Goods



Gentlemen:
Now that you have completed equipment in our new theatres here in New Orleans, and Houston, Texas, we want to take this means of expressing to you our appreciation of the manner in which we have done business with you, also as to the character of your goods. You have, without exception, filled our orders just as promptly as we could ever expect and probably quicker than we had anticipated, and the fact of your having supplied us with brass frames and various other equipment in our fifteen theatres is evidence that we are pleased with your goods, for they are the most attractive, durable and practical that we have as yet found.
We wish you good luck in the prosecution of your work.
Yours very truly,
JOSIAH PEARCE & SONS,

SPEER HOLD-ARKS

Exhibitors should endeavor to gain the confidence of their patrons. Prove to them that the same intense bright light is used every day. No flickers or sputters and a perfect picture.

The demands of the public today are very severe but to satisfy them means success. It also means the adoption of the famous "Speer Hold-Arks" as the negative carbon.

Simplex

A Look Behind the Scenes

On Curtis Street, Denver

where there are more Moving Picture Theatres crowded into two blocks than anywhere else in the world.

When Mr. F. H. Richardson, the noted Projection Expert, visited Denver recently, he wrote in the Moving Picture World:

"I didn't get a chance to visit a single Denver Theatre, and she has some beauties, too, to say nothing of the Curtis Street White Way, which for two blocks would actually make Broadway at 42nd Street at 11 p. m. look shady by comparison.

"It hasn't the tremendous size of New York's White Way . . . but what there is of it is a stem-winding, double-back action humdinger, and, what's more, the entire show is composed of the illumination on the fronts of the Curtis Street colony of Moving Picture Theatres."

Now let us

do what Mr. Richardson didn't have time for, and find out what "makes Denver's White Way go."

Here it is:

Simplex Projection in every Theatre on Curtis Street
Simplex Projection for a seating capacity of nearly 20,000
Simplex Projection delighting 75,000 pairs of eyes daily

Now that you know what is back of Denver's White Way you need no longer wonder why it is such a success, why it compares so favorably with New York's White Way.

And of course you can't overlook that what the Simplex is doing for these Denver Exhibitors it will do for you—if you let it.

Let us send you Catalog "A." Then we'll tell you at the same time what Simplex Distributor can help you to the equal of Denver's projection.

Get in touch with the Simplex Distributor. He's the friend of the Exhibitor.

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS INC.

¶ Art, in its various forms of expression, obtains a following only so long as it maintains a lead. Sophistication, more than familiarity, breeds contempt. If you permit your audiences to grow beyond the pictures you show, you lose their patronage.

¶ The most progressive managers are the first to recognize this condition as they are the first to suffer from it. The average feature, or the best feature produced in the average way, not only does not solve the problem, it makes matters worse by false promises.

¶ Yet——There are directors unhampered by producers, and a few producers unfettered by greed or tradition, who have "seen visions and dreamed dreams." Their work marks the present limit of the moving picture art. As the art advances in the future, these men will be behind the movement, and the pictures will reach the screen thru JEWEL Productions (Inc.).

¶ JEWEL Productions (Inc.) is not a producing concern. It is not afflicted with a producing "policy." Its sole business is to market fine pictures. Extraordinary merit alone determines the pictures bought and distributed by the JEWEL organization.

¶ We have thus far acquired the rights to only five pictures after examining a large number. Three are from the Universal Film Mfg. Co.—"Come Through," George Bronson Howard's greatest melodrama; "Sirens of the Sea," the picture beautiful; "Pay Me," the big drama of the West. One to be announced is from Lois Weber. One was made by Edwin Thanhouser. It is the patriotic classic, "The Man Without a Country."

¶ You are asked to see and judge these pictures on their merits—unprejudiced by what we think of them. Write to the address below for further particulars and the address of your nearest JEWEL Exchange.

NORMA TALMADGE

IN

"THE MOTH"

Founded on the Novel by William Dana Orcutt
Directed by Edward José

Those brilliant gifts which gained Norma Talmadge nation-wide popularity in "Panthea," and which doubled the circle of her admirers in "Poppy," establish her as a reigning favorite of the screen in drama of the highest class. Miss Talmadge's success is due to no freak of fortune. Sheer ability — and notable performances that never raise expectations without more than satisfying them — these are the secrects of her high achievement.

"The Moth" is the first of a series of eight pictures in which Norma Talmadge will be seen during the coming year.

You like this picture

Three times a day at least you play a part in it—every hour of the day you grapple with its problems, for this is a compelling presentation on the screen of the most vital national problem which this country has had to face: the problem of food conservation and of price fixing.

"the Public be Damned!"

has been secured for immediate release by

SELECT SP PICTURES

This is the sensational photoplay success on which Herbert Hoover, official food administrator of the United States, placed his emphatic approval when the picture was shown at the Strand Theatre, New York, to audiences which packed this big playhouse. Aside from its value as a timely and forceful expose of food gambling, this is a corking fine photo-drama in which the principal roles are visualized by two favorite screen stars,

MARY FULLER

RITA JOLIVET

The International Star, in

"LEST WE FORGET!"

Directed by LEONCE PERRET

THE distinguished stage artiste, RITA JOLIVET, is shown in this picture as the center of a powerful drama, the scenes of which reflect international events at the beginning of the European war. Based on actual occurrences in the memorable summer of 1914, the play presents as its central picture the torpedoing of the Lusitania. RITA JOLIVET was one of the survivors when the Lusitania was destroyed by a German submarine, and in this picture she lives over again the memorable scenes that accompanied the sinking of the ill-fated steamer. Running through the photoplay is a tender love story. Miss JOLIVET, supported by a notable cast, in this picture displays to advantage those talents which have made her a star of international repute.

WHAT OTHER PEOPLE SAY

LILLIAN WALKER

"The Darling of the Screen" in

"THE LUST OF THE AGES"

From the book by Aaron Hoffman
Directed by Harry Revier

"THE LUST OF THE AGES" is all of a big "special" and will rank high as a State Rights money-getter for the three best of reasons: A worthy story, superlative production and a widely-known and talented star appearing at her best.

The surprise and wonder start with the first clicks of the projector and endure through the seven reels, while the spectator sits transfixed at the strength, beauty and true artistry with which the thing is treated.—GRAVES in MOTOGRAPHY.

From first to last of that sort that will make sure appeal to feminine audiences. Particularly charming and strikingly well done. Should be billed as a special attraction.—EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW.

Ingeniously directed and photographed along original lines. A timely story. It ranks as one of the most important photoplay productions of the present day.—JOLO in VARIETY.

Pretentiously produced and excellently staged, "THE LUST OF THE AGES" is a picture decidedly above the average run and is imaginatively and picturesquely presented. Miss Walker's many admirers will be delighted by her return and be glad to see her in a picture that has many claims to the unusual.—SUNDAY TELEGRAPH.

An interesting and unusual offering with technical bits of artistry and decidedly different from the ordinary routing productions. It has an element of romance, but beneath it all there is a thought which will reach home. The interest is held throughout, and any fan will consider this a production worth while. Miss Walker's work in this production will not soon be forgotten.—WID.

Exceptionally good State Rights feature. Entirely different from the average run. Miss Walker's work is above criticism.—NEW YORK REVIEW.

The film will sell itself because it is a criterion of photographic art, beautiful to the eye, and holds the attention throughout. It is one of the pictures which can be warmly endorsed.—L. H. in BILLBOARD.

A production that will stand the scrutiny of the classes and registers with force. There is a certain grandeur about this production that holds. Some of the best work ever shown on the screen comes to light in this production. Miss Walker's work will elicit praise from her many admirers. If there is any reason why the exhibitor in any locality cannot book this feature and "cash in," the reviewer has failed to recognize it.—KELLY in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

A pretentious subject with many novelties, touches that add to the picturesqueness of the subject.—MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

An excellent interpretation, both for beauty and direction of an absorbingly interesting story, and the interest is not permitted to lag for a moment. Miss Walker displays her customary ability and charm. Exhibitors managing any class of theatre may rest assured that "THE LUST OF THE AGES" will meet with instantaneous success.—F. T. in DRAMATIC MIRROR.

Lillian Walker has done nothing so good as her portrayal of Lois Craig in "THE LUST OF THE AGES," nor has any screen actress been allotted a more delightful character to portray. Her work stamps her as one of the screen's foremost players. The episodes of "THE LUST OF THE AGES" are tremendously gripping with much heart interest.—EXHIBITORS' HERALD.

Above is the verdict of the keen-sighted, discriminating critics upon whom the trade relies. We can say no more.

Franchises for the remaining seven Lillian Walker productions to be produced during the year are being awarded to the State Right purchasers of the initial production.

A Man's Man.
He is no respecter of persons or pomp.
Braid of gold,—fine feathers,
To him they are meaningless.
Is a man TRUE?—No one may tell by his skin.
Deep in his heart lies the worth of a MAN.

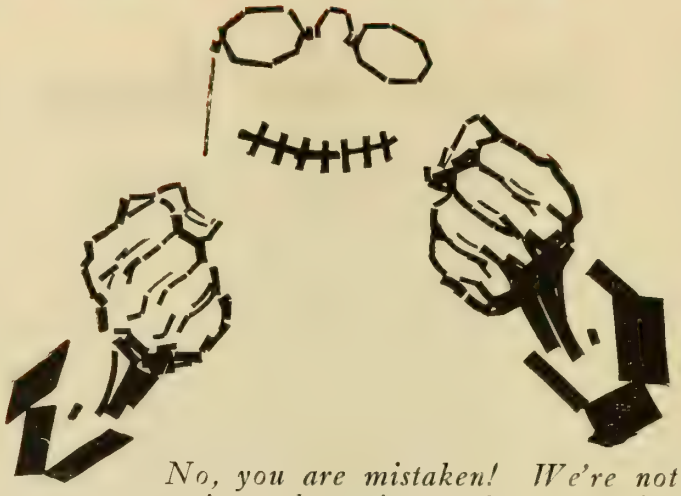
PARALTA PLAN



No, you are mistaken! We're not shaking our fists at you; we're only trying to be emphatic—talking with both hands.

We believe what we have to say to you in the Paralta Plan book is of great importance to your interests as an exhibitor, and so we adopt one of the strenuous methods of the most forceful personality in American public life to impress this fact on your mind and talk with both hands.

Some exhibitors have not yet sent for the Paralta Plan book. It only costs one's name and address on a one-cent postal card. Are you one of them? If so, why?

Real wise men get all the information they can about their own business from every possible source. Why not be a real wise man?

You have heard much about working on system. This book not only tells you of a system that will work in your interests, but it also tells you how another SYSTEM is working against you day and night.

Write for the Paralta Plan book. It is only sent on request. Read it and know every angle of your own business. Knowing "all his game" made Rockefeller a billionaire.

Speaking for Chicago

Oma Moody Lawrence, motion picture critic of the Chicago Evening Post, telegraphs to Goldwyn the following enthusiastic approval of Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine":

Congratulations on Madge Kennedy's first Goldwyn Picture, "Baby Mine" which opened at the Colonial today. The critics at the advance showing here agreed it was a credit to Goldwyn and the industry. Make more like it. We don't care how hard we work looking at Madge Kennedy if she continues in the present form.

To introduce this lovely star Goldwyn will conduct a tremendous nation-wide campaign of exploitation backed up in each community by publicity of the most unusual character ever employed in the industry. Pathé

Up to Now Exhibitors Have Talked of "The Iron Claw" as the Biggest Business Getter They Ever Had. Now They All Admit That Pathé Has Given Them Something Even Greater –

PEARL WHITE

Pathé has the best serial organization in the world – it has the best serial stars, the best serial writers, the best serial directors; Pathé knows first how to make a quality serial and secondly how to help the exhibitor fill his house every time he shows an episode of that serial. Many exhibitors who once booked Pathé serials for one day only now show each episode for a week, proof positive that Pathé serials pay big dividends in large attendance and pleased patrons.

The later episodes of "The Fatal Ring" are even better than the earlier ones. Episodes 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 set a new mark in thrills, interest and suspense. As your audiences see each episode they will be hungry for more. If you haven't booked it, do so today – then run two episodes a week until you have caught up. You'll find it the best investment your ever had in your theatre.

Pathé

Not only are Pathé serials the best written, the best produced, the best acted, but they are the best advertised. In the chief cities of the land as well as many others the principal newspapers publish the novelizations of the serials and carry the extensive help-the-exhibitor advertising.

The following is only a partial list of Sunday newspapers which will publish the novelization of Every exhibitor should book; every American should see

In the Wake of the Huns

These pictures, taken under the supervision of the French Government, will stir the blood of every beholder and raise it to fighting pitch. Through miles of wanton destruction, villages pillaged, orchards fiendishly cut down, nothing untouched - everything burned, dynamited or defiled you see the conquering armies of France, our allies, hot on the trail of the perpetrators of unmentionable deeds!

This is History indeed. It is timely, fascinating. It should outdraw any two reel picture ever filmed.

Ask the nearest Pathé Exchange about it, book it, advertise it. You will find it will PAY!

Everyone who loves to laugh is a booster for the two reel

Lonesome Luke Comedies and the new one reel

Rolin Comedies

featuring Harold Lloyd

These comedies are averaging over 90% in excellence right along. Exhibitors, newspapers and trade papers all praise them. It takes quality to bring out such comment as these receive!

"'Luke's Lively Life' is a wonderful comedy. My audience was well pleased."

—William Maguire, Silverton, Colo.

"Harold Lloyd as 'Lonesome Luke' does many original funny stunts and keeps the audience guessing as to what he will do next. He is guaranteed to produce loud and long laughs--in fact he will burst your laughing valve wide open."—Dallas, Texas, Herald.

"'Lonesome Luke, Mechanic' has all the earmarks of originality. The action is quick with plenty of good hearty laughs."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"'Over The Fence', a one reel Rolin featuring Harold Lloyd, has plenty of true out and out laughs. Its interesting plot and original bits bring this release out of the ordinary class."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

Send your audiences away with a smile – show these "Lonesome Luke" and Rolin comedies.

It is with full appreciation that states rights buyers demand productions that are "Special" in every way—stories, stars, casts, and direction, that Pathe offers

TODAY with FLORENCE REED

and

THE MAD LOVER with ROBERT WARWICK

as States Rights Propositions Extraordinary!

¶ Judged from every angle, by every standard that makes a picture great, TODAY is not merely one of the best pictures of the year but one of the very greatest that has ever been made. Harold Edel, manager of the Strand Theatre, did not hesitate to call it one of the six best pictures he ever saw, and TODAY had its premiere at the Strand. Newspaper and magazine critics lavish praise upon it. The play by George Broadhurst and Abraham Schomer was a tremendous hit for over a year—the picture will be an even greater success. Miss Reed says it is the best picture she ever starred in. It is admitted by all that Harry Rapf and his director, Ralph Ince, gave TODAY the very highest grade of production.

¶ Robert Warwick is one of the best drawing stars of the day. Everyone knows him, everyone likes to see him on the screen. In THE MAD LOVER he is at his best. Leonce Perret not only wrote the story but directed the picture—that means that it is beautiful and artistic from beginning to end. Prominent film men who have seen it give THE MAD LOVER unstinted commendation. It is a picture that will be successful in any house.

¶ TODAY is in seven parts; THE MAD LOVER is in six; Harry Rapf, the producer, considers them the best pictures he ever made and he has made many good pictures.

Crowds at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre, New York, The Last Day of a Four Weeks' Run of "THE ITALIAN BATTLEFRONT."

Facts to Face

YOU may not like "war" pictures, nor believe in their drawing power.

Neither do we.

Why, then, are we handling "The Italian Battlefront?"
Because THESE ARE NOT WAR PICTURES AT ALL.

They are a great, living, breathing, human document of a super-struggle—with the war taken out.

They are not propaganda films. They are not educational pictures. They are not visions of horror.

Jammed with dramatic action and effects, unequalled as Charles Darnton, in "The Evening World" declared, by "anything along Broadway," these pictures combine suspense, splendor of scenes, such as no camera has ever before depicted; thrills, romance, faith, courage, and above, and beyond all, a portrayal of self-sacrifice that gives every one who sees it a new lease on life.

Do not take our word for these statements.

See the picture yourself in any of the big centres in which it is being presented. Judge of the enthusiasm and size of the crowds. Note the make-up of the audiences—the number of high-priced seats — $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00 — filled by Americans—the automobiles lined in front of the theatre.

Compare the business done by this picture—not in one city, but everywhere it has been presented—with the straggling, inflated "runs" of other New York showings, given at a tremendous loss, for the purpose of "making" the picture.

Then ask yourself, regardless of previous opinion or prejudice, whether you can get back of these facts.

A few territories—near enough for us to serve efficiently—cannot be had for love nor money. Others available, if you act quickly.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MEN WHO EXHIBIT PICTURES

How many pictures offered you for contract this season have you seen?

Are you letting other men furnish your brains or are you using your own?

An extensive exhibitor who has played the pictures of all the producers in his twenty-five theatres has found by studying his audience that the Best Star in the world will not carry a feeble story and an inexpensive production.

You know that, too, don't you; and your box office suffers, too, doesn't it?

A Big Cast in a big story and a wonderful devil-take-the-cost production has a vastly greater drawing power than a big star in a hastily written story and an indifferent production.

You know that, too, don't you?

Mr. Exhibitor, the handwriting is on the wall. Witness the Fox Standard Pictures and reap the golden harvest.

Witness "THE HONOR SYSTEM."

Witness "JACK AND THE BEANSTALK."

Witness "THE CONQUEROR," a titanic American drama with William Farnum at his best.

Witness "THE SPY" with Dustin Farnum in the timely American patriotic drama with exposures that will startle any audience, and melt a heart of steel with its dramatic punches.

Witness "CAMILLE," a Theda Bara super picture that women cannot resist—men want to see it—children, too, will appreciate "CAMILLE."

Witness "WHEN A MAN SEES RED"—William Farnum in the greatest dramatic story ever staged in the history of the world.

Still greater Standard Pictures produced along the same efficient, careful lines, built on the solid foundation of good showmanship:

Witness the coming Jane and Katherine Lee Series; the coming Fox Kiddie Series.

Witness the bomb shells that will write new motion picture history, namely: Theda Bara in "CLEOPATRA" and William Farnum in "LES MISERABLES."

Well, this is why an extensive exhibitor after years of studying the trend of the taste of critical audiences produced Standard Pictures, which include the aforementioned. He insists that his fellow exhibitors see these pictures before they book them, for he wants them to use their brains along with his before sharing with him the millions he has already ventured.

The wise exhibitor will respond to his impulse and see these pictures before he contracts for a pig in a poke.

Facts and Comments

SPURRED on, no doubt, by the attempts of the music composers to bleed the picture theater managers by way of a graded yearly tax for permission to play music already bought and paid for, we now have the musicians' unions trying to dictate to the picture theater managers how many men they may employ in their houses. If we are not mistaken, a similar attempt was made by this same dictatorial body some time since on the legitimate theater owners and managers. Instituting a policy of killing the goose that lays the golden egg seems to be the long suit of some of the leaders of our unions, with consequent loss and very often serious readjustment of living conditions to the rank and file of their own members. Unless the theater owners and managers present an unflinching front against such unwarranted and illegal encroachment of their rights, nothing but choas and ruin all round can be the result.

AGAIN referring to this new "stand and deliver" policy of the music composers, we would refer theater managers once more to the article on this subject on page 1530 of our issue of September 8. Managers can secure all the music they really need and for which no royalty or "music tax" can be demanded. The composer and publisher of music are entitled to their share, but said share can only be equitably secured by placing it on the first cost and not by any additional tax for so-called performing rights. As a matter of fact, the publishers and composers have only themselves to blame for present unsatisfactory conditions and they seem to be going at the readjustment on an altogether unjust basis.

THE unanimity of condemnation of the recent vote of the N. A. M. P. I. in refusing membership to a large body of exhibitors indicates quite conclusively that this action was not based on justice and right principles. That the action was dictated by a mistaken policy of self-interest on the part of those who desired to curry favor with the small body of exhibitors who mainly represent their own narrow interest in this city becomes more and more evident as the question receives further consideration. Fortunately the vote does not adversely affect the great body of exhibitors throughout the country, who are, after all, the real backbone of the exhibiting side of the industry. Refusing exhibitors representation in the N. A. M. P. I. just means that much of a loss to the latter body, to our way of thinking.

LAYING out a business policy that is worthy of the name and not primarily intended as a get-rich-quick scheme is surely not as easy as one would think, judging from the mistakes that are continually made along this line. No matter whether it is the business policy of an exhibitor for his theater or that of an exchange with his patrons or the bigger and further reaching policy of a producing combination that affects all branches of the industry. We have had examples galore of the foolishness of over-reaching; we have seen theaters driven to the wall through trying to gouge the public, we have seen large business in the renting and exchange end of things go down the hill for the same reason. Treat your public fair and square, "give them all you can for a dime and they will give you all the dimes they can" was the good old motto of a successful exhibitor. We hear a lot today about "open booking" and various other kinds of exchange "policies," but no policy will be permanent that does not look ahead to the extent of building up the business of its clients while building up its own. All attempts at securing exclusive control of this big industry or anything like it are bound to fail and their promoters should be able to see that success itself would mean eventual failure.

IN PHILADELPHIA the I. A. T. S. E., Local 307, has passed a resolution to provide $100 to the dependents of every member of the Local who dies in honorable discharge of his duties in the United States service during the war. This will be raised by levying one dollar on every active home member of the Local. One of the greatest benefits that the struggle in which we have taken up our part is already bringing to us is the awakening of brotherhood and solidarity and responsibility for our individual share. Those who go pluck the flower of service, but its sweetness extends to the senses of everyone whose heart is in the right place.

Miss Mollycoddle

By Louis Reeves Harrison

IF SCREEN subjects are to be vital, if we are not to deliberately avoid noticing great changes taking place in our midst, necessary as air to our existence, contributing heavily to our development as a race, we should not fail to recognize a remarkable evolution in womanhood at home and abroad. We need not give much serious attention to violent and erratic efforts at enfranchisement, but we cannot shut our eyes to certain steady and irresistible changes taking place in the mother half of humanity, which may be for our benefit or detriment, according to circumstances we help to create by the production and exhibition of moving pictures.

Standing as we do in a vestibule of progress, it is permitted to glance back at the fine mothers many of us have known with pride and affection, but only that we may more deeply realize a responsibility we share in common for mothers of the future. We may thus face the other way with intelligent comprehension of what present conditions are leading to, what sort of false mental images we are setting up before the people in our repetition of two stale types, that spectral relic of Slavic superstition, the "vampire," and that listless lollypop of exaggerated ineptitude, the curly-haired, treacle-smeared simp, Miss Mollycoddle, the ingenue.

Some of us who have been a long time very much alive, who have travelled other lands than this, have never seen a woman bearing the slightest resemblance to the vampire of stage and screen—she has long been discarded in fiction. To the common run of men she is the morbid imaging of some disappointed boob, the vengeful conception of some weakling Adam, who tried to blame it all on Eve. What a small-town ideal of womankind! The only place to exploit her is in farce-comedy.

What do our women represent? For one thing the average member of the mother sex lives a far cleaner life than the average male. She helps him to live right from the time he lisps at her knee to the last days of his grouchy old age, whereas he has been known to devote the energy of ingenuity at his command to bringing her down morally to his level, not even after he is married, but usually so. Once in a while a girl hits back at him as hard as he gives it to her. That is when he bawls it out all over the lot, so that everybody may hear, "she is a vampire." He renders some such service to his kind as the "Pass-a-fist" does.

Forget the vampire, and let us turn to the other type, one set up persistently as the ideal to which we all aspire, the intelligent and healthy wife, the mother of a race hardy, resolute and energetic, Miss Mollycoddle, who embraces the innocuous hero in the last act. She is representative of something to some people. There is Mrs. Bulge, for instance, rotund, weepy, overfed product of table, rocking-chair and bed. Mrs. Bulge leaves the dirty dishes in the sink and goes to the movies of an afternoon. She thinks Miss Mollycoddle is a "little dear," and she really does not mean to pun on the high cost of squab stars to the average producer.

There is also thirteen-year-old Chewing-gum Mabel, of lanky legs and ardent hopes. She sees herself reflected in the "little dear" of colorless character and thin-soup emotions. How grand to be rescued from the humiliation of having to ride in trolley cars by a young Wall Street millionaire in dress suit and shiny pumps and carried away in his twin-six to a paradise of bridge whist and late suppers! She fairly dotes on her favorite Miss Mollycoddle and says of her on the way to the soda fountain, "I think she is just simply too sweet for anything."

One brilliant little artist has shown unusual talent. She interprets all sorts of roles with skill, and she has a vast amount of personality, which enables her to put zip into the characters she impersonates. In imitation of this successful actress we have been flooded with ingenues of doll faces and curls irrespective of native ability or consistency of performance. Worse, the average ingenue is not representatively American except in rare cases, and she is not at all representative of the new womanhood.

There are a lot of changes taking place in our ideas of family life, deeply concerning the modern woman, and progress in standards of education and intelligence have so greatly elevated our ideas of what woman should be and can be that she has become an object of tremendous interest to all classes of people except those mummies who believe that the world is standing just where it was when they were really alive. It is among the masses that these new ideas are taking hold, the very people who are counted upon as steady patrons of the moving picture show. The modern young woman does not wait for some man to come along and rescue her from pitiful dependence. She does the rescuing herself.

All this is changing our conditions of marriage, sometimes to the disadvantage of the man who earns only a moderate salary, quite as often to his benefit, but this new individualism of the woman, bearing upon important questions of marriage and divorce, upon the future of her offspring, upon our world status as a great race, cannot be expressed through negative and colorless types any more than through unnatural ones. The fact should be faced that we are up against new social conditions, and our bright young girls should be portrayed as they are, not as they were in the days of the good little girl and the bad little girl. She of today is as composite as we are.

We are just beginning to realize that woman can fight. This is a dangerous subject, but a recent writer on it declares that she has been sticking a bayonet in her husband for many years; not only that, but turning it around inside of him, very much to his discomfort. Ask any married man if this is not true. She likes a fight better than he does, and she doesn't care much where it takes place or who knows it. We ought to occasionally portray her as she is, not always as we think she ought to be. She is here, just one of us, with her full share of the primitive instincts, impelling her for good or bad, moved by the same influences which affect us, quite as capable as we are of improvement.

It would at least add variety to our screen stories if we had a few examples of the modern intelligent woman offered now and then, at least so that she is recognizable as a product of existence as we know it, and not as it has been plotted out according to set types. She is all types in one. If she must be idealized, let it be in physical perfection, not an amazon, but the kind of a woman who responds to the masculine conception, which is certainly not that of the mollycoddled kind.

In that every twelveth marriage ends in divorce, with more pending, lies opportunity for stories dealing with men and women after that eternal embrace in the last act of the photoplay. The real end is not there—it is the beginning of comedies, dramas and tragedies without number.

Do Something

By Sam Spedon

To Everybody.

PROBABLY others have thought these same thoughts. Probably some have already put them in operation. Probably there are others to whom they will be a discovery. To some they may be a revival. We will let it go at that. Audiences change every four years. If they didn't, you wouldn't have been making and showing pictures for the past ten years and we wouldn't have been writing. If they didn't change, there would be no hope for motion pictures and publications in the future. There is nothing new under the sun.

To the Exhibitors.

Until the exhibitors, exchangemen and the producers—the three great factors of motion pictures—get down to an established business basis of organization they cannot do business safely and sanely. The exhibitor cannot look for relief until he can decidedly calculate the number of patrons within his reach, in his immediate territory; the capacity of his theater; what profit he can make after he has paid cost of film service; the running and upkeep of his theater. When he can do this and make it clear to the exchangemen that he can afford to pay but so much for his pictures, then, not till then, will he be relieved from the excessive prices asked by the salesmen sent out to make a record for themselves and the interests they represent. To accomplish this for the benefit of all, particularly its members, the national organization should have each and every exhibitor send in or secure in some other way the above-mentioned information and keep it on file with a record of the management's responsibility. In this way the organization could arrive at what would be an equitable price for productions or service, based on its knowledge of what the exhibitors could afford to pay in each territory and class of theater. It would also enable the organization to become acquainted with the character of the theaters represented by its membership.

To Exchangemen and Distributors.

With this same information the exchange would not be sending out salesmen on "gypping" excursions to establish records for themselves. Furthermore, it would make the salesmen more secure in their positions, by showing their business superiors that it is impossible to do business where it doesn't exist and get prohibitive prices where possibilities are limited. It would also enable the exchange manager to figure on the amount of business he might reasonably expect from the exhibitors and the different territories. In other words, he could work intelligently and would not be susceptible to the "fairy tales" told by the smart salesmen who promise much and produce little. He would do business on a safe and sane basis.

To the Producers.

With this knowledge in hand, the producer could estimate what he should expend in the making of a picture. He would know he could or could not employ high-priced stars with or without proportionate returns. If he could not afford the expense, he would naturally tell them he could not engage them and would have to employ less expensive ones. He would not indulge in "pipe dreams" and "brain storms" of golden harvests and Eldorados. Such knowledge would bring the stars to a realization of facts and do away to a great extent, if not entirely, with extravagant salaries demanded and paid by producers. If these facts were known, all producers would be led to estimate in this way and stars would determine that one producer could not safely afford to pay more than another. They would wisely decide, all things being equal, to stick and not change, as they have in the past, from one company to another. The stars might conclude that their value as actors, their drawing power and past records should be considered. So they would; but with the facts before them they would face an insurmountable barrier to excessive demands.

Our great benefit to be derived from an exact knowledge of business conditions would be the making of better pictures that would stand on their own merits, story and direction, and not entirely upon the greatness of the stars employed.

Another benefit would be that the exhibitors, be they few or many, who demanded or expected high-priced stars would have to pay the high price to enable the producer to pay the stars. Thus it would devolve upon the exhibitors to decide. This brings us to our first premise. Exhibitors are the base of operations and must furnish or present the facts to the other two branches of the industry if they hope to get what they want.

Don't Forget the Public.

It sometimes makes excessive and extravagant demands as well as the stars and other individuals. Certain classes of it want the best and first choice. The question to decide is: How many in the localities of your theaters will pay for it, or can afford to pay for the choice? If they can do it, then, Mr. Exhibitor, it is again up to you to get the price and pay the producers for it. If your public can't or won't pay you, then it will have to wait and take second or third choice, according to the returns of your box office. When you acquaint the distributor, the producer and the public with the facts and take them into your confidence, the motion picture business will be conducted on a safe and sane business basis.

May Be Right at That.

At a recent convention a well-known producer and exhibitor said: "I will be glad when the exhibitors organize and lay down some well-defined and formulated terms upon which the distributor can do business and eliminate existing differences between him and the exhibitor. If the exhibitors can say and mean what they say, they will insure us and themselves against failure."

They Don't Know.

The foregoing assertion prompts us to believe that the distributors and producers don't know just where they are at and want the exhibitors to tell them. We feel sure that the man who made the assertion would not listen or take heed to an individual exhibitor if he were to tell him what could be done. We presume he meant exactly what he said: he would be glad if an organized body of exhibitors, big and strong enough, would tell the distributors and producers where they are at.

Activities of War Committees

OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

REPORTS which are being received from the State chairmen of the National Committee, appointed by President William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, indicate widespread enthusiasm in the plan to mobilize the exhibitors throughout the country in aid of the government's war policies.

Striking evidence of this fact is contained in an announcement from President Brady to the effect that every one of his appointees in the forty-eight States have now accepted and are busily engaged in making up lists of the motion picture theaters so as to inform their managers of the plans of the War Co-operation Committee, and that they may be prepared to show on their screens slides or trailers received from the motion picture committees of the National Association acting in conjunction with the members of the Cabinet and the various Federal departments, the Council of National Defense, the Red Cross War Council and the Committee on Public Iinformation.

Rapid progress is being made in the organization of the exhibitors in many States following the successful campaign which was inaugurated last June under the auspices of the National Association and the Exhibitors' League in connection with the Liberty Loan, and the splendid service rendered by the industry in this instance will be greatly augmented in the future, as new theaters are being listed which have only been opened during the past few months.

In this connection a novel plan as set forth in the following letter has been successfully worked out by Herman J. Brown, state chairman of Idaho, which will interest the chairmen in other states:

> I have made arrangements to reach villages so small that our association has no record of the theaters and managers. I did this through letters to the postmasters and was surprised that fly specks on the map all seem to be on deck with some place to show pictures and someone to show them. The postmasters to call personally on the reluctant exhibitors.
> My experience has convinced me more than ever that the screen has the press skinned a mile, as "burgs" of 150 population have a show at least once a week but no paper within a hundred miles.

C. W. Meighan, state chairman of Oregon, has made notable progress in the organization of the exhibitors, according to report contained in the following letter to President Brady:

> In pursuance with the instructions contained in your favor of the 4th, I am now having prepared with all possible care a list of representative motion picture exhibitors from every city, village, town and hamlet in our state; men whom I know will be pleased to serve with unselfish devotion the cause which you have so generously undertaken to promote.
> It may interest you to know that even before you formed the National Committee our exhibitors in Oregon were exerting every possible effort to cooperate with the government. That their work was effective is attested by the fact that the screen in Oregon is given great credit for the splendid over subscription this state showed in Liberty bonds, Red Cross subscriptions, and for the fact that it stands first among all the states in the matter of voluntary enlistments. Our Portland district is the only one in the United States, I am told, which contributed so many voluntary enlistments that no men at all were taken by the government on the first draft. Concerted work on the part of motion picture theaters is credited with contributing largely to this splendid showing.
> I tell you this so you may know that to every extent within the power of our exhibitors in this state you may count upon our fullest, heartiest and most cheerful co-operation.
>
> As state chairman I shall look forward to your various communications and suggestions from time to time and shall be more than pleased to have an opportunity to put them promptly into execution.
> C. W. MEIGHAN,
> Chairman of the Oregon State Committee for War Co-operation, President Motion Picture League of Oregon, Manager People's Amusement Company.

The western states are not the only ones in which active work is under way. Many of the middle west and eastern states are being organized by the state chairmen, and in some localities this campaign apparently affords the first real opportunity for perfecting an exhibitors' organization.

H. M. Morrison, of the Majestic and Princess theaters, Hartford, Conn., and state chairman of the National Committee, is now engaged with plans for effecting the first organization of exhibitors in that state. Mr. Morrison is vice president of the Hartford local, which comprises all the theaters in the state capital, and similar organizations are proposed for New Haven, Bridgeport, Waterbury, Stamford, New London, Meriden and Danbury. Chairman Morrison will issue a call for a general meeting of all the exhibitors of the state at an early date, when the purposes of the War Co-operation Committee of the National Association will be placed before them by President Brady, who is to be invited to attend the conference as guest of honor.

Cabanne to Stage Red Cross Pageant

Prominent Artists of Opera, Stage and Screen to Participate in Great Open-Air Patriotic Spectacle.

WHAT is expected to be one of the most ambitious open-air spectacles produced in this country is the national pageant of the American Red Cross, which will be staged in the beautiful open-air theater on Rosemary Farm, at Lloyd's Neck, Huntington, L. I., on the afternoon of October 5.

The Rosemary Pageant, as the production is now termed for working purposes, was written for the Red Cross by Joseph Lindon Smith, author, traveler and lecturer of Boston, and Thomas Wood Stevens, head of the department of dramatic arts of the Carnegie Institute of Technology at Pittsburgh and president of the American Pageant Association. It will be directed and produced by Mr. Stevens, who was the author and director of the pageant of St. Louis, the pageant of Newark, and the pageant of the Old Northwest. He will be assisted by a number of the foremost pageant directors in the country, including Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Paul Chalfin, Ben Ali Haggin, Prince Pierre Troubetzkoy and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney. Interested in the theatrical side of the production also are E. H. Sothern and William Faversham, while Daniel Frohman is the casting director.

The Rosemary Red Cross Pageant is to be divided into two parts—the first devoted to a series of symbolic scenes representing achievements of the great Allied Nations—the second a dramatic statement of the Allied cause in the present war. The first half is magnificently spectacular, the second half is essentially dramatic in character.

Episodes of ancient, medieval and modern times of the various lands will be depicted and the characters appearing in the numerous scenes will be portrayed by hundreds of the best-known stars of the opera, stage and screen. Among the prominent professionals who have already been enrolled in the cast of the pageant are Mme. Frances Alda, George Arliss, Miss Blanche Bates, Miss Ethel Barrymore, Barney Bernard, Holbrook Blinn, John Barrymore, Miss Constance Collier, Miss Hazel Dawn, Robert Edeson, William Faversham, Miss Irene Fenwick, Miss Mary Garden, Ernest Glendenning, Miss Kitty Gordon, Hale Hamilton, Miss Gladys Hanson, Miss Marie Horn, Shelly Hull, Miss Rita Jolivet, Walter Jones, Howard Kyle, Ernest Lawford, Mrs. Ernest Lawford, Miss Eva Le Gallienne, Miss Edith Wynne Mathison, Major Wallace McCutcheon, Mr. Mortimer, Miss Margaret Mower, Miss Julie Opp, Gabriel Perrier, William Rock, Miss Zelda Sears, Vincent Serrano, Hassard Short, E. H. Sothern, John Philip Sousa, Miss Frances Starr, Paul Swan, Miss Mabel Taliaferro, Miss Alma Tell, Miss Olive Tell, Ernest Truex, Miss Helen Ware, Jack Wilson, Miss Frances White and Miss Marjorie Wood.

For the reason that the Red Cross has planned to make the Rosemary Pageant a national affair and that it is practically impossible to produce and present such a spectacle to the people of every city, it has been arranged to perpetuate the entire pageant on the screen with the original all-star cast as staged and produced in the magnificent Rosemary Farm open-air theater.

The filming of this spectacle will be under the direction of Wm. Christy Cabanne, who has produced some of the masterpieces of the screen, and a seven-reel feature film will be the result of his work. This picture will be shown in every city and town, and in this way the Rosemary Pageant will be brought direct to all the people and will also be a source of revenue to the Red Cross, as the distribution and exhibition of the film will be made for the sole benefit of the American Red Cross.

Working headquarters for the scores of prominent men and women who are giving their time and energy to the Rosemary Pageant have been established at 71 West Twenty-third Street, in offices that have been donated to the Red Cross.

Industry Aids Food Conservation

Chairman Friend of Auxiliary Motion Picture Committee Outlines Importance of Work.

THE motion picture industry in its every phase is being enlisted by the United States food administration to get the whole American people lined up on the food pledge, "which gigantic job must be done," according to the Government's plan.

The motion picture division of the food administration, which is in charge of Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is having produced a series of short subjects which will forcibly visualize the fact that "Food will win the war."

Every motion picture exhibitor in the country is being personally urged to lend his hearty co-operation in this movement and to show the pictures in his theater and also to become a member of the food administration. Exhibitors are being impressed with the fact that by lending their co-operation to the Government in placing these pictures on the screen they will not only be doing their country a great service but they will win for their theaters a higher respect in their immediate communities, and for themselves a sense of gratification because they are materially contributing to the greatest cause of their lives.

"Getting the whole American people lined up on the food pledge is a job that must be done," said Mr. Friend. "The wheatless meal, the meatless meal, and the clean plate must be with us until peace returns.

"This is a sales job. It calls for leadership. Every reader of a newspaper, trade journal and every motion picture lover may consider himself a leader and begin his sales work by selling the food pledge to himself.

"There is a tremendous necessity for food conservation. Not that people shall eat less, but that they waste nothing. Nothing in the world will send this message 'across' to the hearts of the millions of motion picture lovers in this country so forcibly as the visualizing on the screen in a series of pictures the singular fact that the world war can be won by saving food.

"We know how we would save food in Germany—under a dictator. But here the food pledge is entirely voluntary. We are put upon honor. Nobody prescribes what we shall eat, or how much, but ourselves. Nobody keeps a record of our performance but ourselves. In just the measure that we are honorable in this matter are we Americans. That is the sales sense of the food-saving proposition. Now sell it to yourself, and then sell it to those who look to you for leadership.

"Every exhibitor who will co-operate with this movement at this time will be doing the Government a tremendous service, and it is the plan of the food administration to serve him in every respect, so that he, too, will benefit through the assistance he renders in this movement."

The Gold King Screen Company, of Altus, Okla., has announced that the price of their screen will advance to 75 cents on and after November 1, 1917. They state the advance prices in materials have forced them to raise the price.

ELLIOTT SUBJECT FOR FIGHTING IRISHMEN.

At the suggestion of Maxine Elliott, her first Goldwyn production, "The Eternal Magdalene," was given its first outside showing for the entertainment of the soldiers of the 165th Regiment the evening of September 2 at Camp Mills, near Mineola, L. I. It was received with the cheers of the 3,700 men and officers who saw it from the natural amphitheatre where it was shown.

This was the first opportunity offered to Goldwyn Pictures to carry out its offer to provide motion picture entertainment for the soldiers in their encampments both here and in Europe.

Shortly after registration had closed for the draft army, Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures, in a letter to the secretary of war, Newton D. Baker, offered to provide prints of Goldwyn productions for the soldiers. This offer was accepted with thanks by Mr. Baker and the matter was placed in the hands of Raymond B. Fosdick, who is at the head of the commission which has jurisdiction over the recreational activities of the troops.

CHANGES IN MUTUAL BRANCH MANAGERS.

The Mutual Film Corporation has announced several changes in the managerships of branch offices.

J. L. Merrick, manager at Seattle, has been appointed manager at Los Angeles, to succeed T. C. Malcolm, whose resignation was effective August 29.

C. P. Merwin, former booker at the Seattle branch, has been appointed manager of the office.

A. C. Field, manager of the Escanaba branch, has been transferred to the sales force of the Milwaukee office and C. K. Olson, formerly a salesman at the Minneapolis branch, has been appointed branch manager at Escanaba.

B. Whitman, formerly salesman at Winnipeg, has been named branch manager at Winnipeg, succeeding J. H. Boothe, whose resignation became effective September 2.

PEIL RETURNS TO SELIG.

Edward J. Peil, a former Selig player and one of the screen's very best exponents of genteel though none the less deep-dyed villainy, has rejoined the Selig Company's acting forces after a long absence, and will be seen in the important heavy role in "The Still Alarm," now in course of production at the Los Angeles studio, under Colin Campbell's direction. Mr. Peil, among other things, will pay for his screen misdeeds in this feature by being defeated in a thrilling fistic encounter with the hero, played by Thomas Santschi.

EMILE CHAUTARD TO DIRECT MME. CAVALIERI.

An announcement of more than ordinary interest is that Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the beautiful operatic star, will be directed in her first Paramount picture, "The Eternal Temptress," by the eminent French expert, Emile Chautard. This has just been decided upon and work will begin the first part of September upon the production, which is an original play, written expressly for Mme. Cavalieri by Mme. Fred de Grisac, whose work is almost too well known to need mention.

TWO MORE WELL-KNOWN PLAYERS FOR FOX.

Eugenie Forde and Marjorie Daw, famous on the shadow stage, have begun work under the William Fox standard in Hollywood, Cal., in a new picture starring Gladys Brockwell.

Miss Forde was well known for her performances in the legitimate before she came to the films. She appeared for more than fifteen years with such footlight favorites as George Munroe, William Faversham and Chauncey Olcott.

E. O. BROOKS RETURNS TO NEW YORK.

Edgar O. Brooks, for the past two years connected with the Mutual Film Corporation in Chicago, has resigned that position and returned to New York. Brooks paid the Moving Picture World a call upon his arrival and let it be known that he was going to take a few weeks to look around before making another connection. He is looking as though the climate of the Windy City agreed with him.

CIRCLE THEATER CELEBRATES FIRST YEAR.

The Circle Theater of Indianapolis, Ind., celebrated its first anniversary during the week of September 3, augmenting the occasion by showing the first Goldwyn subject, "Polly of the Circus." Special stage settings were devised by Manager McCormick and an unusual music program was arranged by Max Weil, orchestra leader.

Michigan Exhibitors Meeting

Greatest Convention Picture Men of That State Have Ever Held—Affiliated With A. E. A.

THE meeting called for Tuesday, Sept. 4th, at the Hotel Statler, Detroit, Mich., was a huge success—not only because it brought out a large attendance but due to the fact that it resulted in the abandonment of the State branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the formation of a new and greater state association which is to be affiliated with the new American Exhibitors' Association. Michigan is 100 per cent. against the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League because it no longer has confidence in that organization due to its "gag" methods and tyrannical policy as displayed at the recent national convention in Chicago.

The Detroit meeting just referred to was attended by about 75 exhibitors, city and state, and they were owners of large and small theaters. They came to discuss the proposition of a new and greater state association. They listened attentively to the stories by delegates to the national convention of the disgraceful, embarrassing and shameful way they were treated on the convention floor, and when they were all through with their stories, there wasn't a man in the hall that was not more earnest than ever in breaking away absolutely from the national organization.

A vote was taken as to what should be done and everyone present unanimously voted "yes" to a motion made, calling for the formation at once of a temporary state association to be affiliated with the American Exhibitors' Association and the appointment of a committee to work out the proper by-laws and constitution so that steps could be taken in the near future for making it a permanent association. Until such time, S. A. Moran, of Ann Arbor, will act as president, and Claud Cady, of Lansing, as secretary.

A discussion came up regarding the coming convention at Detroit of the American Exhibitors' Association, which is scheduled to meet in Detroit some time during the summer of 1918. While the association will hold its meetings in Detroit, it will be up to Detroit and Michigan exhibitors to decide as to whether they want to hold an exposition, as well as to work out the matters relative to entertainment. A committee and state exhibitors will be appointed to take up these questions during the next ninety days, and to then report to Manager Pettijohn of the national organization. As far as he is concerned, we understand it is perfectly agreeable, although the final yes or no is right up to Michigan and no one else. If the Michigan exhibitors feel that they can successfully conduct such a stupendous affair without losing money, no doubt they will entertain such a proposition, but it will be thoroughly looked into and investigated before any final action is taken.

The principal speakers of the Detroit meeting were Frank Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind., and an officer of the American Exhibitors' Association, and Fighting Sam Bullock, of Cleveland, Ohio. They sure did talk straight from the shoulder and what they said carried considerable weight and made a favorable impression—so much so that when they concluded their talks, there wasn't an exhibitor present that did not agree with them that the American Exhibitors' Association was organized along the right lines. The point made by both gentlemen was that the new national organization had but one thing in mind—and that was "business." Some of the things touched upon by Mr. Rembusch were membership, clean pictures, censorship, Sunday opening, our president, need of economy, cost of programs, over buying, length of program, complaint department, advance deposit system, all exhibitors are welcome, our general manager, this is not a one-man organization and maintenance.

Sam Bullock of Cleveland in his talk practically reiterated the statements made by Mr. Rembusch. He was given a rousing ovation upon the conclusion of his remarks, as was Mr. Rembusch. Both remained in the city until the next day and were shown around the town via motor car.

In the evening there was a big theater party for the ladies at the Washington theater to see "On Trial" given complimentary by J. O. Brooks and John H. Kunsky. At 11 p. m. there was a big stag smoker for the men at an east side restaurant, which was attended by nearly 250 exhibitors and exchangemen. It was positively the largest joint gathering of tradesmen held in the State of Michigan. The smoker was a huge success, thanks to the untiring efforts of King Perry, secretary of the Detroit association, who had full charge of all entertainment features.

F. I. L. M. Club Visits League

Delegation Attends Session of Manhattan Local and Urges Co-operation Between Exhibitors and Exchangemen.

THE meeting of the Manhattan Local No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was held on September 5 at headquarters, 218 West Forty-second Street, New York, President Martineau presiding. The meeting was opened with an address by one of the four-minute men—Mr. Williams, secretary—who took for his subject the co-operation of the exhibitors in and around Greater New York. Mr. Williams said he hoped the picture men would continue their help in the future as they had in the past.

The next matter taken up was the matter of expressage of film. A committee, composed of exchange men representing the F. I. L. M. Club, was present. Mr. Chadwick acted as spokesman. The committee hoped for a better feeling between exhibitors and exchangemen, a solution of the problems of the film delivery system, and for the elimination of film thievery. A committee was appointed, with power to act, for further discussion with a view to a final settlement of the delivery system. This committee, consisting of Messrs. Haring, Brecher and Wolf, met Monday at 2 o'clock at local headquarters.

National President Ochs told of the work accomplished by the National Executive Committee. This was followed by a discussion of the music tax situation.

In a discussion as to the advisability of taking up new headquarters, it was suggested that the local take an entire building with four floors, located between Forty-sixth and Forty-ninth Streets, near Broadway. It was further suggested that the building be shared with the F. I. L. M. Club, thereby creating a better feeling among all parties interested. The division of the building was suggested as follows: One floor for a restaurant, one for a lounging an billiard room, and the other two floors for separate meeting rooms, such as one for exhibitors and one for exchangemen, thereby reducing expenses. A committee was appointed, with power to co-operate with a committee from the F. I. L. M. Club.

The meeting was well attended and harmonious. The resignation of Samuel H. Trigger as a member of Local No. 1 was tendered by William Hilkemeier and Morris Needles and was accepted.

Pettijohn Enthused

Rapid Growth of Sentiment Among Exhibitors in Favor of A. E. A. Interests Him.

"THE action of the exhibitors' convention at Ocean View, Va., illustrates that the exhibitors of the country have awakened to the fact that the American Exhibitors' Association is made up of men who have the interests of the owners of motion picture theaters at heart," said Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the A. E. A.

"Before the State organizations represented at the Virginia convention became affiliated with our organization the delegates carefully studied our plans and principles and then unanimously applied for membership in the American Exhibitors' Association.

"The fact that as State bodies in Virginia, Indiana, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Michigan, South Carolina, District of Columbia, Arkansas, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Georgia, Kentucky and other States, they have joined the A. E. A. speaks for itself.

"Already our organizations in Illinois, New York, New Jersey, the New England States and Pennsylvania are very strong and growing rapidly.

"What impresses me most is that we have succeeded in interesting men who have heretofore no interest in exhibitors' organizations. We realize that meeting with the approval of the exhibitors as we have, it is up to the officers of the association to merit this confidence which is piling upon us in leaps and bounds. We all recognize our responsibilities and will work unceasingly to the end that we may be able to maintain the standard of efficiency as set out in our platform, pledging the making of this organization a powerful weapon in the hands of exhibitors for exhibitors only.

"I can't help but be pleased and elated over our success. It is really wonderful the way the exhibitors are responding. Their responses fully convince me that they have wanted this kind of an organization badly, else we would not have received this practically unanimous vote of approval."

During the past week, Mr. Pettijohn has been deluged with personal letters from exhibitors, applications for membership, checks for dues and inquiries calling for further information.

Maritime Provinces League Election

Officers for the Coming Year Chosen at the St. John Convention—Affiliation With Any American Organization Rejected.

President, Narcisse V. Gastonguay of Halifax: vice-president, Fred G. Spencer of St. John; secretary, J. M. Franklin of Halifax; treasurer, J. G. B. Metzler of Halifax; vice-president for Nova Scotia, N. W. Mason of New Glasgow, N. S.; vice-president for New Brunswick, W. H. Golding of St. John, N. B.; vice-president for Prince Edward Island, C. C. Gaudet, Charlottetown, P. E. I.

A motion to consider the question of affiliation with an American national organization was laid upon the table until the next convention.

RAYNOR TO MANAGE NEW YORK MUTUAL.

W. E. Raynor, manager for George Kleine and the K-E-S-E. New York Exchange, has resigned his position to take up the management of the New York Branch of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mr. Raynor first came to New York four and a half years ago to introduce "Quo Vadis" for Mr. Kleine, which was the first big moving picture road show. Since then Mr. Raynor has handled Mr. Kleine's various enterprises in the East and was finally made branch manager for the K-E-S-E. N. Y. Exchange.

The severing of business connections have been pleasant on both the part of Mr. Kleine and Mr. Raynor. Mr. Raynor has the good wishes of all the leading exhibitors in this territory with whom he is personally acquainted.

PETTIJOHN ATTENDS MARITIME CONVENTION.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, left New York Friday to attend the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Canada, to be held at St. John, N. B., Sept. 8th, 9th and 10th. Mr. Pettijohn received an invitation from W. C. Golding, president of the Canadian exhibitors' organization.

OKLAHOMA GOES OVER TO A. E. A.

L. W. Brophy, secretary of the Oklahoma Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, wired the Moving Picture World, under date of September 5, as follows:

"At the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League meeting at the Lee Huckins Hotel, Oklahoma City, on August 28, our members assembled unanimously voted to quit the league and to make application for a charter in the American Exhibitor's Association—a business organization. There were fifty members present."

At this meeting A. B. Momand, of Shawnee, was chosen president, and H. W. McCall, of Oklahoma City, vice president. L. W. Brophy continues as secretary. He operates the Yale theater at Muskogee.

ONTARIO EXHIBITORS TO JOIN A. E. A.

The motion picture exhibitors of Ontario are organizing under the leadership of M. Mannist, of the Royal theater, Fort Williams, Ont., and when their organization is completed they will apply in a body for a charter in the American Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Mannist is a wide-awake exhibitor who recognizes that the only way the exhibitor can accomplish any reforms is through concerted action with a body that is composed entirely of exhibitors who have no connections with the manufacturer.

He is also avowedly opposed to the advance deposit system, which method of doing business by the producer is being fought by the American Exhibitors' Association.

JAKE WELLS ATTENDS CIRCUIT MEETING.

Jake Wells, president of the American Exhibitors' Association, has been attending the meeting of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit at the Hotel Astor. Charles G. Pettijohn, general manager of the A. E. A., was his guest at the dinner of the Exhibitors' Circuit at the Hotel Astor, Wednesday, September 5.

VARNER WATCHING LEGISLATION.

H. B. Varner, chairman of the legislative committee of the American Exhibitors' Association, has been in New York for several days attending to matters connected with the A. E. A. He left for Washington, where he will look after legation which affects the exhibitor. Mr. Varner was most enthusiastic over the hearty response of exhibitors in all parts of the country in becoming members of the American Exhibitors' Association.

"At last," he said, "we have a sound business organization of exhibitors only—men who are in no way affiliated with the manufacturers and who can work together for the betterment of the exhibitor without fear of any interference from the producer. I freely predict that the American Exhibitors' Association will prove to be the organization that all real exhibitors have been looking for since they entered the motion picture business."

IRVING THEATRE, CHICAGO, OPENS.

The Irving theater, a new 1,800 seat house, opened at Crawford avenue and Irving Park boulevard, Chicago, Saturday evening, September 1, with Mary Miles Minter in "Charity Castle," the first of Miss Minter's new series of Mutual-American productions.

The Irving theater is located in the heart of Irving Park, one of the most populous of Chicago's neighborhoods. It is one of the largest and most modern theaters outside of the Chicago loop and one of the most completely equipped picture theaters in the United States. Careful attention has been paid to every detail of construction and equipment. The decorations are dainty tints of blue and pink on a cream background.

The theater cost $200,000 and will be devoted exclusively to motion pictures. The management has announced a policy of showing only the highest type of productions and selected "Charity Castle" for the inauguration of its policy.

ANOTHER FRANKLYN FARNUM BLUEBIRD.

Director Joseph De Grasse, having completed his first production, with Franklyn Farnum as the star, is now turning to a second feature, entitled "The Winged Mystery," in which Mr. Farnum will play a dual role. Claire Du Brey will continue as leading lady, and the support will also include Sam De Grasse and Charles Hill Mailes. Incidentally Sam De Grasse is a brother of the producer, and although they have each been long employed in pictures, this is the first engagement Joe and Sam have ever played together.

Brady Misinformed

Arthur F. Beck Takes Exception to William A. Brady's Views on Successful Pictures.

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S recent statement to the effect that the biggest and most enduring hits are adaptations of stage play successes is held to be invalid by Arthur F. Beck, general manager of Art Dramas.

"Mr. Brady seems to be misinformed," said Mr. Beck. "While it is true that some of the most successful pictures are adaptations of successful stage plays, still there have been just as many, if not more, really big and enduring successes which were especially written for the screen.

"As proof of this, I need mention only one picture which was not adapted from a stage success. I mean 'Cabiria.' Surely, 'Cabiria' is entitled to be classed as one of 'the biggest and most enduring hits.'

"Then there are 'Civilization,' 'Intolerance,' 'The Battle Cry of Peace,' 'Womanhood,' 'Joan, the Woman,' 'Traffic in Souls,' 'Neptune's Daughter,' 'A Daughter of the Gods,' 'The Soul of a Woman,' and 'The Spoilers.'

"Then there is that notable instance of a success that had its origin purely as a scenario—'The Cheat,' by Hector Turnbull. Here is a photoplay that reverses the usual order of things. It was such a phenomenal success that it was dramatized, which seems to be conclusive proof that the screen is capable of doing big things without looking for aid from the legitimate stage.

"And again: What about Mary Pickford's successes, such as 'Rags,' 'Hearts Adrift,' 'Poor Little Peppina,' and many others? And, finally, take the Fairbanks pictures—tremendous successes and written for the screen.

"I might go on to enumerate hundreds of substantial screen successes which were not adapted from the stage. But what's the use? It seems to have been pretty well established by now that what the public is looking for is good entertainment. If it can be found in play adaptations, well and good. On the other hand, the public has found excellent entertainment in original photoplays and book adaptations. And, Mr. Brady's statement to the contrary notwithstanding, the demands of the screen are leaning more and more to original works of photoplaywrights. In fact, the scripts of our big writers are always in great demand. A majority of the big special pictures today are originals.

"It seems to me that Mr. Brady's statement could do a lot of harm. Never in the history of motion pictures have we been more in need of the stimulus that goes with original works. As has been said many times before, no art can ever be truly great unless it evidences creative ability."

MARGUERITE SNOW MAKES SOUTHERN TOUR.

MARGUERITE SNOW, motion picture star extraordinary, and known the length and breadth of the world for her wonderful film portrayals, not only attended the convention of the Virginia State Exhibitors' Association at Ocean View, Va., but she made such a decided impression on the delegates that she was immediately signed for a personal appearance tour of the principal cities of the South, being the only motion picture star present offered such a contract.

Although there were no less than twelve of the most prominent stars of filmdom present, when the members of the association held a session to determine which of the stars would be asked to make a personal tour of their various theaters, Miss Snow received 22 of the 24 votes cast, and being such an unanimous choice, was engaged within the hour.

As a result Miss Snow left New York for Martinsburg, W. Va., Sept. 7, opening at the Central Opera House the following day with an afternoon and evening appearance. The tour is to extend for four weeks, and is being booked by J. Henkel Henry, manager of the Empire theater of Winchester, Va., who also holds an option for four additional weeks of Miss Snow's time, providing it does not interfere with her picture engagements.

ED ROSENBAUM, JR., KING BEE PRESS AGENT.

Nat H. Spitzer, general manager of the King-Bee Film Corp., presenting Billy West in two reel comedies, announces the engagement of Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., as head of their publicity department. Mr. Rosenbaum has resigned from the executive staff of Elliott, Comstock and Gest to take charge of this department.

For four seasons he handed the publicity of the Ziegfeld Follies, then "The Winsome Widow," Donald Brian, "Madame Sherry," Anna Held, "Very Good Eddie" and many others.

Not Under the Law

Judge Altschuler Says Funkhouser Had no Authority to Hold Up "The Spy."

THE Fox Film Corporation obtained a preliminary injunction restraining Major Funkhouser, the Chicago censor, from refusing to issue a permit for the showing Chicago of "The Spy." In the decision handed down by Judge Samuel A. Altschuler, in the United States District Court, Chicago, the court says in part:

"From a perusal of his (Funkhouser's) affidavit, I find and conclude there is nothing that he stated there which, under the ordinance, would be considered as immoral or obscene or unlawful or otherwise objectionable, but that the objection consists wholly in the horrifying nature of the tortures which are portrayed as inflicted upon the hero of the play, and his ultimate execution, and shooting by a firing squad. Now, I do not believe that from his own portrayal of the play, on his own depicting in his affidavit of the facts upon which he bases his conclusion, his action is within the authority of the ordinance."

The ordinance referred to in the decision is that city ordinance which prohibits the exhibition of immoral, obscene or unlawful pictures. According to Judge Altschuler, "The Spy" does not come under that category. In this connection the decision reads:

". . . Now, this finding, therefore, that it is not immoral or obscene or otherwise objectionable under t ordinance as to adults it seems to me of itself would place the picture in the category of those which do not come within the prohibition of 1627."

The decision concludes: ". . . I am satisfied that from the showing here that the statement made in the affidavit is apparently a truthful and sincere statement of Mr. Funkhouser on which he has assumed to act and to refuse the permit, and that accordingly the chief of police has refused the permit upon grounds wholly outside of those enumerated in the ordinance, which alone gives them the power and the right to refuse the permit, and under these circumstances I believe that the preliminary injunction prayed for should be granted."

HOAGLAND BACK WITH PATHE.

An announcement of more than passing interest to the trade is that from Pathe to the effect that J. A. Berst, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, has engaged H. C. Hoagland, recently general manager of the Selig Co. to act as film editor with supervision over the titling, cutting and film editing departments. Mr. Hoagland was for five or six years with the old Pathe Freres in Jersey City, holding in succession the positions of publicity and advertising manager, editor of the Pathe Weekly, manager of the film department and later after the resignation of Mr. Berst to accept the presidency of the General Film Co., acting general manager of Pathe Freres. Mr. Hoagland thus brings to his new position an unusually broad experience gained in every branch of the film business and one that makes him an unusually valuable man. His engagement illustrated Mr. Berst's policy to make the Pathe film department second to none in the business.

Mr. Hoagland comes of a family distinguished in private and public endeavor since the Colonial period. His father is the Rev. Warren L. Hoagland, one of the most prominent ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His grandfather on his mother's side was a cousin of ex-President Grover Cleveland; his great-uncle on his mother's side was Orestes Cleveland, several times mayor of Jersey City, and several times U. S. Congressman from New Jersey. Before Mr. Hoagland went with Pathe Freres he was advertising manager of a large Newark, N. J., department store and later was advertising manager for a well known and largely advertising specialty house.

BLUEBIRD HAS ANOTHER MARY MAC DONALD.

Mary Mac Donald, who has made considerable progress upon the speaking stage before she entered pictures, has been engaged by Bluebird for a position of prominence in one of their stock companies. "Mary Mac Donald" is a name that has figured in Bluebird's announcements, since Lois Weber took a novice of that name, changed it to Mary Mac Laren and established her as an "over night" star in "Shoes." The name of "Mary Mac Laren" was created and copyrighted for the purpose of moving pictures, and it is barely possible that when Mary Mac Donald reaches the screen, she will be heralded, after the fashion of her predecessor, as "Mary Mac Laren."

Universal Increases Forces

More Actors, Actresses and Directors Engaged During Past Month Than at Any Similar Period During the Year.

MORE additions have been made to the acting and directing forces at Universal City during the past month than at any similar period throughout the present year. Among the leading men who will be seen in important productions shortly are: Charles West, Frank Borzage, Casson Ferguson, Hart Hoxie, Kenneth Harlan, David Morris and Hal Cooley. The first five of these actors have already won wide recognition for effective dramatic work, while Morris and Cooley are equally well known as comedians.

Charles West, who will shortly be seen in support of Zoe Rae in "The Little Pirate," gained his first experience as a member of D. W. Griffith's famous Biograph stock company, appearing later in Fine Arts' productions when Griffith was in control of that organization.

Frank Borzage, who is also a newcomer to the Big U. plant, is now appearing opposite Brownie Vernon in Allen Holubar's production of "The Twisted Soul." Every picture fan of three years' standing will vividly recall Borzage as the young American sailor hero of Thomas H. Ince's "Wrath of the Gods," the remarkable Japanese play with Tsuru Aoki and Sessue Hayakawa. Borzage also appeared in many western features as a member of the American company, and gained some prestige as a director before coming under the Universal banner.

Casson Ferguson, now nearing the completion of his first Universal lead opposite Donna Drew in "The Ghost Girl," directed by Jack Wells, has played with the American and other well-known film companies, besides having won his spurs on the legitimate stage.

Hart Hoxie appeared in several of the Lois Weber productions made a year or more ago at Universal City. Hoxie will make his present debut to Universal patrons in Edward J. Le Saint's current production.

David Morris, who has been advanced to the position of leading comedian of Craig Hutchinson's Victor Comedy company, has had a long career on both stage and screen. He was recently seen in support of Max Asher.

Hal Cooley returns to the Universal fold to take an important part in "The Cricket," the Zoe Rae play now being produced by Elsie Jane Wilson. Cooley was a member of the Universal forces a year ago, when he left to do juvenile leads with the Keystone Company. He has also appeared in American productions at Santa Barbara.

Among the actresses and comediennes of achievement and especial promise who have been engaged for Universal productions during the past month might be mentioned Rena Rogers, Gladys Tennyson, Rosemary Theby, Beatrice Burnham and Mildred Davis.

Rena Rogers will be remembered for her striking characterization in Lois Weber's especial production, "Where Are My Children?" She will also be seen shortly in the Zoe Rae vehicle, directed by Elsie Jane Wilson.

Gladys Tennyson, who will be seen in the leading feminine roles of Victor comedies during the coming months, is a Texas girl, and did good work in Keystone and Christie comedies before joining the funmakers at Universal City.

Rosemary Theby becomes a Universalite for the second time. She is equally adept in comic and dramatic roles, and after completing her present work with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will be featured in more pretentious productions.

Beatrice Burnham, although but seventeen years of age, has had several years' experience acting for the films. She will be attached to the Nestor comedy company, appearing in support of Lyons and Moran when Miss Theby finishes her engagement with that team of favorites.

Mildred Davis, who has the ingenue role in "Man of God," the production being put on by E. J. Le Saint, owns to eighteen summers. She is an attractive blonde, and is said to possess authentic emotional ability.

Besides E. J. Le Saint, who is filling a return engagement on Universal's producing staff, Harry Harvey has recently been added to the directing forces.

For some time past associated with Pathe, Harvey has many notable productions to his credit in the widely advertised serials, "Neal of the Navy," "The Red Circle," and "Who Pays?" He also directed some of the best western pictures released by that company.

Zittel to Manage International

Hearst Appoints Well Known Vaudeville Publicity Man to Take Charge of His Film Company.

C. F. ZITTEL, famous throughout the country as "Zit" of the New York Evening Journal, has been appointed by William Randolph Hearst as general manager of the International Film Service, Inc. Mr. Zittel's appointment as head of the International will not in any way interfere with his duties as head of the theatrical department of the New York Evening Journal from 224 West 47th street to the general offices of the International, which occupy the entire sixteenth floor of the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh avenue.

Mr. Zittel assumed his new position last week immediately upon returning from a vacation in the Adirondacks.

"It is too early," he said, "for me to outline a policy of what the International probably will do. But we are going to do big things. Mr. Hearst is never satisfied unless he is doing big things.

"The International expects to begin producing within a short time. The Hearst organization controls the output of the foremost writers of today. Their works, which originally appear in the eight magazines owned by Mr. Hearst, will be utilized in motion pictures, prepared for the screen by foremost scenario writers. Other plans are being worked out, the details of which will be announced later on."

Mr. Zittel has been with the Hearst organization for twelve years, having taken charge of the Dramatic Department of the New York Journal in 1906. He made that department a power, and the New York Evening Journal was soon recognized as one of the foremost theatrical authorities in the country. In February of 1913, Mr. Zittell, foreseeing the remarkable future of the motion picture industry, established a motion picture department in the New York Evening Journal which has been as successful as the theatrical department.

In assuming the general management of the International, Mr. Zittel will divide his time between that organization and the theatrical department of the New York Evening Journal, surrounding himself with a corps of able assistants in both of these organizations.

Brings New Names to Screen

Empire All Star Corporation Introduces Many Players Who Have Never Been in Pictures Before.

THE Empire All Star Corporation is introducing many well-known names to the screen who have heretofore remained adamant to all offers to forsake the footlights even for a short time. Ferdinand Gottschalk, whose list of stage successes is too long to enumerate, is one of them. He is now with the organization that is busily engaged in transforming the late Charles Frohman's stage successes into noteworthy screen productions. In "My Wife" Mr. Gottschalk is playing for the screen the same role that he created on the stage, and many people will welcome his screen "Gibby."

Warburton Gamble is another who makes his initial bow to the screen. All those who saw the late Sir Herbert Tree in "Colonel Newcome" last season will remember the acting of Mr. Gamble, whose "Sir Barnes Newcome" was a performance to be hugely enjoyed and forever remembered.

Miss Eileen Dennes, who with Mr. Gamble is appearing in "The Unforeseen," starring Miss Olive Tell and featuring Mr. David Powell, is another screen debutante. Miss Dennes originally started out to be a dancer, and with the end in view spent a whole year with the great Pavlowa studying and appearing in her company both in London and New York.

Hubert Druce, the deservedly well-known English actor, is yet another member of the Empire All Star Corporation to make his first appearance in the motion picture world, as is Amy Veness, John Harwood, Rex McDougal, Edward Fielding, Norman Trevor, and, last but first to be remembered, Miss Julia Sanderson.

Miss Sanderson has refused to even consider any offer from motion picture managers so often that it was generally considered hopeless to suggest "getting" Miss Sanderson for any production however noteworthy. But the name of Charles Frohman still stands for all that is best and most successful now, as it did when he was alive, and it was through this that Miss Sanderson was persuaded. Her first picture, "The Runaway," is scheduled for release through the Mutual exchanges Sept. 24.

Thomas Meighan Continues With Famous Players-Lasky

Hero of Many Paramount Pictures Renews His Contract; Will Be Seen Shortly With Billie Burke in "Arms and the Girl."

IT will be welcome news to the thousands of admirers of Thomas Meighan that he is to continue to appear in Paramount productions, having just signed a new contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Meighan will next be seen in "Arms and the Girl," in support of Billie Burke, with whom he has appeared since her association with Paramount. His last picture with her was "The Mysterious Miss Terry."

Thomas Meighan.

Prior to his appearances in Billie Burke's screen vehicles, Thomas Meighan was leading man for Pauline Frederick in a number of her most successful pictures, including "Sapho," "Sleeping Fires" and "Her Better Self."

Mr. Meighan's first Lasky picture was "The Fighting Hope" in support of Laura Hope Crews. He was leading man for Charlotte Walker in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" and "Kindling." He was seen in "Armstrong's Wife" with Edna Goodrich, "The Sowers" with Blanche Sweet, "The Clown" in support of Victor Moore, "The Dupe" in support of Blanche Sweet, and "Common Ground," in which Marie Doro had the leading feminine role.

Still other Paramount pictures in which Mr. Meighan has appeared are "The Secret Sin" with Blanche Sweet, "Blackbirds" with Laura Hope Crews, "Out of Darkness" with Charlotte Walker, "The Immigrant" with Valeska Suratt, and "The Heir of the Hoorah" with Anita King.

Personality is the thing that, coupled with his undoubted ability and versatility, has made for Mr. Meighan a host of admirers who welcome his every appearance on the screen. He is the exact type for a leading man, of fine presence, athletic and with an ever-ready smile.

MADAME PETROVA ANNOUNCES CAST.

Madame Petrova is making the Biograph studio a hive of activity as she produces the first of the pictures to be made under her personal supervision. In spite of Petrova's exacting work and the countless details involved in making a play filled with spectacular scenes, it is practically assured that the first Petrova picture will be ready for release by the latter part of October.

Petrova has personally selected the following cast: Thomas Holding, leading man; Anders Randolf will play the part of Franz Jorn, an artist; Henri Leone plays the part of a police agent; Richard Garrick plays the part of Graham West, secretary of the American Minister; Carl Dietz plays the part of a secret service operative; Warren Cook has the part of the American Minister to Belmark; Anita Allen is the maid.

STRONG SUPPORTING CAST FOR DOROTHY DALTON.

Dorothy Dalton is more than pleased with the cast chosen to support her in her first Paramount-Ince picture which is now being filmed at the Thomas H. Ince studios. The players who will appear in the picture in support of the beautiful and talented star include Thurston Hall, a leading man with long experience on the legitimate stage; William Conklin, who has an enviable reputation through his past work for the screen; Dorcas Matthews, a talented young actress who has for some time been under Mr. Ince's management; Adele Farrington, an accomplished player, with both film and stage experience, together with several others.

Sing Singers Loudly Applaud "Polly"

Goldwyn's First Production Is Seen By Prisoners, Who Greet Mae Marsh and Margaret Mayo.

SING SING prison, through its Mutual Welfare League, gave Mae Marsh, Margaret Mayo and Goldwyn's big photo-spectacle, "Polly of the Circus," a tumultuous reception the night of Sunday, September 2, when the big motion picture had its eastern premiere in the presence of its star and author and a group of guests.

The chapel of the prison, on the second floor of the big dining hall, has seating accommodations for 800 prisoners, but there were 1,200 in the room when Miss Marsh, Miss Mayo, Edgar Selwyn and other Goldwyn officers arrived.

Presentation of the picture began at 7.45 o'clock following the introduction of Miss Marsh and Miss Mayo to the large and temporarily silent audience. Both star and author were greeted by a storm of applause.

Sing Sing's projection room is equipped with one machine, which necessitates a moment of intermission between each reel. At the conclusion of each reel the big prison audience gave unmistakable evidences of its approval of "Polly of the Circus" by prolonged applause, and during the running of the exciting horse race the white-shirted audience could be seen half rising from the seats and each time the white horse ridden by Mae Marsh forged ahead applause and cheers were given so loudly that they could have been heard half a mile away beyond the prison walls.

During an intermission one of the League officers made announcement that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation hereafter would place Sing Sing prison on its regular circuit—all Goldwyn Pictures, as released, being at the disposal of the League.

Brady Finds a "Kerensky" Too

HENRY HULL, the young actor who plays the role of Kerensky in "Rasputin, the Black Monk," is said to bear an almost startling resemblance to the Russian idol of the hour. Young Hull, however, is not a product of the Czar's former domain—in fact, has never been nearer than the Atlantic seaboard to Russia.

He was born in Kentucky, where his father, Will Hull, was a very well known newspaper man. His brothers, Howard and Shelby Hull, have met with unusually fine success as actors.

When William A. Brady, director-general of World-Pictures Brady-Made, was casting about for an actor to impersonate the leading male role in "The Man Who Came Back," then about to be produced at the Playhouse, he found he had assigned himself to no easy task. To fill the bill properly the actor must be not only the possessor of real dramatic power, but manifestly youthful—two qualities which rarely go together.

Henry Hull.

In young Henry Hull he finally discovered the material he sought, and on the opening night a brilliant young leading man was added to the list of Broadway favorites. Since then Mr. Hull has supplemented his stage work by appearing in several World Pictures with quite marked success. It was Mr. Brady who detected the likeness between Mr. Hull and the photographs of Kerensky when looking for a recognized player to fill this important place in the "Rasputin" cast. Several photographs of the actor as he is shown in the Kerensky characterization making the impassioned address which swayed the Russian Duma in unrestrained unison toward the revolution, have the effect of stamping the director-general's choice as altogether felicitous.

Griffith Returning

Completes Successful Trip to Europe After Many Triumphs —Has New Picture Under Way.

AUTHORITATIVE announcement was made September 5 that D. W. Griffith, who has been in Europe since March 17, has completed his labors on the other side and is to return to America the last week in September. Mr. Griffith went to London to personally oversee the presentation there of his "Intolerance" at the Theater Royal, Drury Lane, London.

"Intolerance" in London proved the greatest motion picture success the British stage has ever known and crowned its triumph by being given at a gala performance in Drury Lane before King George and Queen Mary. Other occupants of the royal box on this occasion were Queen Mother Alexandria and Princess Mary and the younger sons and daughters of the Duke of Fife, members of the British royal family.

Mr. Griffith was presented to their Majesties. At that meeting he also grouped the royal family in an impromptu scene on the stage of the famous old theatre and took moving pictures of them. He has also been busy doing some work for both the British and French governments and has taken actual views of the war at numerous points along the western front. With these activities and the great success of "Intolerance" in Europe his time has been so occupied that his original visit which was only intended to last six weeks stretched over as many months. "Intolerance" has been seen by nearly everybody of prominence in London, Paris and Rome, and Mr. Griffith has completed arrangements for its presentation in the principal cities of England, France and Italy.

With "Intolerance" launched upon its phenomenal run in Europe Mr. Griffith called Robt. Harron, Dorothy and Lillian Gish to England along with William Bitzer, his camera man, and together these prominent lights of the American motion picture world have been working upon a story which will be Mr. Griffith's next presentation. The European scenes have been completed and Mr. Griffith and his forces are hurrying home to complete the production for presentation the coming winter. A studio has been secured in California and the big production will be rounded out there. As Mr. Griffith was on the battle front in France for several months, it is a safe conjecture to say that his forthcoming production will deal in a powerfully dramatic way with the present world war.

General Adopts a "Little Man"

Quaint Emblem Suggested by "K. C. B.," the Clever Humorist of "Ye Town Gossip" Fame.

BECAUSE a noted newspaper humorist had a hunch which he could not make use of in his own work, General Film Company is the gainer by a new totem or emblem. It has a visualized "General Film," in the form of the accompanying cut.

This emblematic "General Film" is the suggestion of "K. C. B.," known all over the country as "the little man with the funny hat," and whose "Ye Towne Gossip" column in the Hearst newspapers in Boston, New York, Chicago, Atlanta, Los Angeles, San Francisco and elsewhere is as well known as the newspapers themselves. Although he hides himself under the famous initials, Kenneth C. Beaton as his name really is, has from the outset made himself a tangible personality to his readers by the daily illustration at the bottom of his column showing himself as "the little man." And a very accurate portrait it is, as regards his features, those who know him personally can testify.

To a General Film official with whom he has been long acquainted "K. C. B." said recently, "I dreamed the other night that I saw General Film marching down Fifth avenue all by himself with a sword. I suppose he was on his way to war, or whatever it is he was on his way to, and I liked him. He was a nice little man."

Then "K. C. B." described him. An artist was put to work and the result is General Film's own "little man," or "Gen. Film."

Gilson Willets With Pathe

GILSON WILLETS, well known novelist and traveler, who for a number of years has been associated with the Selig Company as scenario writer, has been engaged by Pathe, and has already started work in his new position in the Pathe scenario department. This is not the first time that Pathe has made use of Mr. Willets' talents. The rights to his novel "The Double Cross" were purchased by Pathe for adaptation into a serial which was later put out under the title "The Mystery of the Double Cross." In his review of his novel for the New York American, Edwin Markham, author of "The Man With a Hoe," characterized it as by far the greatest American mystery novel that had ever been written.

Mr. Willets is the author of twenty other books, among them "The First Law," "His Neighbor's Wife," "Anita the Cuban Spy," "The Workers of a Nation," "The Rulers of the World," "The Inside History of the White House," etc. In addition to his books Mr. Willets is a prolific magazine writer and has had published over a thousand different articles in such media.

Gilson Willets.

As a scenario writer Mr. Willets has many successes to his credit, among them the first motion picture serial, "The Adventures of Kathlyn" and the special features, "The Thundering Herd," "The Lily of the Valley," "I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier," "I Hear Her Calling Me," etc.

Mr. Willets has had a very busy and interesting life. He began his literary career at the age of nineteen and at twenty-one published his first book. When hardly more than a boy he became editor of Current Literature. In search of literary material he traveled in all parts of the world. Among his exploits at this stage of his career were traveling for three months through the length and breadth of India in famine and plague time, making a sledge journey of 500 miles through Northern Russia, Finland, Lapland and Sweden and crossing Northern Mexico on horseback. More than any other man can he claim credit for preserving Niagara Falls from despoliation at the hands of greedy commercial interests. His articles in Leslie's Weekly on "The Raps of Niagara" started a country wide agitation to save the Falls.

Mr. Willets comes of an old colonial family of distinction. His ancestor, Thomas Willets, was first mayor of New York in 1665. Two and a half centuries ago the family owned a large tract of land on Lond Island which extended from Willets Point to Hempstead. At the latter place Mr. Willets was born, the fourth of the same name in direct line. He is a member of many of the leading New York Clubs, among them the Aldine, Fencers, Republican and St. Andrew's Golf Club.

Mr. Willets' engagement is indicative of the policy of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, to build up the scenario department of Pathe to the point where it is admittedly the strongest and best balanced in the business.

MONTAGU LOVE CONTINUES WITH WORLD.

Montagu Love has been re-engaged for World-Pictures Brady-Made under a contract covering the next twenty-four months. During this period Mr. Love will be either "starred" or "featured" in all productions in which he takes part, and the agreement also provides for a substantial increase in the monetary compensation for his services.

Mr. Love has been a member of the World Film Corporation's acting forces for something more than a year. During the early stages of this term he played a wide variety of roles chiefly of the kind technically known as "character parts," and in these he displayed such unusual and dexterous versatility that the patrons of World Pictures began to ask for plays in which he was cast.

Sir Gilbert Parker Guest of Commodore Blackton

Noted Author, Whose Works Are Being Filmed for Paramount, Combines Business With Pleasure at Harbourwood.

KEENLY enjoying every moment of the time, Sir Gilbert Parker, the gifted English novelist, and M. P., whose books have sold into the millions and a number of whose most popular works are now being filmed by J.

Sir Gilbert Parker and Commodore Blackton.

Stuart Blackton for Paramount, recently was the guest of Mr. Blackton, at the latter's beautiful country estate, Harbourwood, at Oyster Bay, Long Island.

It was a combination of business and pleasure, however, for at intervals seated on the spacious veranda of the Casino, overlooking the blue waters of the Sound, the author and producer discussed in detail the forthcoming production of "The World for Sale" as well as future pictures to be made from the Parker novels.

Sir Gilbert witnessed a private projection of "The World for Sale" the other night at Oyster Bay and expressed himself as delighted by the outcome of the careful and artistic work that had been devoted to the production.

"Of course," said Sir Gilbert, "when I had read Commodore Blackton's scenario, I felt easy in my mind as to the story, at least. It was a masterful piece of work. I frankly confess I could not have done it. Were someone to offer me five thousand dollars now to write a three-reel scenario—much less a seven-reel one—I would have to decline. I simply haven't got that peculiar talent. It is an art in itself.

"As I say, I was confident the story would be right, because I had read the script. I was, to say the least, astonished. Every bit of the story that was essential to the plot was there, yet most wonderfully condensed. The few necessary changes that had been made, resulting from the absence of dialogue, have not marred the work; it is a direct, concise and wholly entertaining rendition of my book.

"Then I saw the picture screened, as you call it. And I marveled again. I confess I had been a bit anxious as to one or two of the characterizations, but I was agreeably surprised in every respect. I can only repeat that I marveled. The types selected to play the leading roles—such as Ingolby and Fleda Druse, Marchand, the French villain, Jethro Fawe, the Gypsy and of course the Ri, Gabriel Druse, had evidently been picked with the utmost care and attention the requirements of the unusual parts called for in the story. I can hardly say enough in praise of Mr. Blackton's efforts in this direction."

As a matter of fact, when Sir Gilbert saw the picture screened, it was without the subtitles, which have been taken entirely from the author's own lines.

"Since I have seen an example of Commodore Blackton's work," went on Sir Gilbert, "I feel safe in leaving my books in his hands for translation into motion pictures. Any author may feel as I do with him. It is a relief to know that intelligence and artistic perception will mark every production made under his supervision."

Sir Gilbert Parker will watch the filming of one or two more scenes in one of the later pictures, now under way, and will return shortly to England.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of Sept. 9 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"POLLY of the Circus," the first of the new Goldwyn pictures to be released, was the principal photo-dramatic feature at the Strand the week of Sept. 9, with Mae Marsh in the title role. It tells a story of a little circus orphan who is raised by Toby, the clown. Polly is hurt in an accident and has to remain behind while the show goes on. She is taken to the home of the minister, where her presence in the house is turned into a scandal by the narrow-minded village gossips. Everitt Shinn, the artist, designed the settings, and Margaret Mayo, the author, personally aided Charles Horan, the director of the picture, in his work. The Strand Topical Review, Educational and Travel features and a new comedy were also shown.

The soloists were Mlle. Verba, Herbert L. Waterous, Arthur Depew and Ralph H. Brigham.

"Barbary Sheep" at the Rialto.

At the Rialto Theater Elsie Ferguson made her motion picture debut in "Barbary Sheep" for Artcraft Pictures under the auspices of Adolph Zukor. Adapted from Robert Hichins' most popular book since "The Garden of Allah," the romantic story of Algeria, tells of the infatuation of an English noblewoman for a dark-skinned army officer, and is charged with the passion, and swift action that befit a novel of this kind. Supporting the star is an exceptional cast of players, including Pedro de Cordoha, Lumsden Hare, Macy Harlam, Alex Shannon and Maude Ford. The scenario was adapted from the book by Charles Maigne.

The soloists were Gaston Hubois, Marion Rudolfo, and Greek Evans.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater for the entire week Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, were seen in "Redemption."

"The Man Without a Country" at the Broadway.

Edward Everett Hale's patriotic classic, "The Man Without a Country," has been put into screen form by Thanhouser and opened an engagement at the Brodway Theater last Sunday night.

GENERAL OPENS IN PORTLAND.

Owing to continued pressure in the northwest Pacific field from exhibitors attracted by the quality of General Film's product, the company has just opened a branch office in Portland. This office will relieve the Seattle office of the growing bulk of business in the Oregon district.

In accordance with its policy of making promotions from its own organization wherever recognition is earned, General Film has placed in charge of the Portland office Mr. W. E. Matthews. Mr. Matthews is a successful, energetic and popular salesman, who had been for some years with the San Francisco office of the company. He has taken charge, and Portland is now permanently on the General Film map.

FIRE SHUTTER CASE WILL BE APPEALED.

The Moving Picture World is advised by J. A. LeRoy, one of the plaintiffs in the case of C. R. Baird and J. A. LeRoy against the Nicholas Power Company, that the decision reported in the Moving Picture World of September 1 is not final but that it was in the nature of an interlocutory decree and that he wishes to inform the readers of the World, upon advice of counsel, that the case will be carried to the Court of Appeals in due and proper course.

HERMAN MANDELBAUM GETS INTO UNIFORM.

Herman Mandelbaum, son of Henry J. Mandelbaum, manager of the Cleveland branch of the United Theater Equipment Company, has left for a camp in Alabama, as a member of the artillery company recently organized in the Forest City. Mr. Mandelbaum was for years with the equipment and supply house and is well known among the exhibitors of Ohio, who wish him the best of success.

NEW OPERATORS' SCALE FOR NEW YORK.

Henry I. Sherman, recording secretary of New York Operators' Union 306, I. A. T. S. E., announces that a new wage scale for motion picture operators will go into effect Monday, September 24. The new scale will appear in full in the Projection Department for the issue of September 29.

Abel to Represent Select Pictures

Resigns From V-L-S-E Chicago Branch and Will Travel for New Distributing Company.

SYDNEY E. ABEL has been appointed Special Representative of Select Pictures Corporation and begins work in the interest of Select exchanges Sept. 10. Mr. Abel has resigned his position as manager of the Chicago branch exchange of Vitagraph V-L-S-E

Mr. Abel has made an enviable record in conducting branch exchanges in the Middle West. He started with the Cleveland Exchange two years ago after the Vitagraph V-L-S-E organization was effected. The splendid showing which he made in selling V-L-S-E product in the Cleveland district in six months' time brought him promotion to the managership of the Chicago exchange, which position he has held ever since. In Chicago Abel established a record for big sales. He is credited with having put over the V-L-S-E in that territory.

Sydney E. Abel.

Prior to his connection with the Vitagraph interest, Sydney Abel spent four and a half years with the Mutual Film Corporation as branch manager in various eastern cities. He was in charge of the Pittsburgh exchange when the Vitagraph brought him into their fold. Abel is a Minnesota man, having been born in St. Paul, but for several years past has resided in Chicago. He is of a most genial disposition and has a host of friends among exhibitors and salesmen throughout the country. Aside from putting over big sales of pictures, Abel has one love that is dear to his heart—his Paige car. He is an enthusiastic motorist and spends most of his spare time burning gasoline in the interest of real sport.

With Select pictures Abel will act as a first aid to sales, much of his time being spent on the road visiting exchanges in the various cities.

WANTS RECORD KEPT OF INSURED PARCELS.

Exhibitors and exchange managers are soon to be requested by their local postmasters to install a system whereby an accurate record may be kept of all insured parcel-post shipments received at the theaters and exchanges.

This request will be made at the instance of the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster General at Washington, which has just issued a letter in which it is asked that, in view of the fact that insured parcels are now delivered without record being made at post offices of address, the postmasters take up with those who receive large numbers of insured packages the matter of putting in a system of checking the receipt thereof, so as to make sure that their answers as to whether a particular article has been received are correct.

In the case of parcels being received that do not bear the name and address of the sender, the department asks that a record be made by the recipient of the number of the parcel, the date of receipt and the office of mailing, in order that when inquiry is made regarding such parcels the fact of their receipt may be reported. The attention of patrons of this service is also to be directed to the necessity f extreme accuracy in such cases.

Director Dillon Has Had Much Experience

Man Who Will "Put On" Next Ann Pennington Picture for Paramount Has Turned Out Many Comedies in Past.

AN all around experience, dating from the earliest days of the motion picture, is possessed by Edward Dillon, whose first Paramount picture will be a comedy drama in which diminutive Ann Pennington, the "Follies" beauty, will be starred. Nor is his experience limited to the films, for he was at one time an actor himself. He served two seasons with Otis Skinner, a season with Dustin Farnum and Ada Rehan. Oddly enough, he began his stage career as a horseback rider in racing melodramas, once exceedingly popular.

Edward Dillon

For eight years Dillon served with D. W. Griffith, varying from drama to comedy, in which latter field he displayed remarkable talent for devising unique situations and getting the most out of every opportunity. The old Biograph comedies were directed by him for some time, in the days when Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand, the late Fred Mace, and Del Henderson were familiar figures in those productions. When Griffith left the Biograph, Dillon went to the Reliance - Majestic and started a new brand of comedies till the Triangle was formed. He created the Triangle comedies and later put on longer pictures.

"The new Ann Pennington film," said Mr. Dillon, "will be notable for the opportunities it gives the star to wear some stunning gowns, fetching bathing costumes in the swimming scenes, etc. She will also have a chance to display her powers at dancing and high diving. I am putting a lot of original material into the picture, and though it is too early to divulge the character of the plot I may say that it will be something out of the ordinary in comedy-drama, with novel sets and plenty of real action.

KEENE THOMPSON WITH FAIRBANKS.

Douglas Fairbanks last week engaged Keene Thompson, the well-known magazine contributor, as a member of his scenario department in the production of Artcraft pictures. Mr. Thompson started his professional career as a comic artist on the staff of the New York World, when still in his knickerbockers, at the age of 15. His first fiction work followed shortly, when he sold a story to the New York Sun, followed by having the Scrap Book accept one of his manuscripts.

Thompson has written advertising copy for such accounts as the Singer Sewing Machines, Ingersoll Watches, Regal Shoes, American Tobacco Company, etc., and then entered the free-lance fiction field. He has sold over six hundred short stories, novelettes and verses, and was approached by Douglas Fairbanks, after accepting one of Keene's film stories, "Far From the Maddening Girls," written in conjunction with Gerald C. Duffy, editor of Picture Play Magazine.

JEWEL CARMEN COMES EAST.

Jewel Carmen is now an outstanding feature of the landscape around the William Fox studios at Fort Lee, N. J. She is playing Fantine in the film version of "Les Miserables," now in the making.

Miss Carmen has been in motion pictures almost four years, but she has earned a good part of the love which photoplay fans bear her since her advent into William Fox films about twelve months since. She has played in the role opposite William Farnum in "The Conqueror," as Lucy Manette in "A Tale of Two Cities," and in the leading feminine roles of "American Methods" and "When a Man Sees Red."

Traveling Cameramen Get Thrills

Willard Vander Vere and Assistant Return from Trip Through West Indies—Arrested as Spies at St. Pierre.

WILLARD VANDER VERE, a Gaumount cameraman, and his assistant, Norton Willis, have returned to the United States after spending several months in the West Indies taking scenic and educational subjects. The trip was highly successful and, according to Mr. Vander Vere, somewhat exciting. It was while at Martinique, a French possession and under martial law, that the most thrilling incident occurred. Mr. Vander Vere and his assistant had left their ship to take advantage of an unexpected opportunity to visit this interesting island. Securing an automobile they had journeyed from Fort de France to the ruined city of St. Pierre and Mt. Pelee, some twenty miles away.

Vander Vere and a Curious Native

Arriving at St. Pierre they prepared to take some pictures of that famous old city, once known as "Little Babylon," when a gendarme suddenly appeared from an old ruin and demanded an explanation. "He talked for several minutes with his mouth and hands," said Mr. Vander Vere, "but we could not understand a word he said. In a general way I guessed what he wanted, so we got into our machine and he guided us back to Fort de France, where we went to the police headquarters and were brought before a number of officials in gold braid, tassels and plumed hats. Other officers came in and they talked to, at, of, and about us, for two solid hours. I was asked for my passport, but I had left it on the ship. This looked bad for us. Fortunately Willis had his, which helped some, but there was I in a French possession under martial law, known to have taken photographs of the island, claiming a questionable name and with no passport to show.

"After a while I got them to send for the American Consul, who arrived half an hour later. To him I explained the situation, and he pow-wowed with the officials, with the result that we were freed with a warning. Speaking to the consul afterward I was informed that I had been taken for a spy and that the officials were deciding to shoot me.

Vander Vere said that they were again arrested in Barbados, B. W. I., for taking pictures in a certain vicinity that was barred to photographers, but that they cleared themselves and left for Trinidad the next day. "Everything went fine in Trinidad," said Mr. Vander Vere, "till I started to take views along the waterfront. I had to develop my negative and show the officials that I was not photographing anything that would be of value to the enemy. While in the country districts I was held up several times, but upon showing my permit I was allowed to continue. One reason for my being allowed a great deal of liberty with the camera in Trinidad was because it was my second visit and I was known to a great many of the people.

"I found so much of interest in Trinidad that I stayed several months. Among the subjects taken were 'West Indian Life,' 'The Cocoanut,' 'Monkey Tricks,' 'Indian Industries,' such as basket making and jewelry making, making cocoanut bread, scenes of the Mohammedan mosque and types of worshipers. An interesting comparison is of the Mohammedan and Hindu priests; another is that between Port of Spain, the present capital, with its 60,000 inhabitants, electric cars, asphalt streets, electric lights and handsome residences, and the town of St. Joseph, the ancient Spanish capital, with a few hundred people, its unpaved streets and small huts. In fact, it is like being in a different world, although Port of Spain is but ten miles distant."

Mr. Vander Vere visited the islands of St. Thomas and St. Croix just prior to their purchase from Denmark by the United States and took the pictures that Gaumont released on the day that the Danish commissioner received Uncle Sam's check for the purchase price—$25,000,000.

GIVEN A BEAUTIFUL WATCH.

VISITING film men who meet E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the Saenger Amusement Co., Inc., in his native lair in New Orleans, and ask him the time of day will get at least passing glimpse of a "watch what is a watch," recently given him by his subordinates in the Saenger Company as a token of the appreciation and esteem in which he is held by the men who work with him and meet him from day to day.

Mr. Richards—or "Rich" to his many friends throughout the South—is the foundation upon which the big Saenger organization was constructed, the building having been begun in Shreveport, La., some years ago. He has been much in the limelight recently because of the amalgamation of the Saenger and the Fitchenburg interests in the South and because of the opening of the beautiful new Strand theater in New Orleans, the construction, equipment, and advance plan of operation of which he personally plotted and supervised.

The beautiful watch given Mr. Richards is of platinum, studed with diamonds, the designs being a monogram of the recipient's name and the insignia of the Shrine, F. A. O. M., Mr. Richards being a member of El Karujah Temple of Shreveport, La. The presentation, very much in the nature of a surprise, took place at a recent weekly conference of the Saenger employees and was made by Will Gueringer, formerly general manager of the Fitchenburg motion picture interests, but since the amalgamation of the two companies, Mr. Richards' assistant.

REAL "SPEED DEMONS" IN COMEDY.

In the new series of six one-reel Jaxon Comedies just announced the initial release carries about a dozen cut-ins of an honest-to-goodness auto world's championship race. This comedy, dated for September 14, is "Speed Demons." Besides Pokes and Jabs in their burlesque of automobile strenuousness, Barney Oldfield and Ralph De Palma figure as racers in deadly earnest. The automobile color for this film was obtained July 21 at Providence, when De Palma and Oldfield held their historic meeting before a tremendous crowd.

The Jaxon Film Company, whose Eastern studios are at Providence, had special facilities for covering the Narragansett Park event, and had several cameras on the scene.

Henry J. Brock Killed in Auto Accident

Pioneer Film Man and Foreign Market Specialist Dies When Pinned Under Car.

HENRY J. BROCK, who was one of the best known and most loved men in the motion picture industry, was killed in an automobile accident that occurred near Kingston, N. Y., on Friday afternoon, September 7. Mr. Brock was on his way to Kingston to his home in Buffalo. In the automobile with him were Herry Brouse, a well known exhibitor of Ottawa, and Emery Hylandt, a friend of the Brock family, Mr. Brock was at the wheel when the car suddenly turned turtle and pinned Mr. Brock underneath. He was killed instantly. Mr. Brouse and Mr. Hylandt were injured seriously. They were taken to the Kingston Hospital. Mr. Brock was forty-six years old. He had been identified with the motion picture industry for upwards of eleven years. He began his career on the amusement field when he gave up a profitable wholesale clothing business in Buffalo to become associated in the exhibiting of motion pictures with Mitchell H. Mark, his brother-in-law, who now controls the Strand theater in New York. The two men founded the Mark-Brock enterprises. The venture proved an immediate success, and was one of the institutions that founded the penny arcade system in the early days of motion pictures. The firm soon widened its activities until it controlled theaters throughout Northern New York and Canada. Mr. Mark later withdrew from the firm, leaving it in control of Mr. Brock.

The Late Henry J. Brock.

Still holding his interests in the theaters, Mr. Brock became president of the Kinemacolor company. In this position he made many friends and broadened the field of his activities to a wide extent. After his association with Kinemacolor Mr. Brock began to specialize more in the foreign market. He made several trips to Europe, and at the time of his death had the entire foreign market at his finger tips. For the past few years Mr. Brock had been wonderfully successful in the handling of big features, and he controlled the rights to South America, Central America, Great Britain and Canada on the best products of American producers. He operated on a large scale and was successful in all his undertakings. He owned or controlled a great many motion pictures.

At the time of his death Mr. Brock was president of the Inter-Ocean Film Company, the Manxman Company and the Cinema Distributing Company. He, also owned the Academy and Regent theaters, in Buffalo, and the Strand and York theaters, in Toronto.

He is survived by his widow and four children—two girls and two boys, ranging in age from five to eighteen years—his mother and four sisters.

Representatives of every branch of the motion picture field and other amusement enterprises attended the funeral, which was held from Mr. Brock's late residence in Richmond avenue, Buffalo, on Sunday afternoon. Details of the funeral were in charge of Mr. Mark, who hurried to Kingston as soon as he had heard of the accident.

Among the bearers at the services were Hiram Abrams, of Paramount; Felix Feist, Joseph M. Schenck, of the Loew interests; George W. Newgrass and Fred Newman, business associates of Mr. Brock, and Paul H. Cromelin, vice-president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

Among the others who attended the funeral were Gus and Leo Schlessinger, M. S. Epstien, Eugene Kaufman, Madge Maloney and Edith Schulhoff. Miss Maloney had been in the employ of Mr. Brock for fifteen years and was his chief auditor. Miss Schulhoff was his private secretary.

Circuit Forms Release Plans

First National Members Form National Distributing Organization—By-Laws Revised—Schwalbe to Supervise Exchanges.

THE First National Exhibitors' Circuit, during meetings held several days last week at the Hotel Astor, New York, formed new release plans and formed a national distributing organization. The by-laws of the organization were amended and revised to cover the new plan. Harry M. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia, was appointed general supervisor of the exchanges that in future are to be controlled by the Circuit. The representative member of the Circuit in each respective district will open an exchange. All exchanges in all probability will be supervised from a headquarters in New York.

Many matters of importance were considered and acted upon during the meetings. One revision of the by-laws allows a greater leeway in the purchase of pictures. The purchase of two or three productions is under consideration, and the signing of contracts with national stars also is being considered. One or two contracts are said to have been signed, but members of the organization decline to either affirm or deny that such is the case.

Among those who attended the meetings at the Astor were: T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, who was instrumental in the Circuit's signing Charlie Chaplin; Harry M. Schwalbe, Philadelphia; Aaron J. Jones, Chicago; Nat Ascher, Chicago; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas; E. B. Johnson, San Francisco; E. V. Richards, Jr., New Orleans; William Sievers, St. Louis; E. Mandelbaum, Cleveland; A. J. Gilligham, Detroit; Lynn S. Card, New Jersey; Nathan H. Gordon, New England; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh; Jake Wells, Norfolk; J. H. Blank, Des Moines; Henry Brouse, Ottawa; W. H. Bewetts, Vancouver; Tom Moore, Washington; J. H. Kunsky, Detroit, and W. H. Swanson, Denver.

Lloyd Lonergan Retires

Thanhouser Scenario Writer Decides to Take a Rest from His Labors.

LLOYD LONERGAN, who wrote the first scenario for the Thanhouser Company, and has been connected with that institution since it was started in 1909, retired on September 1. He is going to Cape May, New Jersey, for a rest, and intends to put business to one side until his return.

Of the hundreds of stories Mr. Lonergan has written, "The Million Dollar Mystery" was easily the most famous. Not only did he evolve the name and prepare the script of this serial, but the selection of the director and the cast was done by him, and every detail of the production was in his hands. Mr. Lonergan was more lucky than many authors, for he had a large financial interest in his "brain child," and shared in the tremendous returns that came to the stockholders.

The latest picture from the pen of Mr. Lonergan is "The Man Without a Country," suggested by Edward Everett Hale's patriotic story. This photoplay, a six-reeler, was made by Thanhouser, and will be released by Jewel Productions, Inc. Some of his other recent productions are "The Woman in White," "Mary Lawson's Secret," with Charlotte Walker; "Under False Colors" and "The Heart of Ezra Greer," in both of which Frederick Warde starred; "A Modern Monte Cristo," featuring Vincent Serrano, and "Her Belover Enemy."

J. H. GENTER DEAD.

A letter from the J. H. Genter Company, Inc., of Newburgh, N. Y., makers of Mirroroid screens, brings the news that J. H. Genter, president and treasurer of the company, died very suddenly at his home in Newburgh on Wednesday evening, September 5. Heart failure is given as the cause of death which was as unexpected as it was sudden, for Mr. Genter was apparently in the best of health.

The deceased was thirty-eight years of age. He was born in Albany, N. Y., but had made his home for the past twelve years where he founded the business which bears his name. A widow and son of twelve survive. The funeral services were held on Sunday, September 9.

Traveling Picture Tent Shows Hurting Country—Town Exhibitors in Mississippi and the South.

CLYDE MARTIN, widely known among exhibitors as the first traveling musician who played musical accompaniment for moving pictures, is at present touring the south in that capacity. I have just received a letter from him that is well worthy of appearing in print, as it shows the prosperous condition of exhibitors in Mississippi and some of their drawbacks, the traveling picture tent show being one of the chief.

Mississippi exhibitors should certainly organize and have laws passed that will protect them against these itinerant competitors. Moving picture theater owners are tax payers and contribute to the growth and attractiveness of their communities. The small license paid by the tent show picture does not compensate the community for the loss sustained by the responsible, resident theater-owner. The town officials should be guided by ordinances that will protect the regular licensed exhibitor and resident from these traveling mountebanks. Following are paragraphs from Mr. Martin's letter:

"I am playing through the south, my first trip down here since 1912, and the change in the picture business in this territory is certainly astonishing. In fact, I think the business in the small towns of the Delta of Mississippi would open the eyes of some of the Northern exhibitors in the smaller towns. Everywhere I have found regular theaters, regular managers and the fifteen-cent admission. They are getting fifteen cents for regular attractions and twenty and twenty-five cents for features. Cotton prospects are wonderful and all exhibitors are doing good business.

"The only drawback which the Mississippi managers have is the road show competition. This territory is infested with a swarm of cheap tent shows. Several of the towns have passed laws regarding tent shows that have protected the exhibitor to a certain extent. I should think that this form of opposition would be enough to impress the exhibitor that organization is needed to protect their interests.

"This week, I am playing Cleveland, Miss., a town of two thousand population, and it would do your heart good to see the projection and the theater, and to meet the manager, R. T. Megibben. This house, The Regent, has a seating capacity of four hundred and he needs every seat. On Tuesday he ran 'The Masque of Life' at twenty-five cents admission, and packed them in. Wednesday and Thursday he has 'Womanhood,' at fifty cents admission, and I would bet a box of those favorite Havanas of yours that he will pack two shows each day. But 'Every silver lining has its cloud,' and in this case the cloud is formed by three tent shows which are billed in the town within the next ten days.

"But, notwithstanding all this, business is good in the South."

"Denver Dixon," Cowboy Actor, Tours Australasia for Two Years with Selig Western Pictures.

"Denver Dixon," the cowboy actor who figured prominently in Selig pictures a number of years ago, has just returned to Chicago after a two-years' trip through Australasia. During that time he has visited every city and town of importance in New Zealand and Australia, and has "showed" in 600 picture theaters.

Mr. Dixon carried with him two Selig films, "The Days of the Thundering Herd" and "The Diamond S Roundup," and at each presentation of these he delivered a lecture, entitled "What an American Cowboy Really Is."

While delivering this lecture and showing the films in a theatre at Adelaide, the Governor of South Australia and his wife, Lady Galloway, were present and gave high praise to the Selig pictures. Lady Galloway also told Mr. Dixon that previous to hearing his lecture she had never known why American cowboys wear fringes on their chaps, a something about which many millions of Americans are also ignorant.

Moving pictures are extremely popular in Australia and New Zealand, Mr. Dixon states, and the theaters are, as a rule, superior to those in America. The presentations are made with great care, both as to projection and the accompanying music.

American pictures are much preferred and Western subjects are in high favor. Pictures produced in Australia are inferior, owing to the lack of high-class directors, Mr. Dixon says.

Douglas Fairbanks Goes East to Film Several Scenes in "Reaching for the Moon."

Douglas Fairbanks stopped over in Chicago about an hour Tuesday, September 4, on his way from Los Angeles to New York. It was at first intended to entertain him at lunch in the Blackstone Hotel, but the brief time made it necessary to substitute instead the Hotel Dearborn, which is beside the La Salle depot, the point of departure eastward.

Max Goldstine, division superintendent of Paramount-Artcraft, stationed in this city, was the host. He had assembled over a score of representatives of the daily press and trade journals to meet the guest of honor, who was accompanied on the trip by his brother, John Fairbanks, who fills the position of business manager, and Bennie Ziedman, press representative. During lunch the author and star of "Down to Earth" gave an informal address, interspersed with some of his funny stories, which put everyone present in good humor.

Mr. Fairbanks stopped over at several towns on the way from Los Angeles before reaching the Windy City. These included San Bernardino, Gallup, New Mexico, where he was greeted at the station by several hundred children, who presented him with an American flag; Albuquerque, where a crowd of 2,000 people had assembled to do him honor, and at Dodge City, Ia., where Dick Crawford presented him with a gun which had been active in numerous holdups.

In New York, Mr. Fairbanks will take several scenes at Sherry's and Rector's for one of his near, coming productions, "Reaching for the Moon." The story of this picture has to do with modern life from the psychologic viewpoint.

Moving Pictures and Japanese Cops.

Mae Tinee, photoplay critic of the Chicago Tribune, treated her readers the other day to an amusing story showing how the police in Japan regulate moving picture theaters. Taking all in all we are thankful to be in Chicago.

Here is the story:

"Many lively comedies are being enacted in the picture houses of Tokio, a Japanese correspondent informs me—more comedies than are thrown on the screens. It seems that the police have been appointed guardians and that they take their duties seriously, congregating outside in numbers that would indicate that a political meeting was going on within. They watch carefully all who go in and make no bones about preventing them.

"A boy who declared he was 16, it is said, was told by the police that he appeared to be only 15. Whereupon he was compelled to go home and get the family register before he would be permitted to enter. The police also took serious exception to a married couple sitting in different parts of the house and spoke to the management about it.

"'If they are married,' said they, 'why don't you keep them together?'"

The war council of the Y. M. C. A. has made an appeal to moving picture producers for industrial moving pictures, which are intended to be shown in the military camps in this country and in France, and in the prison camps of Switzerland. It is estimated that the attendance in military training camps in this country will be over 250,000 a week, while the number of prisoners in Switzerland who will be entertained will be over 30,000. The appeal for such pictures has also appeared in the commerce reports of the U. S. East, secretary of the moving picture bureau of the Association, New York City.

"Within the Law" (Vitagraph), which Major Funkhouser has refused a "white" permit, and for which Vitagraph firmly refuses to accept a "pink" permit, will reach a hearing in the Circuit Court (Judge Robert E. Crowe presiding), Saturday, Sept. 15.

The case of "The Spy," the Fox picture which had been refused a "white" permit by Major Funkhouser, was given a hearing in the United States District Court, before Judge Samuel Alschuler, Friday, Aug. 31, and an order was issued restraining the city officials from interfering with its exhibition. Judge Alschuler ruled that the objection of Major Funkhouser to the picture was not within the meaning of the ordinance providing for the censorship of moving pictures. "There is nothing in the ordinance providing for the censorship of pictures which states a permit may be refused a picture simply because of the horrifying nature of one scene," ruled Judge Alschuler. "Objections to pictures are allowed when they are of an immoral or suggestive caliber." An order permitting the showing of "The Spy" was issued Saturday morning, Sept. 1, by Judge Alschuler.

All social and sex problem stories have been strictly eliminated from the Fox programs, Mr. Sheehan assured me, which will be supplanted by stories with a particular appeal to women and striring and vigorous plays for men. "Kiddie" series for children, which have become so popular will, of course, be continued and carried into still higher favor. Mr. Sheehan motored all of the way from New York City, stopping off at various points on the way to attend to the Fox interests.

Vitagraph Seeks Injunction

Gets Temporary Restraining Order from Justice Mullen Against Anita Stewart and Louis B. Mayer—Returnable September 11.

RECENT announcements in the trade press to the effect that Louis B. Mayer has secured the services of Anita Stewart, and had formed a company to exploit her in pictures has raised a protest from the Vitagraph Company, which claims that Miss Stewart is still under contract to play in Vitagraph pictures, and that said contract does not expire until January 31, 1918.

In support of these contentions the Vitagraph Company has brought an action against Miss Stewart and Mr. Mayer to restrain them proceeding with their plans to produce pictures featuring Miss Stewart, or to give publicity in any manner to such plans before the expiration of the existing contract between the Vitagraph Company and Miss Stewart.

Upon hearing the complaint and affidavits of the plaintiff, Justice Mullen of the Supreme Court, New York County, granted a temporary injunction on September 6, which order is returnable at 10.30 o'clock on Tuesday, September 11, when a motion to make it permanent will be argued.

Carl Laemmle Arrives at the Coast

Will Replace Drafted Stars With Men Under Draft Age—To Send Several Companies to Orient.

"WE are now engaged in developing young men under the draft age to take the place of our young leading men who have been called to the colors."

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, imparted this information to a representative of the Moving Picture World upon his arrival at Universal City from New York, for a stay of a month or more, when asked if the mobilization of the liberty army would not have a serious effect upon the ranks of the young men who play leads in Universal pictures.

"For a time," continued the head of the Big U organization, "there was every indication that the necessity of filling Uncle Sam's wants would cripple us as far as the young leading men were concerned, but we hit upon the idea of replacing them with the younger men and we are meeting with gratifying success.

Carl Laemmle.

"We have in our organization excellent material in the ambitious youngsters, quite a number of whom have been with us for several years and, being familiar with the exacting requirements of cinema production, they are fitting into the leading roles in a most satisfactory manner.

"Youth is a wonderful thing and we all admire it both in real life and when it is presented to our view on the screen, and that is why in all of the Universal productions we make every effort to obtain a cast containing young people who we believe form the most alluring combination for our patrons—youth, naturalness and acting ability."

Mr. Laemmle said that the motion picture industry is in a most prosperous condition, new theaters being constructed in every part of this country and in the Canadian dominions, thus causing a corresponding increase in the demand of the product of the various manufacturing concerns.

"We are going full tilt, day and night," said Mr. Laemmle, "and one of the objects of my visit at this time is to arrange for doubling the capacity of the laboratories at Universal City, so that we will have no difficulty in meeting the ever-increasing demand. We are doing an unusually large business with China, Japan, India and Australia just now and Universal films are being transported to twenty-one different foreign lands, our agents having met with wonderful success in the countries across the seas where American films have become so popular. It is our intention to send several companies to the Orient in the near future to film on an elaborate scale a number of pictures in the atmosphere of the Far East."

The Universal president brought with him from New York a number of new stories by well-known authors and these are to be made into feature productions.

"Comedy will prevail to a large extent in the forthcoming photoplays," said Mr. Laemmle; "these are serious times, you know, and in their diversion the people must find much of the lighter side of life. That's the reason we are going to inject all the comedy we can into our future productions."

Johnson Chief at Culver City

Will Have Dictatorial Powers Over Triangle Productions From Scenario Department to Market.

JULIAN JOHNSON, until recently editor of the Photoplay Magazine and a former Los Angeles drama critic, has been appointed editor-in-chief of the Triangle Film Corporation, and is en route to Los Angeles to assume his post.

The position was created for Mr. Johnson by H. O. Davis, general manager and vice-president of the Triangle Film Corporation, and is one of exceptional responsibility. He will be held responsible for all pictures produced at the Triangle Culver City studio from the time they leave the scenario until they are ready for marketing.

"It is a new department for us," stated Mr. Davis. "No such position has been open in our company until now. I saw the need of a final supervisor or editor-in-chief, and I simply created the post. Of course, I first made certain that we could obtain Mr. Johnson's service.

"He will act as sort of a middleman between our script editor, Mr. Cunningham, and myself. His word on the stories will be final, and a picture will not be released until he has placed his O. K. on the film following the cutting operation. The new system will, I think, eliminate a lot of waste and will work for the betterment of Triangle pictures.

"Mr. Johnson is rated among the best newspaper and magazine writers of the country, and my opinion of him is expressed by the dictatorial powers which have been granted him."

At the Paralta Studios

Henry Walthall Arrives—President Anderson Visiting the Studios—Vice-President Robert T. Kane Drafted.

Mary Charleson has been selected to play opposite Walthall in his first production. The story and supporting cast has not been selected as yet. Carl Anderson, the president of the Paralta, arrived in the city last week and reported himself as delighted at the progress his organization has made. Robert T. Kane, vice-president of the Paralta Pictures, Inc., who came out here to open up the Pacific Coast studios, has been drafted and expects to join the colors in a very short time. He has been working for several weeks to put his affairs in such order as to be able to leave for the front on a moment's notice. The vice-president of the Paralta Pictures, Inc., did not claim exemption.

G. R. Warren Now Horsley Manager.

G. R. Warren has been appointed manager of productions of the Horsley studios in Los Angeles, and will assume immediate charge.

Mr. Warren, who is recognized as one of the most capable all-around men in the picture business, began his career in the legitimate drama, through which he graduated to executive positions in the administration side of the profession. Early in the development of moving pictures Mr. Warren was first associated with Mr. Horsley in what has since become the Universal Film Company.

W. A. S. Douglas and Norman Manning have severed their affiliations with the Horsley organization. Mr. Douglas was associated in the conduct of the Lasalida Company and Mr. Manning was manager of the studio.

Mary MacLaren Injured.

The car of Mary MacDonald MacLaren, the David Horsley star, was wrecked by another machine last week and Miss MacLaren suffered painful lacerations and bruises. Although her beauty will not be impaired, she will be confined to a hospital bed for several weeks to come.

In her production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "K," now nearing completion, Lois Weber has selected an unusually strong and well selected cast of popular players to appear in her second independent release. The stellar role of Sidney will be played by Mildred Harris. True Boardman, of Stingaree fame, will play the title role of "K," while he and Miss Harris are being supported by Albert Roscoe (Dr. Max), Hal Clements (Dr. Ed), Zella Caull (Charlotta), Carl Miller (Joe Drummond), George French (Schwitter), and Jean Bernoudy (Tillie), and a host of others. It has not yet been decided whether it will be marketed as one of her new independent releases or on the states rights plan.

That poverty comes high is proved by the setting for "Doing Her Bit," which Ruth Stonehouse is starring in, under the direction of Jack Conway. In this a block from a New York tenement district has been reproduced at the Triangle's Culver City studio at a cost of nearly $50,000.

In "Doing Her Bit," Miss Stonehouse, the new Triangle star, is shown as the sister of a slacker, and as a result of her tireless effort not only the wayward brother, but many other war dodgers in the tenement district are imbued with a spirit of patriotism which carries them into the recruiting station and Uncle Sam's liberty army.

Film fans with a taste for the melodramatic will be able to get their fill of thrills and incidentally witness the screen debut of Roy Stewart as a star when the new Triangle actor's first picture, "The Devil Dodger," which just has been completed, is released.

Stewart appears in the role of a bad man of the worst type, who shoots from his hip and fears neither man, beast nor devil.

A good idea of the amount of money consumed in film alone in a modern motion picture plant may be gained from the following data furnished by Peter Shamray, laboratory manager of the former Triangle-Fine Arts plant, now the producing center of Triangle-Keystone comedies.

The Eastman company recently sent out a notice to the trade to the effect that they would be unable to ship film on account of the shortage of tin cans, brought about by the war, and urging all producing plants to return the empty containers they had on hand, for which a liberal price would be paid.

An inventory of the film cans in the Triangle-Keystone plant revealed the fact that, in a period of a little over two years, the Triangle-Fine Arts studios had used 8,142 cans of raw stock. Each can contains 2,000 feet of film, making a total of sixteen million, two hundred and eight-four feet. The cans, when crated, made twelve truck loads.

Until recently, the freight on empty cans to New York was more than the containers themselves were worth, but the price of tin has mounted so rapidly that at the present time the revenue on the empties effects a saving not to be scoffed at. What is more important than the monetary saving, however, is the insurance that the Triangle-Keystone studios will not be held up on account of inability to procure raw stock.

The Universal Nestor company, under the direction of Roy Clements, is filming a two-reel comedy at Universal City entitled "Trial Engagement." The principal roles are played by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, supported by Donna Drew.

Ida May Park is rapidly nearing the completion of a five-reel special feature production, "The Boss of Powderville," written by Thomas Addison and prepared for the screen by Miss Park. William Stowell plays the "Boss" and Dorothy Phillips has the star feminine role. Jack Mulhall plays the "juvenile." Lon Chaney and Alfred Allen also have important parts in the photoplay.

When Mae Murray, with her director, Robert Leonard, came to the Bluebird studios recently, Production Manager Henry McRae set about to secure for the celebrated star th best supporting cast available. For her leading man he was forunate in obtaining the services of Wheeler Oakman, who is one of the most popular of the younger lead men of the screen.

Oakman has built up an enviable reputation for himself during an engagement of more than two years with Kathlyn Williams at the Selig studios. He played the leading juvenile role in Selig's "The Rosary" and "The Spoilers," and was the principal player in "The Ne'er-Do-Well." More recently he has been playing opposite Mabel Normand.

Another well-known screen actor who has been engaged to support Miss Murray is Harry Von Meter, who had been with the American Company for nearly four years before joining the Bluebird players. He played the heavy lead in several of Mary Miles Minter's productions and was one of the featured players with Gail Kane in "Whose Wife?"

A one-reel comedy entitled "Out of the Bag," is being produced at Universal City under the direction of Al Santell. Harry Mann is the featured player.

Allen Curtis, director of Universal Joker comedies, is staging a new one-reel comedy, "Rain and Rascality." Gale Henry and William Franey, supported by Milburn Moranti, play the leading roles.

"The Twisted Soul" is the title of a five-reel photoplay production at Universal City by Director Allen J. Holubar. The featured role is played by Brownie Vernon. With Louise Lovely as his featured player, Director Edward J. Le Saint is producing a five-reel drama entitled "The Wolf and His Mate." Supporting Miss Lovely are Hart Hoxie, Betty Schade, Hector Dion and George O'Dell. The story was written by Julia Maier and prepared for the screen by Doris Schroeder.

Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber are the principal players in the Universal serial, "The Phantom Ship," being produced at Universal City by Director Francis Ford. The company is filming the sixth episode at the present time.

Neva Gerber was operated upon for appendicitis at the Clara Barton Hospital, Los Angeles, on August 23. The operation was a success, but it will be at least a month before Miss Gerber will be in satisfactory condition for the resumption of her work and then only to play in scenes requiring but little effort on her part.

How Pictures Look to a Legionaire

Interesting Letter from Bennett Molter, Who Describes Exhibitions in Sound of the Guns.

BENNETT MOLTER, formerly of Metro's directing staff, the only moving picture man "at the front," who is an aviation pilot, will return soon to America to take his examinations for a commission. The American aviator was slightly injured recently in a fall which, however, had no power to lessen his enthusiasm for the service.

Robert J. Huntington, at the Metro Studio, 3 West Sixty-first street, has just received a letter from Mr. Molter which proves conclusively that his enthusiasm for motion pictures has not lessened, either. Here are some interesting facts about the pictures shown to the men in the service abroad, quoted from Molter's letter to Huntington:

At the Front—Flanders.

My Dear Bob: I am back at it again, but not so strong as before my smash. Looking back, I sure was in luck. The British have a battery of heavy caliber guns near us, and have taken over an old barn in the village in which a regular motion picture show is given daily. It is run under the auspices of the British Expeditionary Forces Canteen Cinema Supply.

A charge of thirty centimes, 6 cents, is made for soldiers, and a franc for officers. They have a portable dynamo and projection machine, etc. And all the subjects are American. Can you beat it? Last night I had the pleasure of seeing the "M" in Metro tumble around, and the stars take their places, and then the Drews, in "At the Count of Ten." Sidney Drew got many laughs, especially when he repeatedly touched the money he succeeded in borrowing to his forehead, nose and lips. Believe me, Bob, it was a real treat for me to see the old faces again, to imagine big Bob Kurrle at the crank, Eddie Shulter running around back of the set, and maybe you looking on. It took me back to Sixty-first street for an hour or so. And all the time the picture was on we could hear the "boom, boom" of the cannonading. Metro is sure "At the Front."

The program is an all-comedy one, generally three single-reelers and then two two-reelers. They love the westerns, especially the trick stuff in chases, etc. A real picture would fall flat, because they don't want to have to think, but comedies give them something to laugh at and make them forget the hardships of the trenches. One day a week the civilians are allowed to attend the show, but on the others days, only troops. They begin the run at 6 o'clock and finish at 8—two hours; change the program twice a week, Sundays and Thursdays. On conversation with the lieutenant in charge, I find he pays $24 a week for this service, and his overhead for petrol, etc., is about the same, but he takes in from 750 to 1,000 francs a week. The balance above the expenses is used to finance new shows of a similar nature in other portions of the British front.

Gee, but I would like to be back in the good old U. S. A. That —— Drew picture has made me homesick. Regards to Cabanne and Pop and Billy. BEN.

HAL ROACH IN NEW YORK.

Hal Roach, director general of the Rolin Film Co., and the man who is personally in charge of the direction of Pathe's new Toto comedies and the well known "Lonesome Luke" and Harold Lloyd comedies, is now in New York on a business visit to the Pathe offices. Mr. Roach brought with him the second Toto comedy which was shown to the Pathe film committee. The report on it was to the effect that it easily ranks as one of the best laugh producers that has ever been made and that Toto is destined to be a great favorite.

Mr. Roach reports the engagement by Rolin of a number of new players, directors and technical men. The company has shown an uninterrupted and rapid growth from the time when its product was first placed upon the Pathe Program two years ago.

NEW GLADYS BROCKWELL CAST ANNOUNCED.

One of the finest companies of motion picture players that has been seen this year in a feature production is that which has been gathered together under the direction of Bertram Bracken for Gladys Brockwell's new William Fox drama.

In the cast are Eugenie Forde, Marjorie Daw, Harry Lonsdale, Douglass Gerrard, Edward Cecil, Colin Chase and Bert Grassby. Gerrard has acted in and directed many films; Lonsdale was with Mansfield in "Beau Brummel," with Nat Goodwin for five years, and with E. S. Willard for twelve; Edward Cecil and Grassby have been in several Fox plays.

Douglas Fairbanks Arrives on Broadway

Met by Reception Committee at Grand Central Station—Expresses His Delight at Being Back in Typical Fairbanks Style.

IN order to spend two days in New York for the production of a few scenes of his newest Artcraft picture, Douglas Fairbanks, accompanied by his players and technical staff crossed the continent from Los Angeles, arriving in Manhattan last Wednesday. With his famous smile in full play the energetic Douglas expressed his delight in being back among the tall buildings by performing a somersault over the tonneau of S. L. Rothapfel's car which awaited him, while the Universal Weekly cameraman, the Underwood & Underwood Syndicate Newspaper photographer and reporters recorded proceedings. Spying a New York copper the athletic once again leaped out of the car, hurdling over the rear end and with a shout, landing on the shoulders of the surprised copper. Grasping the wielder of the nightstick around the neck Douglas expressed his delight in seeing one of New York's finest in a no uncertain manner.

At the depot a reception committee of well known filmites awaited the arrival of Fairbanks and his company, including Al. Lichtman, general manager of Artcraft, S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theater, John Emerson, director-general of the Fairbanks forces, Emil Shauer of the Famous Players-Lasky offices, and Pete Schmid, of Artcraft.

The trip cross country proved a never-to-be-forgotten event for the popular Douglas. At San Bernardino one of the greatest crowds ever seen at the station greeted the Artcraft star and during the fifteen minute stop-over Douglas autographed articles ranging from the inside hat-band of a straw hat to the tongue of a tennis shoe. At Gallup, N. M., 200 school children presented the popular actor with an American flag which had been waving over their school house for fifteen years. At Alberqueque a troop of soldiers and a tribe of Indians gave him a rousing reception. Dodge City presented him with a gun that boasts of ten notches, formerly owned by Dick Crawford, the one time notorious bandit. Kansas City, Toledo, Cleveland and Chicago offered him similar receptions. Douglas was accompanied by John Fairbanks, Eileen Percy, Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks and Douglas, Jr., Victor Fleming, Bennie Zeidman, Joseph Henaberry, Millard Webb, Bill Shay, Keene Thompson, Edwin Tanake and Deliah Dowd. The party made the trip in a special car, which took them back to the Coast after a two day stay in New York.

R. A. WALSH TO DIRECT GEORGE WALSH.

Probably for the first time in screen history a motion picture director, R. A. Walsh, will direct his own brother, George Walsh, in a feature production. The film play is now in process of construction at the big William Fox studios in Hollywood, Cal. Unusual interest will attach to the production, of course, because of the alliance of the two Walshes on a single work.

George Walsh has appeared in an even dozen photoplays and R. A. Walsh has directed nine subjects for the Fox organization.

Both George and R. A. Walsh were born in New York City. The former attended Fordham and Georgetown Universities, while the latter holds a degree from Seton Hall College.

NORMA TALMADGE RETURNS TO NEW YORK.

Miss Norma Talmadge has returned to her own studio at 318 East 48th street to make the interiors of her new picture, "The Secret of the Storm Country." Ithaca, New York, witnessed in detail the filming of the rugged exteriors of this screen story, a sequel to Grace Miller White's "Tess of the Storm Country," which also appeared in film form. Miss Talmadge spent several weeks in Ithaca with her supporting cast. The entire company returned to New York early this week. Niles Welch and Helen Dahl will appear in her new picture.

W. T. KINSON WITH GENERAL AT PITTSBURGH.

A new manager for the General Film Company exchange at Pittsburgh is announced. He is W. T. Kinson, who was for two years the Mutual representative in Pittsburgh. Mr. Kinson has always had an excellent record in the motion picture distributing world and comes to his new position with excellent prospects for usefulness.

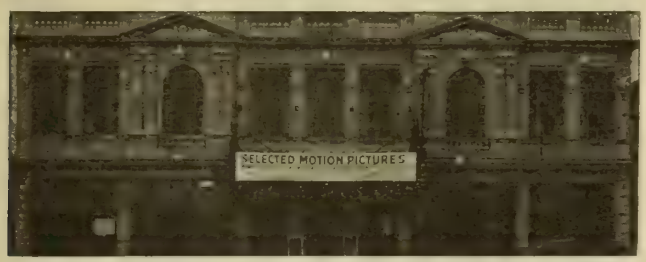
Morelock Leases the Liberty

Will Open House on September 30 as High Class Photoplay Theater—Productions Booked to Determine Admission Prices—Reserved Seat Accommodation for Patrons.

A. E. MORELOCK, former owner and manager of the Pageant theater, Delmar avenue, St. Louis, Mo., has concluded a long-term lease on the Lorelei Building at Olive street and Taylor avenue, and will open it September 30 as a high-class motion picture theater. The Liberty has 1,600 seats, all on one floor, 250 being loge, or box, seats arranged in a unique manner on each side of the main circle and raised to a position that puts them in a direct line of vision with the screen.



Liberty Theater, St. Louis, Mo.

The interior decorations of the theater are in white and colored tile, the sides and ceilings being finished in lattice lacings of hardwood painted in old gold and white enamel. The lobby is especially striking, with solid marble wainscoting and ceramic tile floor. Mr. Morelock will operate the Liberty on a new policy of program, only one show being given in an evening. The doors will be opened at 7 p. m., but the regular performance will not begin until 8. The hour preceding the feature will be taken up by musical concerts, soloists, lectures, and slides of an educational nature. The regular program will last until 11.

Spacious Interior of Liberty Theater, St. Louis, Mo.

Only high-class features of the larger and better kind will be shown. Admission will be based on the strength and merits of the productions screened, and tickets will be sold on the reserved seat coupon plan, enabling patrons to reserve seats in advance by telephone or in the usual manner.

Mr. Morelock has had wide experience in all lines of the amusement business. He entered the field in St. Louis in September, 1915, when he erected The Pageant, one of the biggest and best equipped theaters in the city. His new house is in a fine location, being in a high-class residence and business district known as the West Side Rialto, at Delmar and Kings Highway. Mr. Morelock says he is in the market for productions that will stand a week's run or more, and will either rent outright or book on a percentage basis.

Princess Theater, Argenta, Ark.

On Front of House and Extending Across the Street Is Big Electric Sign Emblazoning Theater's Name—Letters Are Four Feet in Height—Managed by Louis Rosenbaum.

ARGENTA, located just across the river from its sister city, Little Rock, the capital of Arkansas, has one institution of which every one of its 15,000 inhabitants is proud. It is an amusement resort—the Princess theater—a strictly modern and fireproof structure, equal to any in the state. Louis Rosenbaum is the manager.

Constructed at a cost of $15,000 and furnished in the most up to date theater furniture at no less expense than $7,500, the Princess is "nifty," cozy and and a really hand-some place of amusement. It is located on Main street on the busiest block in the city, between Second and Third streets.

Princess Theater, Argenta, Ark.

The interior of the theater is striking. The walls are beautified with oil paintings and in the ceiling are six large domes with an indirect lighting system that in no way affects perfect pictures and at the same time make the theater light as day. A ventilating system that changes the air in the theater every three minutes has been installed, thereby making the auditorium a real airdome on the hottest summer day.

One Motiograph and one Power's 6B machine are used. A Wagner Transformer permits the use of direct current, and the Gold King screen leaves no room for improvement along these lines. Music is rendered by a $3,000 player piano.

A large electric sign with the word, "Princess," has been hung across the street. The letters are four feet high and 196 lights illuminate it so that it can be plainly seen for a distance of several blocks. Not only does the management believe in giving the patrons the best in theater furnishings, but also strives to furnish them with the best motion pictures on the market. Program is changed daily.

The Princess seats 650 persons. A balcony, seating 150, is provided for the negroes. That no part of the theater may present the appearance of anything but a comfy playhouse, the same care in equipping the balcony was used as in the lower floor. The balcony and lower floor are supplied with twenty-two electric fans. The auditorium is steam heated. In fact, nothing has been overlooked to install everything that appertains to a first-class playhouse.

New Liberty Theater, Portland, Ore.

Jensen and von Herberg Transform Playhouse Into a Shrine of Photoplays and Music—Magnitude of Sumptuous Settings Elicits Unbounded Praise—Spacious and Luxurious Rest-rooms for All Patrons—Seats 2,100.

"THE grandest in the West"—thus Jensen and von Herberg characterize the latest acquisition to their already pretentious circuit of photoplay theaters. "The grandest in the West" is the Portland, Oregon, Liberty Theater, and the people of this City of Roses call it a shrine of photoplays, music, and allied arts.

And the Portland Liberty may fittingly be called a shrine, for, since its opening on July 17, patrons of photoplay have thronged its portals, and once within have reveled in its grandeur, effused over the magnitude of its sumptuous settings, and gloried in the fact that this photoplay palace has graced their city.

The motif—one usually speaks of decorations alone as having a motif, but with the Liberty it may be said that the whole theater casts a spell over the patron that seems to be impelled by a sensuous something to which that term may be properly applied. The motif of the Liberty, then, is from the Italian, tempered a bit with the atmosphere of rose-fragrant Portland, and ever spreading until, even beyond the ripple of the water falls symbolic of Oregon's great outdoors, the spectator is caught and held and thrilled by its witchery. Such is the motif.

On both sides of the velvet curtains of burnt orange which hide the screen are replicas of Oregon's famous water falls, Multnomah and Bridal Veil. Here water ripples in true outdoor fashion over miniature rocks and under fairy bridges.

To the left and to the right of the stage are the organ lofts where the notes from the big Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra come forth from behind Italian Garden sets, vine hung pergolas and trellised balconies, replete with palms and floral decorations in most profuse varieties.

In the spacious inner lobby, the patron passes a fountain in sculpture, a reproduction of the Boy and Goose masterpiece by Verraccio. Here a stream of water constantly plays against the center lights and drops into the fountain's base where the goldfish swim. The floor of the inner lobby is carpeted in a rich gray, which color is also used on the stairway and ramp. The patron can enter the auditorium from this inner lobby either by going through the curtain hung entrances to the lower floor or by selecting the ramp or stairway to the balcony.

On the mezzanine floor is the reception room. The architecture of this room is of the Georgian period and it is handsomely and harmoniously furnished. Here the patron is impressed by the vista effect of heavy French mirrors showing through arbors of hanging flowers, reflecting latticed balconies and radiant color beyond the fancy of the most vivid imagination.

The walls of the auditorium are decorated with frescos from famous paintings, to which are added canvas reproductions of the work of the artist Fraganard. The general decorative color scheme harmonizes with the other fittings of the theater, of course, and is burnt orange, gray and black. The decorations, the settings, the effects, are the work of Percival Collins, of Seattle, under whose direction several other of the Jensen and von Herberg theaters have been decorated. A gentlemen's smoking room, provided with comfortable lounging chairs, has its entrance from the mezzanine floor.

The Portland Liberty is as perfect mechanically as it is artistically. The three stage curtains of burnt orange colored velvet, over 200 yards in area, are controlled by motors from the operating room. When the center curtain is down hiding the screen, the side curtains are drawn back, disclosing the cascading water falls on each side of the stage set. Then when the picture is to be projected, the center curtain parts and the side curtains close the wings.

The throw is 122 feet from the operating room on the lower floor, and a perfect picture is projected. The operator is in charge of both stage sets and projection. He has at hand dimmers for various purposes and myriads of colored lights throughout the theater are under his control. The front of the Liberty is graced with an electrically lighted replica of the goddess after which the theater is named. This stands above the elaborate marquee and shows for blocks up and down Portland's Broadway.

To those who have known the Liberty in the days when it was the Orpheum, Empress, T & D, and James' Broadway, mention of a few of the big changes might be of interest. The outside lobby has been shortened by perhaps 20 feet and the result is the magnificent inner lobby with the Boy and Goose fountain. The left hand stairway has been converted into a ramp leading to the balcony, the former loft-like mezzanine has been divided into rest rooms, the ceilings have been arched, and French mirrors have been fitted into the walls.

The old, big, gloomy auditorium has been made comfortable, cozy and cheerful by the removal of the theater boxes and the installation of Italian garden sets, balcony effects and rows of loges across the middle of the house. The new decorative scheme, frescos and hidden lights have added an inviting atmosphere that was formerly lacking.

Capacious Foyer of New Liberty Theater, Portland, Ore. Note the Boy and Goose Fountain in Center, Which is a Reproduction of the Original Sculpture by Verraccio.

The opening of the theater on the afternoon of July 17 was most auspicious. Shortly after the lunch hour, the crowd began to gather under the marquee and by two o'clock, the opening time, the people were lined up Broadway to Washington street. The performance began with a showing of the Statue of Liberty as the sun rises on New York harbor. The electrical effects were given full play while the short piece of film was being projected, and Oliver C. Wallace, at the organ, had his audience on its feet cheering. Then came the feature, "The Flame of the Yukon."

The Liberty is operated by the Liberty Theater Corporation, of which Jensen and von Herberg are the managing directors. J. G. von Herberg was personally present at the opening. The direct management of the theater is in the hands of E. J. Myrick, whose successful direction of the Portland Columbia has placed it in an enviable position among the Rose City's photoplay theaters.

The new Liberty is the sixth Jensen and von Herberg house on the Pacific Coast. It seats 2,100 and about $48,000 was expended making the alterations preliminary to its opening, a sum approximately $10,000 in excess of the first estimate. A newer and bigger Hope-Jones Wurlitzer is now being built for the theater, to be delivered in October.

Madison Theater, Detroit, Mich.

Kunsky's Magnificent Picture House the Embodiment of Everything Modern in Theater Construction, Architecture and Furnishings—Seats 3,600—Property Represents Investment of $500,000.

THE Madison, which is situated at Broadway and Grand Circus Park, Detroit, is a John H. Kunsky creation. The structure faces the park on Witherell street. The original plan called for an expenditure of $250,000, but when the doors were opened upward of $500,000 had gone into the property. Mr. Kunsky cast about a long time before he was able to secure the piece of land he wanted, and considering it the best of any possible location in the city, he built a theater which adds to Detroit's fame.

In the Madison is combined everything that has been found to be most desirable in a strictly high class moving picture house. Added to these are many innovations, so that the Madison stands out today as one of the most up to date theaters in the country.

The Madison seats 3,600 on the main floor and in the spacious balcony. Between the two elevations is a mezzanine —the architect calls it a well—for the convenience of those who come between shows and desire to sit around in comfort until the beginning of the next picture. The seating arrangement is such that the entire screen is in a direct line of vision from all parts of the house.

The decorative scheme of the Madison is from the Italian renaissance. Tapestry panels cover the walls, and a color scheme of green, gold and old ivory is carried out in every bit of work. The stage setting differs from all others. It is a complete dome, and the pillars and dome are colored with a combination of the three primal hues. Lighting effects are arranged at the top, bottom and sides, so that any desired effect can be produced—beautiful sunsets, winter scene, cold moonlights or the glare of the tropical sun.

The orchestra pit also is new, being in three elevations, similar to the concert arrangement, and in full view of the spectators. The pipe organ cost $50,000, and is probably the largest in any theater this side of New York.

The lighting arrangement is such that the house is never dark; that is to say, of course, during the time it is open to the public. The orchestra is under the direction of Eduard Werner, and the organist is Arthur H. J. Searle, of London. M. Harlan Starr, formerly of the Washington, is manager of the Madison.

Associated with Mr. Kunsky in this and other enterprises is George W. Trendle, corporation lawyer. The financial welfare of Mr. Kunsky's enterprises and many of the important business details have been consummated under his direction and with his advice.

The location of the Madison being most central, Mr. Kunsky has arranged for a continuous performance from 12 o'clock noon until 11 o'clock at night. The start of each of the set performances during those hours is at 12 o'clock, 2, 4, 5:45, 7:30 and 9:15 o'clock.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

Improvising (Part II)

IN ISSUE of July 28 (page 637) Moving Picture World, was shown an example of progression from one chord to another through means of one note held in common by both chords. Example 33 illustrates the tonic chord of C, and shows four other chords (or keys) each having a note which is contained in the chord of C. In the illustration (Ex. 33) the note in question is "C" which—as shown—is also contained in the chords of A minor, F major and the dominant 7th of the key of G major. (This note "C" is also found in the chords of F minor and the dominant 7th of the key of G minor.) A sort of relationship is thus established between the chord of C and other chords containing the note "C."

Observe the two other notes in the chord of C ("E" and "G"). Each one of these notes may be found in other chords beside the chord of C. Example 34 shows three chords (besides the C chord) containing the note "G," and three containing the note "E."

These notes in the chord of C (viz.: "C", "E" and "G") being also found in chords of other keys, establish a more or less close relationship with those other keys. Examples 33 and 34 illustrate simple and natural progressions from the chord of C to the following keys.

Through the note "G;" Key of G, key of E-flat and key of D (through dominant 7th of key of D).

Through the note "E"; Key of A, key of E.

Trough the note "C;" Key of A minor, key of F major, key of A-flat major and key of G (through dominant 7th).

In the last measure of example 34 we find a progression from key of C to the key of B natural. In all previous examples in modulating from one key to another I have endeavored to give preference to modulation through dominant 7th's. That is, when using an intervening chord between. From the key of C to that of B natural is a half tone progression downward. Descending chords by halftones is difficult. In an earlier article a table was shown giving one means of this progression. To go directly to the dominant 7th of B natural from the chord of C makes too great a contrast to give pleasant results. I have used instead another chord as a pivot in modulating from C to B natural. For this particular progression (downward in halftones) one will find it preferable to use two or more intervening chords.

In Ex. 35 I have shown the progression (pivoting on the note "E") from the chord of "C" to the dominant 7th of B natural. Next, from the chord of "C" to another chord (augmented 6th) to key of B natural. The two examples in the lower part of Ex. 35 show progressions through two intervening chords—all pivoting upon the note 'E."

The Garden of Allah.

E. James, Chicago, writes: "Can you kindly give me any information regarding the exquisite incidental music to the 'Garden of Allah' (Selig Special)?"

The music incidental to this artistic Selig production was compiled by Mr. Harry Alford of Chicago, Illinois. A great part of the music is original with Mr. Alford, and was composed by him especially for this picture. Mr. Alford conducts a bureau for arranging, copying and composing music, and is the best equipped for work of this sort of any man in the west. He has made musical settings and orchestral scores for a number of special pictures, among them the "Garden of Allah." Numerous inquiries similar to the one above have been received concerning this picture, and the writers will please consider this an answer to all.

New Picture Music.

Mr. Joseph Carl Breil, the man who composed and compiled the music for "The Birth of a Nation," has, through Chappell & Co., Ltd., issued a brand new collection of incidental music for use in playing for the picture. This collection contains twelve original numbers presented in a novel form. Nine of these numbers are divided into parts marked "A," "B," and "C." Each of these lettered themes is complete in itself, yet related to the others. The idea being that a chosen theme can be amplified or carried to its logical conclusion through one or both of the succeeding themes. For example, No. 7, is arranged in this manner:

1 (A)—To depict a conspiracy or burglary with (B) consequent tumult or escape.

2 (A)—A dismal forest or desert scene with (B) pursuit by wild beasts or bandits.

3 (A)—An approaching storm and (B), its unleashing.

A dainty little conceit is No. 10, opening with a recitative in which the music seems to ask a question. It is divided thus:

"The question" (A) a doubtful or embarrassing moment followed by (B) threat, decision or resolution.

Mr. Breil has a number of other good things to his credit, having compiled and composed the incidental music to "Intolerance," and other pictures; has composed the music to the opera "The Legend" (anew work), and will be best remembered as composer of the music to the playlet, "The Climax," a success of some years ago. His song, "The Climax," is still a popular number among the better class of soprani.

NEW THEATER AT RADFORD, VA.

The new Colonial Theater at Radford, Va., is nearing completion and will open Oct. 10 with the "Birth of a Nation." The new house will have a seating capacity of about seven hundred. It will be a decided credit to a city of five thousand population. The management will offer both pictures and legitimate, keeping open all the time with pictures when other shows are not booked. The city has been without a large house for years and is looking forward to the opening. It will be run under the management of Painter and Lane.

ALMA RUEBEN IN "THE FIREFLY OF TOUGH LUCK."

Alma Rueben, whose beauty and finished delineations have attracted remark from critics and fans, will from henceforth be featured in Triangle plays, the first one selected for her being "The Firefly of Tough Luck," in which Walt Whitman, the veteran character actor, will also have a leading part.

British Notes

D. W. GRIFFITH shortly intends to revive "The Birth of a Nation" for another season at Drury Lane Theater. Since its introduction to British audiences two years ago its progress from London, around the leading provincial theaters, then back to London, has been rather slow but of undoubted certainty. Particularly in Lancashire, Yorkshire, the Tyneside and Scotland has the Clansman story developed into a prime favorite, and repeated runs have been the rule rather than the exception. Now, while "The Birth of a Nation" is to reappear at the national theater, its successor, "Intolerance," commences its first provincial tour.

The Fox superfilm, "A Daughter of the Gods," was also launched upon an extensive provincial and suburban tour last week, after a short season at the London Opera House (now known as the Stoll Picture Theater). At its first engagement at the Royal Artillery Theater, Woolwich, it proved a refreshing attraction to the munition makers.

A growing complaint against imported picture plays from America is of hustle. In one or two recent productions I could name to such a noticeable degree is the action of the story speeded up that only the discretion of the operator could save the situation. It is an axiom of the successful film maker that the photoplay must be the embodiment of life and movement, but at the same time a picture play that reflects things in an unnatural manner fails in its purpose. A Wardour street exchange manager advises me that he received a subject a few weeks ago keyed up in action to such a pitch that when projected below the normal speed it was converted from first-class drama into third-rate slapstick. He overcame the speed difficulty by judicious padding.

A celebrity in any sphere of art or industry who has never seen a film exhibition must be relegated to the plane of the dodo, both in rarity and ideas. Such, however, is the proud boast of a well-known concert vocalist who attended a kinema for the first time the other day. The film shown was Essanay's "Burning the Candle," starring Henry B. Walthall. After the show the famous singer admitted to a group of copy-thirsty pressmen being agreeably surprised to find an entire absence of flicker and ventured the opinion that the average line of posters outside kinema shows did the films rather less than justice. Rather singularly the celebrated singer complained of hustle in the picture. "It struck me very much that there was too much hurry about it. Over and over again I wanted longer to study the facial expression of the characters. Walthall has a particularly mobile face, and it was annoying when one was watching its changes of expression to find the film switching off suddenly to another incident. There was not enough use of the dramatic pause to enable one to study the thoughts of the characters. The heroine was treated with the same brusqueness, just a fleeting glance of her changes of expression. I wanted more time to take it in."

Joseph R. Darling, of the Fox Film Corporation, left London last week-end for South America. He anticipates returning to London via New York at the end of the year.

Censor Films is the name of a new renting exchange that has opened at 101 Wardour street and will work southern territory upon several first-class exclusives, notably "The Fall of a Nation," "The Witching Hour," and "God's Man," in addition to productions of the Frohman Corporation. The new undertaking is identified with Bolton-Stewart's International Pictures and will act as agents for that firm in London and district.

The short career of the only registered trade union of the industry, the Kinematograph Exhibitors' Association, is already becoming schismatic. A number of exhibitors in the northern provinces have, one can not say other than indiscreetly, abandoned the exhibitors' association in favor of a rival association, the Provincial Entertainment Proprietors and Managers' Association. I asked one well-known exhibitor his reason for breaking away from the old association. He replied that there was considerable dissatisfaction among provincial members with the policy of the general council of the exhibitors' association. The provinces are dominated too much from London, he alleged, and the interests of northern exhibitors are subservient to those in the metropolis and the south. Two other exhibitors opined that recent attitudes of the exhibitors' association on questions affecting their welfare were passive or even dormant, and this view generally summarizes the complaint of the wayward ones. Nevertheless, the breach is an unfortunate one, occurring at the commencement of a new phase in the career of an association better organized, better fitted, and better able to serve the exhibitors' interests than ever before. To abandon a ship before there is any probability of it sinking and after acting as guarantors for its passage is decidedly not playing the game.

John D. Walker (Walker's World Films) has secured another feather for his cap in the capture for the British market of the Arbuckle (Fatty) comedies. The first of the new series, entitled "The Butcher Boy," will be shown to the trade within the course of a few days.

D. W. Griffith has been scouring the countryside on the outskirts of Greater London in search of prospective locations for dramatic subjects. The belief held by American producers that production in Great Britain is handicapped by the climate and inferior lighting is entirely a myth, says "D. W. G."

It is not unlikely that a new edict about to be issued by the Railway Executive Committee, the joint board of control of British railroad companies, will give the kinema theater business a decided impetus at the expense of the legitimate theater. Touring theatrical companies after September will not be allowed to travel with scenery and effects and artists will be allowed to travel on Fridays only. No discrimination is made between the barnstorming fraternity and royal opera. While this may not cause any appreciable difference in London, its effect in the provinces can be imagined, for by far the majority of the companies on the road, whether revues, music-hall sketches, musical shows, or melodrama, deprived of their own special scenic effects, would be shorn of half their attractiveness. Sunday is the present general day for theatrical companies on tour to make the change over from one theater to another. In the height of the pantomime season close upon a thousand such changes are made, involving as many journeys from one town to another, very often long distances. The substitution of Friday for Sunday will do away with the Saturday matinee at most theaters, in addition to the loss of one business day. The proposed regulations are naturally meeting with strenuous opposition from the theatrical associations.

It is expected that the funds of the British American Overseas Ambulance will benefit considerably from a charity matinee at the West End Kinema Tuesday, Aug. 7. The kinema will be open all day free. Whether visitors will get out free is, of course, another matter.

The London Film Company has not been particularly active at its Twickenham studio since G. L. Tucker finished "The Manxman." Now, however, another W. W. Jacobs comedy is well under way, as that master of nautical satire and dialogue would say. The title is "The Persecution of Bob Pretty" and the length only one reel.

Additional regulations will shortly be drafted into operation governing the importation of films into France. Although a film dealer may procure a license from the War Department allowing him to export films to France, it will be necessary for the purchaser of the films to have an import license before they can be admitted into that country. Any American firm likely to be affected can obtain full information from the department of the Minister of Commerce, Paris.

UNFAIR COMPETITION SQUELCHED.

The William Abrahamson Theater Company of Duluth, Minn., haled the members of the Brunswick Theater Company of the same city into court the other day on the charge of unfair competitive methods in that the latter company placed misleading advertisements in the local newspapers. An injunction was asked and secured from a local justice which remedied the evil complained of. The Abrahamson company had advertised the picture entitled "The Slacker" for two weeks when the Brunswick company came out with large advertisements for the "The Man Who Was Afraid" in which the words "The Slacker" were most prominent. The court ruled that the Brunswick had no right to the use of the words "The Slacker."

Glacier National Park (Pathe).

BELONGING to the Pathe series, entitled "Our National Parks," this number does its delightful best to exploit for our benefit the beauties of Glacier National Park. While but half a reel is given over to scenes in this beautiful stretch of mountains and ice and snow, this half reel is tremendously convincing. Many of the scenes contained in the picture are in the vicinity of Triple Divide Mountain. Close-up views of the mountains give us an insight into what Nature does when she dresses them in snow. The last half of the reel is devoted to Japanese Gardens, which are presented in all the glory of color photography. Through this latter subject we get a thorough idea of the horticultural skill of the Japanese.

"The Snows of Many Years" (Educational).

Scenes photographed on and in the vicinity of Eliot Glacier give us an excellent idea of "The Snows of Many Years." There, as the fearless mountain climbers traverse the dangerous wastes of ice and snow which comprise the glacier, we are treated to close-up views which show us the layers of ice and snow representing passage of the years. Very fantastical, too, is this beautiful field of ice in the mountain tops, with its crevasses worn by mountain streams, and its grottos and queer-shaped spears of eternal ice. The picture is one of the Bruce series, but not one of recent release.

"In the Hanging Glacier Country" (Educational).

Isella Glacier and vicinity is the spot to which we owe the beauty of this picture, which shows us Railroad Creek, the Mary Green Cabin, and other interesting sights of mountain travel before we finally ascend with the cameraman and his party to where this great mass of ice which moves at the rate of about 400 feet per year still holds its equilibrium. One thousand feet below the glacier is Horton Lake, into which great pieces of the glacier are seen to drop in the months of August and September. This is an enjoyable scenic number which will appeal to the adventurously inclined.

"In Hong Kong" (Paramount-Holmes).

In one of his journeys in the Orient Burton Holmes visits the wonderful Chinese city of Hong Kong. Hong Kong, he explains to us, is one of the most important commercial ports of the world, and one of the most beautifully located, rising as it does from the water's edge and dominated by "The Peak," that lovely suburb in the clouds, its park and residential sections forming an abiding place for the vast European colony of Hong Kong. Hong Kong is an island, and the name of the actual city is Victoria, we are told; and we are given a glimpse of "The Peak" and of other interesting points about the city. A view of the port, and of the busy streets with its throngs of busy people are all interesting sights.

"Nature's Perfect Thread Spinner" (Edison).

One of the clearest illustrations of how the silk worm spins its 1,000 yards of beautiful silk thread per cocoon will be found in the Edison Conquest Program No. 6. In this illustration we are privileged to watch the spinner at close range enclosing itself in a dextrously-fashioned silken enclosure. The substance from which this cocoon is made comes from two glands in the mouth of the silk worm. We are also shown what appears to be an X-ray of the cocoon after the worm has spun itself in, and later we see a beautiful white moth emerge from the cocoon. This moth lays 200 eggs and then dies. The young silk worms hatching from the eggs and feeding on the leaves of the mulberry tree are also shown.

U. S. Government Weather Bureau (World-Selig).

The instruments that the Government uses in forecasting the weather are shown at the beginning of World-Selig Library No. 16. The barometer, the anemometer which measures the velocity of the wind, and weather vanes that record electrically are shown. The instruments are not photographed so as to be instructive. The views are as so many "stills," even though some of the instruments are in motion.

"Saving the Babies" (Universal).

In No. 37 of the Screen Magazine will be found some interesting views taken in one of the several hundred health stations maintained by the New York Department of Health. Here we learn that the pedigree of each baby is taken when it is first brought in. They are weighed and examined each time they are brought to the station, and their progress is carefully noted. Milk in proper ratio to the age and condition of the baby is given out each day. The picture contains some interesting and healthy looking specimens of babyhood as a result of careful feeding and proper care.

"Handling the Mail, No. 2" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In Reel Life No. 71 will be found the second instalment of "Handling the Mail." This time we are shown in detail just what happens to parcels which we have weighed, stamped, and handed in at the post office for safe transportation to their destinations. This also includes the customs department, where all foreign parcels are opened, the contents valued, and the packages resealed. Following this cards are sent to the owners of the parcels apprising them of their whereabouts and amount of duty due. The postal order and postal savings departments are also explained in detail.

"Making a Merchant Marine Officer" (Pathe-International).

The pictures contained in "The Making of a Marine Officer" were photographed aboard the training ship "Newport" and show the boys learning the art of seamanship. A few excellent scenes show them climbing up ratlines. The "man overboard" drill is also interesting.

"Canning Corn" (Universal).

At a time when the necessity for food conservation is so great, a public demonstration of even one method of accomplishing this is of great value. The Screen Magazine No. 37 contains such a demonstration, teaching the thousands of women who view this number how to can corn for use in the winter months. In the first place, according to the picture, the ears of corn are subjected to a blanching method, after which they are dipped in water at a temperature of 50 degrees. The corn is then cut from the cobs with a sharp knife and put at once in hot jars, after which a level teaspoonful of sugar or salt is added, and the jars filled with boiling water. The jars are then placed in a covered tin receptacle and cooked for three hours after the water begins to boil. The scenes of this picture are presented by courtesy of the United States Department of Agriculture.

"Tree Planting in Our National Forests" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Comparatively few in an audience know anything about the manner in which the regeneration of our national forests is conducted. This they can learn from a series of scenes on the subject included in Reel Life No. 72. Here we are shown the barren wastes of charred timber which result from the great forest fires that from time to time ravage the forest growth of many years. We learn that the pine cones are dislodged by careful hands from their hiding places under leaves and hollow logs and are broken up, then sifted through a sieve. In this way the seeds of the pine tree are obtained and are furthermore put through a machine for the removal of the chaff before planting them in shallow beds, which are then carefully covered by wire screens. When the plants are two inches high the screens are lifted, and some time later they are removed from these beds, their roots trimmed, and transplanted. When they are two years old they are ready for shipping. Views of planted territory with the young trees well under are also shown. This picture is unusually instructive and interesting.

Harvesting Wheat (World-Selig).

The magnitude of a 25,000-acre wheat field in North Dakota can be appreciated by seeing World Selig Library No. 16. A threshing machine that handles 2,000 bushels a day and tractors at different jobs are shown. The plowing of eight furrows at once is one of the views. The grain is followed to market as far as the grain elevators, the operation of which is shown. This is an instructive picture.

"Goat Ranching in America" (Paramount-Bray).

In the eighty-third release of the Pictograph we learn more than most of us ordinarily know about goats. We learn that great ranches of these animals are kept in America for the purpose of supplying the large amount of goat's milk which the demand requires. Goat milk, which is supposed to contain no tuberculosis germs, is fed to babies with good results. It is also used in the manufacture of certain kinds of cheese. We are shown a herd of goats grazing contentedly on sage brush, and are told that cattle would starve on pasturage on which goats thrive. It costs 5 cents a day to feed a goat which yields five quarts of milk per day.

"Art in Bookbinding" (Paramount-Bray).

In the eighty-third release of the Pictograph will be found some wonderfully interesting and well-illustrated details regarding the art of bookbinding in its finer forms. The renovation of old manuscripts calls for skilled workmanship, and we are allowed to gaze familiarly at the busy hands of selected workers as they remove the dust of ages, resew, recover and regild priceless volumes. The only person in the world who can bind a book entirely by herself is presented to us. This turns out to be a young lady of artistic bent, who has charge of one of the costliest private libraries in the world. One marvels at her skill, especially in the finer work of fixing, with tools for the purpose, designs of ancient pattern on volumes of fabulous value.

Another "Romeo and Juliet"

This Time the Souls of the Shakespearian Lovers Will Saunter Forth Enveloped in Animated Clay.

SOME of our readers no doubt will be familiar with the artistic animated clay work, or statuette cartoons, made by Helena Smith Dayton. These have followed different lines from scenes and individual figures in metropolitan life to the fads of the wealthy. Wonderfully clever have been the efforts of this artist to instil the soul of an idea into the lifeless substance of clay.

It is interesting to note that by way of novelty and also abeyance to the artistic spirit of the thing, the S. S. Film Company are producing a series of animated clay figure pictures, the first of which will be the Shakespearean play, "Romeo and Juliet," with Mrs. Dayton as the artist. We understand that the greatest possible pains have been taken to make a faithful version of the play. All the sets are specially built and are said to be as correct as the sets used in any stage production of the same play. The costuming of the clay figures will also be historically correct.

It is expected that the picture will be handled by the Educational Films Corporation of America, 729 7th Avenue.

A Patriotic Comedy

The Sydney Drews Concoct a Patriotic One-Reeler Which, Comic Though It Is, Hits the Nail of Common Sense Square on the Head.

Reviewed by Margaret I. Macdonald.

THE Patriot" is the title of a comedy which features the inimitable Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew, and which was written by them. The picture is, of course, in one reel, as are all of the Metro-Drew comedies, and has been made with an eye to fitting the present situation. The plot centers about the food conservation problem, making Mandy, the colored cook of Mr. and Mrs. Henry of the play, one of the chief exponents of this thing which has by force of circumstance become one of the cardinal virtues.

As the story of the picture runs, Mr. and Mrs. Henry, who are fond of good living, have become ardent patriots. In the first year of their married life they have had some fifty-seven cooks, all of whom were temperamental; but at last an angel has been sent them in the shape of Mandy, who caters religiously to their appetites. Mandy's first jolt from the patriotic side comes one day when she finds in the ice box the chicken, which she has carefully prepared and sat up four hours the night before to serve as a part of a late supper to her master and mistress on their return from a patriotic ball. At this point Mandy's education has begun, and at last, to the delight of Mr. and Mrs. Henry, Mandy not only has become a full-fledged food conservationist herself, but has educated all the cooks in the block, and has seen to it that Mrs. Henry wears the badge of honor also.

The picture will make an excellent comic number for a patriotic program, for, in spite of its comedy, it carries a real lesson.

Lesson in Advertising

Edison Conquest No. 6 Contains a Four-Reel Feature in Which Will Be Found a Wholesome Lesson in the Business of Honest Advertising.

THE Customary Two Weeks" is a four-reeler of merit appearing on No. 6 of the Edison Conquest Programs, which are being leased through the K-E-S-E. The excellent lesson in honest advertising methods which it contains prompts a special notice for the production as one based on fine wholesome principles, and one which is of special value for exhibition before boys and young men. The manly spirit of the hero as pitted against the baser principles of his opponent is an inspiration for good.

The production pictures a conflict between two young men which has arisen through the championing by our hero of the cause of an old employee of the firm. The affair leads indirectly to the hero of the story losing his position, after which he has a desperate time to gain another. Finally, when he has been given an opportunity with another big firm in the capacity of traveling salesman, he is sent, after having made good in a small way, to land a million-dollar order. His old enemy, representing the firm for which he had worked previously, becomes his competitor for the order, proceeds to knock the goods of every other firm in the market, and loses out thereby. The hero of the story wins by opposite legitimate methods of presenting his goods. A love thread running through the story adds to its interest.

E. W. Hammons Drives More Nails

For the Success of the Educational Films Corporation of America—Corrals Ditmar's Negatives and Lassoes the Latest in Cartoonists.

IT was necessary to chat a while with E. W. Hammons, vice president of the Educational Films Corporation of America, to get a look in at the real facts of the case; in other words, to find out just the latest triumph of this progressive organization. There were only a couple of choice bits at the time with other important matters in a state of crystallization, not yet to be spoken about.

We all know, of course, that the Raymond L. Ditmars series of animal pictures known as "The Living Book of Nature" have for more than a year been distributed exclusively by the Educational Films Corporation of America. Readers will be glad to learn that the contract of this corporation with Mr. Ditmars has been renewed for a period of five years. And in addition to this the control of the Ditmars negatives has been ceded to them for the same period with an increase in the number of prints to be supplied.

The Educational Films Corporation of America has also been quick to make negotiations with a couple of young cartoonists, B. E. and V. I. Whitman, an exhibition of whose work at the Rialto theater, New York City, a short time ago caused considerable furore. Cartoon subjects by these young artists will hereafter be affixed to certain educationals released by the Educational Films Corporation of America.

Merger of Viewpoints

Purpose of Conference to Be Held at Scudder School, at Which National Board of Review Will Listen to What Producers Have to Say.

THE Review Committee of the National Board is formulating plans for a series of round-table conferences in co-operation with the Scudder School, 72d street and Riverside Drive, New York. The purpose of the conferences will be to secure for the members of the National Board a clearer comprehension of the point of view of the makers of motion pictures. Some of the leading motion picture directors are expected to address the conferences, and it is hoped that a more complete understanding of their work by the National Board will result. Such conferences will also furnish an opportunity to demonstrate to the directors what, in the minds of the National Board, a "better film" consists of or does not consist of, as the case may be. It is hoped that the producing directors will come to see that the Better Films Movement is not a movement for educational pictures, but, on the contrary, one looking to the production of the highest types of film entertainments.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

An Exhibitor's Catechism.

SOMEONE on the staff of the Moving Picture Weekly, the Universal's house organ, has prepared a series of questions to be asked of himself by the exhibitor. They are worth reprinting in case you passed them over the first time. Here they are:

What causes the crowd to pass my theater up in favor of my opposition?
Am I showing the right kind of pictures?
Am I doing the right kind of advertising?
Am I fighting hard enough to get business?
What do I do to hold on to business when I do get it?
Are my business methods such as to win friends for me?
Have I been successful in making friends of my patrons?
Is my personality a liability or an asset?
Have I been sufficiently attentive to my customers?
What kind of employees are on my payroll?
Are they helping me, or are they hindering me in my effort to make my theater a paying investment?
Is my theater the kind of a place I would allow my own children to attend?
Does it present an inviting appearance, both inside and out?
Is the ventilation everything it should be?
Is it comfortable both winter and summer?
Is it kept in spotless condition?
Have I paid sufficient attention to the musical end of my shows? Or are my musicians the "don't-give-a-darn" variety who play ragtime stuff during intensely dramatic scenes, and "Hearts and Flowers" during comedy pictures?
What is the condition of the films I show?
Am I saving at the spigot and wasting at the bunghole by getting old stuff that costs me little—and that pleases my patrons about as much as it costs?
What have I done to make my theater one of the community's social centers?
Am I a member of the local merchants' organization?
Have I ever attempted to get the local merchants to co-operate with me for mutual benefit?
What have I done to get such special business as various social, fraternal and religious organizations could be made to yield?
Am I paying more for my pictures than the seating capacity of my house warrants?
Am I charging the proper admission price?
Is it too high? Too low?
Have such big special features that have cost me higher prices brought me as much business as regular program features bring?
Did they please my patrons as much?
What percentage of my trade comes from the immediate vicinity?
What percentage comes from outside the community?
What am I doing to attract the latter class?
To what extent is my opposition cutting into my trade?
Why should people who would find it more convenient to patronize me attend my opposition?
Are my patrons satisfied with the shows I am presenting?
Have I ever taken such steps as would enable me to know accurately my patrons' likes and dislikes?
Would it be worth my while to offer little prizes for suggestions that would help me make my theater more popular?
Do I keep a set of books, so that I may know at all times exactly where I stand?
Where do I stand?
Am I in the business best suited to my peculiar talents?
Would I do better in some other line?
What are the prevailing conditions in this community?
What is the outlook for the next year?
Is the community going back? Is it progressing?
Is the location of the house against me?
Is there any way in which the handicap of location can be overcome?
Are my cashier and ticket taker courteous and reliable?
Which pictures, according to my box office receipts, have brought me the most money?
Which brand yields the poorest receipts?
Which players, according to the same authority, are most popular with my patrons?
What am I doing to build up my matinees?
Am I exerting any effort to make Saturday mornings productive by presenting special children's performances?
Is my projection all that it should be?
Are my projection machines up to date?
Is my operator the right man for the job?
Is my screen suited to the peculiar requirements of my theater?
Which are my best days?
Which are my poorest days?
Why?
What can I do to build up my attendance on these days?
Have I given the business as much of my personal attention as it deserves?
Have my personal habits injured my theater to any extent?

How many of these questions can you honestly answer in a way that will be satisfactory to yourself? Of course if you can answer the first question by saying that you are really getting the opposition's business, then you do not have to worry, but if you feel that you are not getting all the available business, run down the list. Answer the questions intelligently. For example one asks if the big special features bring as much as a regular service. Don't merely look at your books and find that you took in an extra hundred or so on the day. Look back and forward. See if people held back for the feature. See if receipts increased or diminished following the big show. You cannot say that you made an extra hundred if you find that the big show killed your regular business two hundred dollars. In such a case you lost one hundred dollars instead of gaining that sum.

Look at the question of what business you are getting outside your territory. It is no great credit to you to bring in the patron from next door or three blocks down. Any dub should be able to do that. But can you make your house so pleasant that patrons seek your house in preference to that of your opposition? This does not necessarily mean a bigger house or even a better house. It does mean a better run house. It does mean that you can answer to your satisfaction questions about your help, your projection, your program and your advertising. It doesn't mean buying a few pots of artificial flowers or an electric fountain for the foyer. It does mean making the house cordial and restful. Have it smell clean and sweet, with the cleanliness of soap and water and not the sweetness of some powerful disinfectant masked by an artificial scent. Don't cover up your dirt. Sweep it out. Don't mask your vitiated air. Sweep it out. And along with it sweep out the discourteous usher or the grouchy doorkeeper.

And ponder long and seriously that question as to your personal habits. Do you smoke cigars—possibly bad ones—all over the house, either before or during the performance? Have you the common trick of grabbing people by the arm to shove them around instead of directing them with a gesture? We know of one house where the women patrons complain that the manager gets their light dresses dirty by grabbing their arms in the dark to lead them to the aisles. We have seen the handprints on white dress sleeves. The manager is merely eager to give the fullest service, but he grabs his patrons with his unwashed hands instead of putting in a couple of indirect lights to enable patrons to make their own progress to the aisles. Women cannot make a scene, but they can, and many of them do, avoid a repetition of the annoyance.

If you can answer all these questions to your own satisfaction and still are not making money, answer them to someone else and see if they are convinced. That may be the trouble. You are not trying to please yourself in the conduct of your house. You don't count. You are there to please your patrons. They count—even the smallest tot with the plugged nickel counts for more than your whims and fancies. Whoever wrote that article for the Universal seems to know the game. The result has been worth while.

Precisely.

We lift this from Paramount Progress because it is so close to the secret of success:

When you get right down to the beef and beans of life, it's the fellow that does a little hard work, a little hard thinking, a little planning, and carries it out that makes the big success in life.

Picture theaters are no longer automatic money-making machines. You must work for your money, and the harder you work, the more you can make, if you direct your efforts in the proper direction, but there must be direction. A dog chasing a cat is doing more than a puppy chasing its own tail, and advertising is precisely like the picture theater. It is not an automatic money-maker. It must be good advertising.

For Your Program.

We like this line from the Stillman program. It will serve to run on any news weekly.

If you've failed to read the newspapers—no matter. The latest news is here and you're right by while it happens.

It would be difficult to express it more neatly than that. Too many exhibitors fail to realize what a business-builder the news weekly can be made if they use a recent date. Thirty day stuff is no longer news: it's history.

An Avant Courier.

The scheme of using an advance card is not new to traveling men, but not many film men seem to use the scheme. Maurice M. Davis, of the General Film, of Canada, sends in the post card he sends in advance of his coming. It is well drawn, but his name appears only on the aeroplane and in letters only about 1/32 of an inch in height, which will confuse new prospects. It would be better to print the name larger and clearly and to use in place of the 'I will be dropping in your town very soon," "about" instead of "very soon." Then the approximate date can be filled in.

Letting Others Help.

A couple of years ago several exhibitors brought in dealers to work with them on a double page display for Shoes. The idea was widely exploited at that time, but so far but a single exhibitor, The Hip, Phoenix, Arizona, has seen that Skinner's Dress Suit gives as good a chance at the clothing dealers. The house got four tailors and a shoe store to come in with it on a double middle page in the daily paper. All of the clothing ads hinged on the luck the dress suit brought Skinner and the shoe man added that shoes are necessary to make a smart costume complete. Here was a chance thrown away, and yet there are scores of chances to do the merchants a good turn while helping them to help you advertise your attraction. Trade advertising that is coupled with amusement advertising always pulls better, and here was a fine chance for anyone—and only one man in Arizona seems to have seen that opportunity. This cut can do little more than give a general idea, but paste it above your desk and watch for the next chance if you have already booked with Skinner.

Brief but Efficient.

The Circle, Washington, D. C., uses a small four pager, the pages three by six inches, but they make good use of this rather limited space and do just as much as they could on a five by seven. They use the same copy but hold down the type sizes, getting the same relative display. This is possible because they print in a shop provided with display faces in the smaller sizes. In the latest example a couple of the compartments are a bit crowded, but the general effect is good and the program is efficient. The back page is held for house talk. The entire page is not filled, but runs about one-half of the space. This gives the patron the suggestion that he is not asked to read too much, and on a small program the device is good. On a larger size it is better to set double column and fill the page, breaking up the paragraphs, but for a small space, the single column and the partly filled page form a better combination. They handle the matter of varying prices very nicely. Perhaps this clip will help others:

> It has ever been our slogan to show a Program that was "Consistently good," and with this object in view we have spared neither trouble nor expense to secure the best obtainable pictures. Our regular price of admission is 10c., but occasionally, on stated evenings, the price of admission to the CIRCLE will be 15c. This increase in the price of admission when BIG PICTURES or POPULAR STARS are shown is not actuated by any desire on our part to take advantage of your eagerness to see the best pictures. It is dictated by necessity. The explanation of this necessity lies in the fact that film actors and actresses who become popular favorites realize their drawing power and demand fabulous salaries. In turn film producers demand high rental for the films and the exhibitor is thus constrained to increase the price of admission.

The best way to explain the increased price is to tell the truth. It's all right to say that this or that feature is so much bigger than the average that it is worth more, but when you say that you must charge more because there is an increase all along the line, starting with the star's salary, then you have a concrete argument that you can prove. People cannot see why they should pay more merely because a picture is better. They can understand the higher admission if they are told the real reason.

For Pickers.

We forget just where this clip from the program of the Garfield theater, Chicago, originally appeared, but it seems to have been lifted from a recent periodical. The management picked up or adapted the one paragraph that gives the essence of the idea. Constructive criticism—not merely complaint—is something that every manager should welcome and appreciate. Run this in your program or on your screen. You'll find out things about your own house that will surprise you:

DON'T GROWL—KICK!

> Talk with anybody in the management of an institution that serves the public and you will find the average American will growl, but he seldom complains. When something is wrong he will argue the matter with a ticket-seller, usher or doorman. They have no authority to set things right. The public will not go to the trouble of sending an orderly complaint to the management. An intelligent complaint will often clear up difficulties for you. You must know how to gather yourself for a kick and how to land it in the right place.

You can find a lot of good program material in magazines and newspapers if you'll only look for the stuff. This paragraph had nothing to do with picture theaters, but deals merely with the value of the kick properly landed instead of shot at random, but it suits no business more accurately than the business of selling entertainment, for here the merchant of pleasure must give satisfaction from every angle to draw return business, and it is only the steady patronage that counts. Encourage suggestion, but do not seek to create kickers. Ask them to help you run your house; not to run it for you.

Poor Counting.

The Cozy, Schenectady, N. Y., remarks "5,000 feet of film, with 12 pictures to the foot, means 60,000 pictures that will please the eye," etc. They must be getting film that has gone through one of those operating "booths" in the care of one of those careless operators that Brother Richardson has been scolding. But we are inclined to think that so many persons now know that there are sixteen frames to the foot that they will think the management a bit slow. It is just a slip of the pen, but it is apt to have a bad effect. The general program is well done, but some little points might be improved. There is a cut of Baby Osborne on the front page, but no line to connect with a picture in which she appears, advertised on the third page. Most persons can figure it out, but there should have been a caption line to connect the portrait with the appearance of the star. An oddity is a credit line at the bottom of the last page announcing "This program is written by J. P. Arthur, 24 Cedar St." The union label and office imprint and address follow. Mr. Arthur writes well, but he does not always show good judgment in placing his material in the form. An announcement of a change of service is run casually on the third page instead of being featured on the front as a matter of real importance. Generally speaking, the program is well done.

Darn that Comp!

The festive compositor and the foolish proofreader have been at it again. Charles Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, booked House Peters and Kathlyn Williams in "The Highway of Hope" and ran a strip across the top of the front page, above the heading, announcing "Two real stars in a real play." And the printer got it "two rear stars." They treated more respectfully Mr. Decker's

DON'T STAY HOME ON ACCOUNT OF
THE HEAT

> Do just the opposite—go to the Majestic to keep cool.
> Safeguard your health.
> Breathe pure air.

There follows an explanation of the ventilation system winding up with "Pure air is just as essential as pure food to keep you in good health." We like that last. It is forceful and it's true.

Hardwick Hustle.

Hardwick Brothers, of Clovis, N. M., have another new one. It is a very simple idea—once you think of it. This is it:

"WITHIN THE LAW"
PERSONALLY GUARANTEED

BRING THIS CARD WHEN YOU BUY YOUR TICKET

We have every confidence that "Within the Law" will meet with your approval. When you purchase your ticket, this card will be stamped. After seeing "Within the Law" and you do not think that it is worth the money, tell us why on the back of this card, mail it to Hardwick Bros., and we will refund the difference between the price of the ticket you purchased and a fifteen cent ticket. No refund will be made unless card is in by the 23d. This is our "personal guarantee" of absolute satisfaction.

Name..... Address.....

You must write your reasons on back of this card.

The way it works is very simple. The cards are sent to out-of-town patrons with a form letter that runs in part:

Mr.....,

Texico, New Mexico.

"PERSONALLY GUARANTEED" entertainment.

Dear Sir:

They tell us about page advertisements in the magazines that cost five thousand dollars for a single inseration, so that we may understand that this is the day of worth-while advertising. It is—this letter represents something over thirty thousand dollars of our money.

In other words, we are putting everything back of the guarantee which we give you on "PERSONALLY GUARANTEED" entertainment. If this entertainment does not make good, we will have to close up, lose our property, our business, our everything.

So you may be sure that we are not offering "PERSONALLY GUARANTEED" entertainment without first making sure that it is of the highest quality. You may be sure also that when you spend your money for "PERSONALLY GUARANTEED" entertainment you will get full value for every cent, regardless of the price.

The first of these "PERSONALLY GUARANTEED" entertainments is "WITHIN THE LAW." It is a Vitagraph production in nine parts and features the greatest combination of stars before the public today. They are ALICE JOYCE and HARRY MOREY, whom you recently saw in "WOMANHOOD." But "WITHIN THE LAW" is better than "WOMANHOOD," being the successful photodramatization of the greatest success that Broadway has ever known. It ran for sixteen months in one theater in New York, and nine road companies played to over two and a half million dollars' receipts in the U. S. and Canada alone. These are only proofs of the high quality of the production.

This personal guarantee we look upon as a service to you. When an attraction is so advertised you know that you are going to get full value for your amusement money, for we, HARDWICK BROS., theater managers, within your easy reach, stand back of "PERSONALLY GUARANTEED" entertainments. If they are not right you have only to call us to account. It's our thirty thousand that protects you, because it's right here on Main Street, day and night.

Come and see "WITHIN THE LAW." Look over the first of these personally guaranteed entertainments, the entertainment that protects you with our dollars and our word. You will find that our guarantee has not been misplaced.

There was about half a page additional about the attraction and the house. About 250 of these letters were sent out on house letter heads. For the local campaign eight young women, who were intelligent and good talkers, were schooled in a selling talk. The reviews from all the trade papers were read to them and they were provided with a selling talk, running about 500 words, which they were to translate into their own language. The city was divided into districts, and one girl was assigned each district. She called upon every family and left a card at each home. The scheme worked so well that it will be repeated with other big attractions. The value of the personal appeal cannot be underestimated, and while it costs money it is worth more than the cost, and it should be remembered that the cost will cover much more than the original production. It lasts and brings in money long after the particular film boomed has passed down the line.

The Hardwicks literally smeared the newspapers. In one issue there were 65 column inches of display advertising in four different spaces, more than a column reader with a double column cut, and twelve readers. There was one or more mentions of the play on seven out of the eight pages of one issue of the local paper in addition to other matter about the house. As preparation about twenty-four different slides were used for the screen, and the slides were the sort with a punch, not the "greatest ever" type, but like this:

If you want to stop the girls from stealing, give them a chance. No honest girl can live decently on six dollars a week, and buy food and clothes and pay room rent and carfare. ALICE JOYCE says

"WITHIN THE LAW."

SEE IT! ! !

The Hardwick Brothers demonstrate what others know: that you can pay a rental price for a feature and get your money back, or you can add advertising to rental and make much more money. But advertising is something more than space in a newspaper. It is hammering all along the line and in every way possible.

Lobby Specials.

The Triangle Magazine has some good stuff on lobby work, dealing mostly with the painted signs used in lobbies. Their story is too long to be used in full, but these paragraphs are worth while pasting up for general reference:

As to actual colors used on the signs, much of that may be left to the painter, although one has to be careful that his combinations are not too shrieking or too "futuristic" for the good of the institution in which they are to be used. The same caution may be expressed with regard to the type of letter used and the "decorations" employed to fill in odd corners. The same style of letter should generally be used throughout any one sign, and the ornaments should be in keeping with the subject and the general display. It is also wise to avoid the same kind of letter that nearly everyone else is employing. However, that does not mean trying to create a peculiar form of type for use in the theater alone. It is virtually impossible to create a new kind of letter to be used in brush work that will not be so fantastic that it will be hideous. There is nothing smart or clever in ugliness.

Triangle on several occasions has detailed a scientific series of experiments onec carried on to determine the degree of legibility in colored advertisements of various combinations. It was there declared that the most legible (if not the most effective) combination is black on yellow. Then follow green on white; blue on white; white on blue; black on white; yellow on black; white on red; white on green; white on black; red on yellow; green on red and red on green, the degrees of legibility following in the order named. One unusual combination that was lately put into effective use at a New York theater, for its lobby signs, is blue on orange. By trying out combinations the theater manager will find one that will be distinctive for his purposes and also pleasing to the eye. Pleasing the eye is important. One may attract attention with the shriek of a steam whistle, but it will not necessarily please the public. Red and black letters on a white ground is a pleasing combination, but it is not the only one.

Notice how low down white on black is. Also the famous red on yellow, once supposed to be the last word in poster work.

Like Suggestions.

J. E. Cooney, publicity man of the Winchester Avenue theater, New Haven, Conn., sends in some house programs and asks for comment.

The programs are the familiar five by seven size. Each carries a front page portrait cut linked to the showing of that star during the week by some proper comment as "Here Thursday," "In a beautiful drama of the Orient on Wednesday," and similar lines. Inside day and date is indented to the left of the text in a large type and the back is reserved for chatter. Enough outside comment is mixed with the remarks on the current films to make it all read and readable. The front carries the house information as to times of showing and admission prices. There is little comment to be offered, for Mr. Cooney seems to have followed good examples, but it might help to discard the house advertisement on the back and make a page of two column chat running down to the underline at the bottom and referring in some measure to that underline. This would give the opportunity for sufficient type to create a more intimate feeling between the editor and the readers, which, in turn, would give force to what the editor has to say. Win the reader's confidence with friendly chat, hold it by never betraying confidence, and that back page could be made to work harder than the other three pages put together, but the other three pages are needed for a backing.

Bettered.

Film Forecast, the Pittsburgh organ of Rowland and Clark, has come out in a new dress and looks much better, for the imprint is cleaner and the make-up improved slightly. One departure worth while is a page editorial on one of the coming plays. This is signed by the editor and its authoritative form of statement impresses the reader with the merits of the film. The trade advertising is still a bit too obtrusive, giving a choppy make-up, but trade advertising is what pays the freight

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Merwin on Scripts.

BANNISTER MERWIN writes from his home on the Thames: I uring some spare hours the other day I went through your last edition of Technique of the Photoplay more carefully than I have yet had opportunity. My point of view of your point of view holds certain considerations which I should like to talk over with you at some length if there were opportunity. My points are not opposed to yours, but tangential. For example, your chapter on continuity.

Strong insistence upon complete continuity means dullness. Now the question how far we are to go with our approximate continuity can only be solved by more or less abitrary conventions. In so far as we become slaves to those conventions we again tend to dullness. Don't you suspect, as I do, that we make a shibboleth of continuity? Personally I believe that we should aim to make every scene that is to fill a time gap a really significant scene. If it is necessary to show a man leaving a house, construct the story in such a way that something rather important happens as he leaves the house. But if such a scene is not practicable surely we should get our continuity matter, as such, down to the narrowest margin compatible with the prevention of a jarring and confusing break. Suppose that Jones is talking with Brown in one scene and in the next scene Jones is talking with Smith in a room at the other end of town. Surely it is enough if we give the conclusion of the first scene—show Jones winding up his business with Brown, then leaving, and give Brown five seconds alone with some significant bit of action; then go to Smith's office, show Smith alone for a few seconds and then Jones entering. It all depends upon the interest of what you make Brown and Smith do in the brief periods when they are alone in their respective offices. The point to remember is, continuity is not an attempt to approximate in one's play the actual time in which all the movements of the characters would take in real life, but it is an endeavor to prevent the spectator from suffering mental confusion. If we satisfy this point we do all that we should do.

My present notion of the best construction for long feature stories follows somewhat the lines of the stage play. Teh line of climactic development should be a series of ascending waves. After each crisis or climax there should be a slight lull. And the first few hundred feet, like the first ten minutes of a play, should be devoted to getting your audience acquainted with your characters and their relationships. To place a very important action in the first few hundred feet before the audience knows who the characters are or what they are to one another tends to create confusion. People will later say, "Oh, was he the one who did that?" Of course the characters must do things in these first few hundred feet, but they should be things that express their characters interestingly rather than things that have important significance in the plot development. Perhaps I put the point a little too strongly, for there are always exceptions, but you will know what I mean.

The thing is to look at one's own work from the viewpoint of the audience, and continually ask one's self such questions as, "Is it clear? Can I follow it without confusion of mind? Does it constantly keep my interest stimulated?"

Now the question of breaking one's scenes with close-ups and varied shots from different angles. Of course, we all do this in preparing our scripts. But lately I have wondered whether it would not be better to leave the breaking up of the scene to the producer, except in very obvious cases. You see, I am now speaking as a producer as well as a writer. The value of the close-up almost always is governed in practice by floor conditions. I mean by this several things. For one thing, if the cast is not the ideal cast you have had in mind when writing the play the character you have set down for a close-up may not be able to express what it is essential to express in that particular close-up. The producer must then find some other means of punctuating the situation. For another thing, no producer is likely to build a set and handle his people in it in exactly the way you have conceived. For that matter no two producers are likely to handle the set and the characters in the same way. It follows that very often the producer can secure a natural close-up in the course of the action where you have called for a special close-up scene. And on the other hand the producer may find that he needs a special close-up scene at a point where your conception of the movements of the characters has not made it appear necessary. Anyhow, the close-up is an interpretation. If, as I hold, the producer is an interpreter, would it not be better to leave this matter of close-ups to him, and write your scene straight, with emphasis on the points that should be brought out most strongly? I don't say that this surmise is right; I merely am wondering. In any event we do not want to see the close-up overdone. We don't want too much of the Griffith staccato. It leads to what a certain friend of mine once called Tom Lawson's method of muck-raking—"The method of universal emphasis."

There is another belief that has become strong in me during the last year or two. It is that just as a knowledge of actual stage conditions is almost essential to the writer of plays for the stage so a knowledge of actual studio conditions is almost essential to the writer of photoplays. The writer should learn not in the picture house, where he is bound to be more or less under the illusion, but on the studio floor. I don't mean that he cannot get a start without this knowledge. But he cannot reach his full development until he knows the studio. This is a hard saying, but I believe that this is true.

I append a sheet of manuscript to show you a form I have been using lately in my work. It seems to work well, and I find it easy to write. These are action scenes and not acting scenes.

Scene 30.—A road close to the cliffs, Night.

Action.—Walters, Aymond, and Hand drive on in the wagon. They stop, and Hand gets down, taking a lantern (a powerful electric hand-lantern) from the wagon. He walks toward the cliff.

Scene 30A.—On the cliff. Night.

Action.—Hand moves toward the edge of the cliff from behind the camera. He stands holding the darkened lantern and looking out to sea.

Scene 30B.—A view out to sea (night). Shoot downward at first, then pan slowly upward until the horizon is included. Then hold.

Scene 31.—At sea. Night.

Action.—A German submarine lies almost awash, with a small boat ready to put off from it. Commander, officer, and men are on the upper works. The commander is looking toward shore through binoculars.

Back to Scene 30A.—Hand signals with his lantern.

Scene 30D.—A view out to sea (night). Shoot downward at first, then pan up to the horizon, as in Scene 30B. Three times a light appears and disappears on or near the horizon.

(Note: You can get this effect of the appearing light in one of two ways. [1] Double exposure—studio—black cloth with hole in it through which light appears. [2] When you get to your hold of the horizon you have virtually a still. By putting a black dot on your still near the horizon line and duping your still you can get the effect.)

Back to Scene 30A.—Hand turns back toward the wagon.

Back to Scene 30.—Hand rejoins Walters and Aymond at the wagon They begin to take the tins of oil from the wagon and carry them down the path to the beach.

We think that Mr. Merwin takes more seriously than we intended certain general rules, one of which was that to see the same man in two rooms without leaving the house suggested that he was in the same house. This did not mean that he was actually to be bundled out of doors to get him to the next house. We do believe, however, that the ten feet for closing and opening might better be a six or eight foot break scene. We have italicized Mr. Merwin's definition of continuity, since it is better than our own. If you have a copy of technique paste it in.

Another point is that we suggested that some important action should open the picture, but not something setting the key too high. Most assuredly there should follow the introductory phases, but we have too many pictures like that recently described by William Lord Wright in Selig's Paste Pot and Shears, in which the seven-part story would have been better "had not the first five reels been used to introduce the story."

Revision.

The only revision bureau that can help you to success is the studio continuity writer. If your idea is worth changing he will change it for you, and he'll probably change it even though it may not need it.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Oil.

The receipt of a new lot of oil from a Pennsylvania company, with request that I test it, and recommend if found good, recalls to me the fact that it is time I gave you all another talking to about lubrication. The projection machines in use in this country alone are worth something more than $6,000,000, and I think there is no doubt but that these machines and their vital parts would last one-third longer if they received proper lubrication, or rather if they were lubricated with oil in every way best suited to the work. If this is true, then it will be seen, merely by glancing at the machine value, the waste through inefficient oil is something pretty huge. At least, it is well deserving the careful consideration of operators. It is, of course, not to be expected that the average operator can or will conduct a series of elaborate tests in order to determine the relative efficiency of different oils. The great majority of the men could not do this, and do it intelligently, if they would. How, then, are they to secure oil which they can feel satisfied will give satisfactory service?

The matter is quite simple. In the first place we may promptly discard all drug store oils. They are made to sell, and you can have no possible way of knowing what they are, except that they vary from poor to very poor. They are expensive in first cost, and very, very expensive in damage to machinery. Three in One oil, for instance, is advertised to oil fine rifles, typewriters and to polish furniture with. Is it likely to be efficient to oil a machine which sees heavy service? Ask yourself that question! Is not the reply pretty obvious? Do we polish furniture with an oil having high lubricating qualities?

Having rejected the drug store as a possible source of supply, we may then consider other possible oils, one of which is that sold by the manufacturer of projection machines. Such oil may be relied upon as having at least fair lubricating properties. It may be accepted as suited at least fairly well to the work, with the notation that the same oil is sold for use in Edmonton, Alberta, as is sold for use in Miami, Florida. The other, and really best, supply source is to purchase oil from the local light and power company, securing the same oil they use for their generators. As I have time and again pointed out to you, the light and power company simply must have good oil for its generators. It must be an oil light enough to not clog the oil rings when the generator is shut down in cold weather, and must have high lubricating qualities, else the generator bearings will very soon begin to buck. You will usually be able to get this oil at a very reasonable price, probably very much less than one-half of what you pay for the drug store variety, and it will, if used intelligently, last very much longer—also your machines will last very much longer. In closing, let me again reiterate one of my many-times repeated statements, viz.: never use but one drop of oil on a moving picture machine bearing. An added drop does no good, and does do much harm, for an oil soaked machine means oil smeared films, and films are worth approximately $125 per reel, which valuable property is intrusted to your care under the presumption that you are an operator, not a sloppy slob—that you know your business and, knowing it, attend to it intelligently and well.

Interesting Installation.

The editor has been informed that Operator F. H. Avery, Home theater, Portage, Wisconsin, is a reg'lar feller, and an operator of the high-voltage type. As I understand the matter, he has an installation containing many inventions of his own, and that it is most complete. Have written Brother Avery and asked him to contribute description for the department. Will await his reply with interest.

Floor Paint Wanted.

Frank Gwinn (or at least Gwinn is what it seems to be), Shreveport, Louisiana, desires information with regard to a floor paint, as follows:

> This is the first time I have attempted to break into the Projection Department, though I have read it for the past three years, and get from it much benefit and enjoyment. And now I have an axe to grind myself. My operating room is floored with asbestos, which same is soft and spongy. What can I paint it with to get a good, hard surface? Please advise through the department. I carry a card in the Shreveport local No. 222, I. A.

Um, well, I'm not at all certain you haven't got me sticked. I really don't know whether a thin Portland cement paste, mixed half fine, sharp sand and half cement, would do the trick or not, but I think not. I believe the best thing to do would be to run in an inch and one-half of cement finish. It does seem to me there was something published about just such a paint as this a long time ago, but I cannot remember what it was, nor can I seem to find any record of it. If any brother can offer anything on this subject, let him get out his pencil and paper and be heard.

Later: I have been thinking this matter over. Here is a mess I saw used for a somewhat similar purpose once upon a time. It worked all right, and maybe it would do the trick for Shreveport. I dunno. Might try it anyhow—just a little at first, to see how it comes out. Asphaltum varnish and shellac, mixed equal quantities, the shellac to be tolerably thin before mixing with the asphaltum. Having thoroughly mixed the two, thin down with benzine until it is quite thin. Apply plenty of it, and be sure no matches are lighted in the room, and that the arc is not struck for at least half an hour after the job is complete. By that time all fumes will have evaporated. I do not say this will work, but I am inclined to think it will. Undoubtedly shellac alone would do the trick, but it would be too expensive.

Wants to Be Correct.

Edwin L. Benton, LaCrosse, Wisconsin, sends in newspaper clipping concerning our address to the men of LaCrosse last July, and asks:

> In what issue of the World did that table you referred to in your address appear, and can I obtain a copy? Am interested in cutting down my shutter, and want to know my lens system is right before I start.

It was not a "table," Brother Benton, but a chart. It appeared in March 17 issue, this year. You may obtain copy by remitting fifteen cents, stamps, to the Moving Picture World, Box 226, Madison Square Station, New York City. You are quite right in wanting to be sure you are right before proceeding. Study your lens system closely. Get you a Handbook, unless you already have one, and study it closely. Take time to do a little experimenting on your own hook. It will prove to be interesting, and the more knowledge you acquire the better operator you will be.

Non-Flam Film.

The Stout Machine Company, Rockford, Illinois, manufacturers of the Portoscope projector, desire information concerning non-inflammable film. They write:

> We have under way negotiations which will call for the use of a great deal of non-flam film, and are trying to gather information concerning same. The following is what we would like to know: Names of manufacturers of non-flam film stock, both in this country and abroad. Which are the ones that are most transparent, flexible and most likely to give best satisfaction, all things considered? Do you know of any producers of pictures intended primarily for use in churches and schools which are printed on non-flam stock? We are dealing with an institution which will have their own pictures taken and printed on non-flam stock, but will want to use other suitable pictures, also printed on non-flam film.

If you are dealing with a company which will produce pictures on non-flam film we would like to have particulars ourselves. So far as myself, or others in position to know are aware, there is no available non-flam film stock, in any quantity at least, except some the Pathe company holds for its own use, which same is not for sale. So far as is known no non-flam film stock is being made. It is, to all intents and purposes, a non-existent material. You may have this statement verified by addressing the Eastman Company, Rochester, N. Y., or the Pathe Exchange, J. A. Berst, General Manager, 25 West 45th street, New York City.

What Twelve Degrees Drop in Projection Means.

Simon Arkin, New York City, contributes the following:

Having had my attention drawn, by an article in the projection department, to the fact that the maximum allowable pitch in projection adopted by the Society of Projection Engineers and expressed in degrees (twelve degrees being the maximum adopted), will not be understood by the moving picture industry, I have drawn a sketch for your benefit.

Looking at the drawing you will see that the standard, as adopted, will mean an allowable drop of 21.256 feet, or approximately 21 feet and 3 inches, or 255 inches, in 100 feet of distance. For each ten feet of throw the 12 degree drop means 2.1256 feet, or 25.5 inches. Expressed another way, the maximum drop in projection must not exceed 21.256 per cent. of the throw.

Friend Arkin, who is a consulting engineer, did not quite understand me. I did not mean that we could not figure out what twelve degrees drop stood for in inches, but that if it had been expressed in inches per foot in the first place, a lot of unnecessary trouble would have been avoided; moreover, it is not every operator or manager who could figure the thing out. The idea I sought to convey to my esteemed colleagues in the Society was that it would be well to avoid unnecessary little-understood expressions and make things perfectly plain. But we are nevertheless indebted to Arkin for the sketch and explanation. It has at least saved this editor the labor of figuring the thing out for himself, as he had intended to do for the benefit of all.

Wants More Light.

C. Elmer Dietrich, Tunkhannock, Pennsylvania, seeks the following information:

We are not getting enough light. We are about to install two new Simplex projectors with the same rheostats we are now using, and are afraid the light will be the same. We are now using two No. 6 Power's, projecting a 15 foot picture at 90 feet current 133 cycle, 110 volt. The rheostat delivers 45 amperes. The current will be changed to 60 cycle in about fourteen months, and I don't wish to invest in any apparatus which will be useless after the change is made. Kindly advise me what we can do to get a better light. Using ⅝ cored National carbons.

Assuming that it is possible to, and that you do line up the optical systems of your Simplex, including revolving shutter, the same as the Power's, the mere changing from Power's to Simplex will have no effect on your screen brilliancy. The advice I would give you would depend on things you have not set forth. If you are getting current on what is known at a "flat rate," then all that is necessary is to hitch a twenty five ampere, 110 volt rheostat in multiple with the 45 ampere one you are now using. This will only involve the purchase of two 25 ampere, 110 volt rheostats, which won't be a very serious matter, and will give you almost anything you want, up to sixty, or maybe sixty five amperes —you must understand that the average rheostat does not really deliver its rated capacity after it has been in use a short while.

On the other hand, if you are on meter rate, and the rate is high, it is quite another matter. In that event it would be expensive to use current through rheostats, and the higher the amperage the greater the waste—for you must understand that, when using 110 volt alternating current through resistance, much more than half the power is wasted, and all the waste registers on your meter. Using 60 amperes it would stack up something like this: wasted in the resistance, about 4,000 watts; utilized in the form of light at the arc, about 2,600 watts. And this would be pretty expensive. Suppose you pay six cents per K. W. hour, and run an average of seven hours per day. You would be wasting about (4x6)x7=$1.68 per day in the resistances and that multiplied by 425 days (one year and two months) means something like—umph, well, figure it out for yourself, substituting the actual hours per day you run, the number of days per year you run and the actual rate you pay per K. W. hour.

There are several things you may do. First you may install a semi-reflective (metallic surface) screen, if you have not one already. Second, you may decrease the size of your picture, which will increase its brilliancy, since it will have the effect of concentrating the light upon a smaller surface. You now have about 170 square feet of screen to cover with picture. With a twelve foot picture this would be reduced to 108 square feet, which would mean that your available light would be covering 62 square feet less surface, with corresponding gain in brilliancy, except that there will be some added loss between aperture and lens over what there is now, though not nearly enough to counterbalance the gain at the screen. In fact, by getting the new objective (you would require one to change your picture size) with proper opening and carefully matching the optical system, including revolving shutter, to the local conditions, you might have no added loss at all between aperture and lens.

Third, you could get a sixty or seventy ampere A. C. economizer (low voltage transformer) and run both machines off it, using one of your rheostats to warm up the carbons with, making the connection as illustrated in figure 100, page 251 of the handbook. It it quite possible you might arrange with the United Theatre Equipment Corporation or Mr. Lewis M. Swaab (address will be found in their advertisements on another page) to purchase an economizer, allowing you a very substantial sum for it in exchange for sixty cycle economizers or a motor generator set (which latter is what you should have) later on, when the change in the current cycle is finally made. The use of A C for projection is out of date. In order to get anything like equal brilliancy you must use almost double the amperage necessary with D C. Get a motor generator set after the change is made, is my advice. It is even possible Swaab or the United might sell you a motor generator set with a 133 cycle motor, under agreement to exchange the motor for a 60 cycle one later at a reasonable, agred-upon-at-the-time-the-bargain-is-made figure for the exchange, but this agreement should be in writing.

In Bad Condition.

Ohio sends us some samples of film faults he finds in his service and says:

Am running two Power 6-A projectors and thus far have obtained pretty good results on the screen. Have your handbook, second edition, and it helps a whole lot. Attached you will find a few samples of what I cut out of an "inspected" Universal film. This was a particularly bad example, in that whereas the first hundred feet was right side to, the rest of the reel was wrong side to. Our service comes from the Victor Film Service, Cleveland, Ohio.

No exchange manager who has any right conception of what is due his customers, of what is due the film producer, or what is due the industry itself, or who cares for the safety of theatre patrons, would send out films in such wretched condition as is evidenced by the samples sent in by Ohio. My compliments to the mismanager of the Cleveland Victor Film Service. To say there was not time to inspect the film is no excuse. There was no 'Film not inspected—operator inspect and send bill for labor to exchange' slip in the shipment.

To Renew Our Friendship.

Daniel Constantino, Easton, Pennsylvania, writes as follows:

Just a few lines to renew our friendship. We last met on the night you addressed the managers and operators of Easton last fall. I was then assistant to Earl Roberts, but since then have become chief operator at the Strand. Have two Power 6As, moter driven. The operating room is just about ample size for the two machines. Am projecting a picture a trifle wider than sixteen feet, at 82 foot throw, with a five and one half foot drop in the projection. Use meniscus bi-convex condensers. Am a member of local union 203, I. A.

All of which requires no comment, except to say I am glad to hear you are getting ahead. I remember the Easton men well, and enjoyed my visit with them. Maybe I'll drop in again some of these days when you're not looking for me, so keep your eye on the screen, and don't get caught with a fault thereon.

For the Hot Days.

Here is a scheme for hot days. I think it requires no special comment other than to say that the fan wings should not be made any larger than the proportion shown. Strikes me, too, they would be more effective if placed on the other side of the shutter. They will not add enough extra strain to the gears to amount to anything.

Unnecessary Fighting.

From Edward J. Cooper, manager, Phoenix, Arizona, comes a letter, which I only quote in part, because its full publication would, I think, serve no good purpose, and might stir up additional bitterness and ill feeling. I qoote the letter, in part, because I wish to use it to point a moral for the benefit of others. Friend Cooper says:

> Noticed your remarks, July Fourth issue, concerning the trip you did not make through our city, and wish to throw a little light on conditions as they existed in Phoenix at that time, and do now exist. Had I personally known it was possible to have you include Phoenix, I would have gotten busy with the exhibitors, and have insisted that you include the capital city of Arizona, for all exhibitors here are live wires. So far as the union was concerned, however, under the conditions existing, it would have been impractical for it to invite you, without the assistance of the exhibitors. Along about the first of the year everything in Phoenix was union, and we were getting along very well. About that time the Columbia was contracted to play "Intolerance," and right there the union pulled a foolish play which resulted in every house in the city, except one, a "girl show," employing non-union operators (Cooper says "go open shop," but I think he means just what I have said, and that it included the stage hands, too. Open shop really, at least in a case of this kind, means non-union.—Ed.). The stage hands made an unnecessary demand, which cost the Columbia a lot of money which literally meant the entire profit on the big picture. This deal was pulled after the theater was packed to the doors, although it was understood there would be two weeks' notice of any change in the then existing conditions. Of course, there was nothing to do but concede the point under the conditions, or else dismiss the audience. So Mr. Mauk gave in, but next day there was a hurried meeting of exhibitors and every house except the one spoken of went non-union. * * * I am not writing this from a prejudiced viewpoint, because this thing took place before I took the management of the Columbia. * * * The union now feels that it made a mistake and has been back many times, trying to fix things up. At present there are but few of its members left in the city.
> The Phoenix Amusement Company is getting along very well. it has, as you will see by the letterhead, added two more houses to the circuit, and is now negotiating for two more, which will make it one of the largest circuits in the entire West. I followed your trip throughout, and you must have enjoyed it. If you ever start this way again without letting us know your route, and including Phoenix therein, we will boycott the World, which, by the way, has by far the largest circulation in this territory.

All right, Neighbor Cooper, next time Phoenix will be graced with my presence for one day. I've been there twice already, before the days of moving pictures. It's a great old place alright, and one where one never has to dread death by freezing.

And now let us consider the Phoenix mix-up. I have had to change Cooper's lines considerable, but think I have his meaning clear. If he has been made to say anything he did not really say, that is my fault, for I have misunderstood.

Now, I know nothing whatever about the real merits of this case, because I do not know what demands the men made. Perhaps the demands were, as Cooper says, unreasonable. Perhaps, also, they were not, when all things are considered. But one thing seems certain, viz.: the Phoenix union committed an unpardonable blunder in the method of approach, always supposing Friend Cooper to have set the facts forth as they are, and we have no reason to suppose he has not. The only possible excuse for such a method (making a demand without notice, where it was understood two weeks' notice would be given) would be a case where something in the proposed presentation of the play violated international I. A. laws, and even that would not, under any ordinary conditions, justify a union in pulling, or threatening to pull its men after the audience is assembled. Mind you, it is no pleasant thing for me to take up a matter of this kind in this way. Nor am I necessarily condemning the Arizona local. I would have to know ALL the circumstances before I could do that. But this I feel should be said: It is very easy to, by the use of wrong tactics, kick up more unnecessary trouble in one day than can be remedied in two years. Where there is prospect of a demand being made which will entail an argument, the union should never attempt to catch the managers unawares and butt it through, except in possible cases where the union is dealing with managers who are themselves known to seize unfair advantage. A union is a business organization, pure and simple, formed to protect and advance the interests of its members. It should deal with theater managers as business men, in a business way. Strong arm methods are still, it shames me to say it, necessary in isolated cases, but even in such instances, nine times out of ten, if the matter be carefully taken up, by very carefully selected committees, more would be accomplished in the long run by argument and diplomacy than by force.

There is, however, one phase of this matter which needs a little once-overing. It often occurs that an I. A. rule, or law, which seems at first glance to be oppressive and unjust, and which really may be just, that, insofar as the individual case be concerned, is, nevertheless, a very important and very necessary, as well as a very just law. It is possible that this particular demand on the part of the Phoenix union was due to some such law as this, which the union had no power within itself to waive, and the violation of which would bring upon the local and its individual members severe penalties. But, even so, there still could be no real, legitimate excuse for threatening to tie up a show after the audience had assembled. That is not only taking an unfair advantage (assuming that no demand had previously been made on the Columbia) of the theater, but violates the right of an innocent party, the audience.

The editor of this department and this department stands for organization. The editor is himself an active member of the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., and an honorary member of several locals. Neither himself, or this department, however, will defend any union in an action which is wrong, because that would not be true friendship to the union itself.

In this case, however, regardless of everything else, if the union sinned it has paid the penalty. It has suffered amply for any fault it may have committed, and I would suggest that Phoenix managers and exhibitors ought to now prove their broad mindedness by forgetting the whole thing holding no rancor against those they have, according to Friend Cooper's statement, defeated. The men should, on the other hand, accept their defeat gracefully, taking profit by the mistakes of the past. There is no use fighting forever over a lost cause, and keeping ill feeling alive. If you must fight, fight like the devil (but fairly) until victorious or defeated, and then promptly proceed to forget it. If I have not made all this very clear, just try and understand my meaning, and that I am trying to give you a little lecture for the good of all concerned.

Operators Deserve a Cussing.

Verne P. Clement, Brevard, North Carolina, expresses his opinion of certain matters as follows:

> I look for the World every week, and am an enthusiastic reader of its pages. In a recent issue appeared a letter from a Florida operator who complained of film reaching him in bad condition. And you make take it from me as a statement of fact that I know something about that particular thing. I am compelled to work for hours on some programmes in order to get them in shape to run. However, I don't think the fault lies altogether with the exchange. I believe some operators are due to get a little cussing. If every operator would send film back in the same condition it is received, the next man would not have such a hard time. I have been operating about one year in a town of fifteen hundred. Have one Power 6A, with a 6 x 14 foot operating room. Have been having a little trouble with up and down movement in my picture. Can you help me to locate the trouble?

Operators should by all means take proper care of film while in their charge, and should, so far as possible, repair damage done by them, but that fact does not relieve the exchange from making a thorough inspection and thoroughly repairing films before sending them out to a customer. It is their duty so to do. It is a part of the service they sell, and to sell a thing and not deliver it smacks of dishonest methods.

As to the movement in your picture, you should have described it very much more in detail. If the movement is regular, occurring four times to each turn of the crank shaft, then the trouble lies in your intermittent, and is probably due to (A) Dirt on face of intermittent sprocket. (B) Intermittent sprocket not true. (C) Intermittent sprocket loose on shaft. (D) Intermittent sprocket shaft sprung. If the movement is irregular, it may be due to any one of several causes, and I would have to have it very closely described before attempting to tell you which one it is. Be sure, also, that it is not in the films themselves.

A Change in Projection Machine Manufacture.

This department is officially notified by the Stout Machine Company that the Portoscope, formerly manufactured and sold by the Picture-Scope Company, 565 West Washington street, Chicago, will in future be made and sold by them. The Stout Machine Company is located at 814 South Main street, Rockford, Illinois.

The Portoscope is a good machine of its kind, and we wish the Stout Machine Company success in its new field.

Incidentally the company asks for authoritative information with regard to transparent screens. In reply to this, the Mirror screen, made by Frank J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Illinois, is the most efficient of any, but rather costly and very fragile. The Optigraph Company, Chicago, 1010 First National Bank Building, makes, or did make, a trasparent screen. There was a screen known as the Trans Lux, made by the Trans Lux Company, 251 Washington street, Brooklyn, but whether or no they are still doing business, I cannot say. That is the sum of my knowledge as to transparent screens just at this time. They are so little used that I have not kept up to date on them, I am sorry to say.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Sepia Toning.

THE usual method of sepia toning is that of immersing the film in a solution which changes the metallic silver image to a haloid or ferricyanide salt, which is in turn converted to the brown sulphide. Since the conversion of the image to a haloid salt causes the emulsion to whiten so that it resembles unexposed film and the sulphide solution "develops" the image again, this process is often termed re-development.

Films for re-developing should possess a blue-black tone and should be thoroughly washed (to eliminate Hypo) and be perfectly dried. Films which have been over-exposed and under-developed do not give successful results in Sepia toning. A print to produce a pleasing brown should have just the correct exposure, or perhaps a little less than normal, and be developed completely; that is, one in which the image seems to come to its full density in the normal time and which will not gain further with continued development; except, of course, that if the development is too prolonged there will be a chemical fog slowly produced by the continued action of the developer. Two solutions are required for the production of Sepia-toned films.

Sepia tone is one in which the silver image has been converted to a pleasing tone of brown, and in which the high lights are clear, transparent films. The solutions are made up as follows:

No. 1. Bleaching Solution.

Potassium Ferri Cyanide	1½	lbs.
Potassium Bromide	1½	lbs.
Water	10	gallons

No. 2. Re-developing Solution.

Sulphide (not Sulphite) Soda	12	ozs.
Water	10	gallons

Manipulation.—(1) immerse the rack of film in the bleaching bath, letting it remain until the entire silver image has turned to a creamy yellow, allowing it to remain until the yellow image has practically the same appearance from the back as well as the front of the film. This operation will take place in from one to two minutes.

(2) Rinse thoroughly in clear, cold water in a rinsing tank.

(3) Place in the developing solution until original detail of the picture returns, except that the image is now brown instead of black. This takes about thirty seconds. The films should not be allowed to remain in this solution any longer than is necessary to complete the developing action, as the sulphide is a strong caustic and has a tendency to soften the emulsion, and in hot weather to produce reticulation.

(4) Wash for half an hour before drying.

In warm weather, if troubled with softening of the emulsion or with reticulation, rinse the film quickly as it comes from the re-developer, and then immerse for five minutes in a hardening bath composed of Acid Hardener	3	qts.

Water	10	gallons

Then remove from this bath and wash as usual.

If properly carried out, the density and graduation of the sepia-toned film will not be affected by re-development, although many studios make a slightly lighter print for sepia than for a straight print.

The acid hardener is the same formula as that used in the preparation of acid hypo fixing bath, given recently in this department.

While intensification and reduction of motion picture films is not, as a rule, advisable on account of the tendency of granularity in the image, caused by the use of the solution, it is often desirable to give an added snappiness and contrast to a negative film by a slight intensification. One of the best methods of intensifying a negative and one which has practically no tendency to a granular image, is the sepia re-development.

While the method of intensification by re-development is comparatively new, yet it is a most effective and simple means of intensifying film negatives. It may be used in exactly the same manner as for producing sepia tones on positive film. Negatives intensified by re-development are built up evenly without undue contrast and without the chance of staining. They are, moreover, more permanent than a straight developed negative, as they will never be subjected to brown staining such as is often seen in old negatives which have been kept in damp vaults for some time. The advantage of being able to use toning bath for two different purposes is obvious, the results in either case being all that could be desired.

On account of war prices the cost of the bleaching bath has reached an alarming height. The following bleaching bath is cheaper but cannot be kept in a wooden developing tank unless it is well protected with parafin, asphalt, or Probus paint, as it attacks the wood and precipitates. A slate or soapstone tank is best for this solution.

Permanganate Bleach.

A

Potassium permanganate	1½	ounces
Sulphuric acid (C. P)	9	fluid ounces
Water	6	gallons

B

Sodium chloride (common salt)	3	ounces
Water	2	gallons

Solutions A and B should be prepared separately and mixed together for use after dissolving. Do not use table salt but the coarser brine salt, as table salt generally contains flour or starch to prevent caking in damp weather when exposed to the air in salt cellars.

When the film has been bleached white the gelatine will have a permanganate stain. Rinse it thoroughly and place in a 1% solution of sodium bi-sulphite which will clear it of the stain. Rinse again and re-develop in the re-developing solution first given.

The explanation of the process is very simple. The permanganate and acid acts as a reducer in dissolving the metallic silver, but in the presence of sodium chloride the dissolved metallic silver is immediately transformed into a silver chloride and remains in the film.

Quick Work and Double Exposure.

The modern cameraman finds it necessary, in order to keep up with the times, to have at his disposal a number of devices which, a few years ago, were seldom, if ever, used.

Many beautiful effects, which, when properly used, add a greatly enhanced value to the beauty of the photography and lend to the capable director a variety of effects hitherto not at his command, may be obtained by a few comparatively simple devices.

In the old days it was seldom that even the common fade out was used. Today there is scarcely a picture in which the simple fade out does not occur at least once, and generally several times. On account of the number of different devices used in securing similar or nearly similar effects, there has been a confusion in the nomenclature used in designating the different effects; therefore, it will not be amiss to explain briefly in this regard the terms used and the means of distinguishing between the various effects and the apparatus by which they are produced.

Fade-out and fade-in: These terms are open to the criticism of being too general in their application, but, being the oldest form of an effect in motion pictures and having the sanction of long usage, designate, respectively, the even fading of the entire picture within the frame to blackness and the general transformation of a picture filling the entire frame from total obscurity to brightness.

This effect may be obtained in several ways: First, by closing the iris diaphragm in the lens while turning; second, by a dissolving shutter; third, by a graduated screen; fourth, by chemical means.

The first method is probably the commonest, but is open to the objection that most iris diaphragms do not close entirely and that it is therefore impossible to make a complete fade, especially in a brightly lighted location. There is also the objection that, as the diaphragm closes, the depth of focus increases, and there is a very perceptible sharpening of the focus as the image darkens, giving the unpleasant suggestion that the scene was not as sharply focussed as it could have been.

No matter what stage of development has been reached in the attainment of artistic effects by the "fuzzytype" school of still-photography, cinematography has not yet reached the stage where "fuzzytype" results can be tolerated in the picture. The psychology of vision permits one to view a motionless landscape or a still life through half-closed eyelids for the attainment of an artistic effect, but a moving object demands open-eyed attention and sharply focussed eyes to delineate its contour, and the inability of the eye to sharpen the definition of an out-of-focus picture results in an irritation to the eye which is not only a mental abomination but an actual and harmful physical eye-strain. On the other hand, razor-blade sharpness in every plane of a motion picture is not always essential nor is it natural. The human eye only discerns clearly those objects which are in the plane on which it is focussed, and it is an insurmountable law of physics that no lens should be in focus at all distances, whether it is a photographic objective or the cornea of the human eye.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

Artcraft Presents Mary Pickford in a Delightful and Humanizing Comedy of Decided Artistry.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"REBECCA of Sunnybrook Farm" can easily run the gauntlet of close inspection and sharp criticism without fear. It is complete and satisfying in every department, the kind of artistry destined to bring millions to the picture shows who do not now attend. The author, the director and the brilliant little artist who plays the title role are in a harmony of creative and interpretative effort which delights the eye, the mind and the heart, now a beautifully composed picture effect, now a flash of wit or humor in subtitle, and again a revelation of tender sympathy which stirs one's kindest sensibilities. Miss Pickford is given far higher opportunity than could be attained in any "vehicle," and she easily rises to the dramatic heights afforded her. She becomes a dominating figure through ability, instead of having everything thrown her way.

The play, to begin with, addresses refinement. The influence of any such story upon the public reacts for good or evil upon the exhibitor and producer alike. It is not a question of satisfying the vulgar and morbid tastes of this or that group of spectators, but of addressing the higher standards of millions upon millions of Americans who read the magazines of high quality, who have been disgusted with low standards in moving pictures. "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" is not superior in subject matter, nor in plot, nor in many other respects to other pictures, but in logic of construction—it is developed along lines which appeal to rational minds. It is an attempt to entertain the great majority of intelligent people, and it reaches out to the minority primitive minds without vulgarity. It is thus a success both ways. The circus scene is a scream—it will convulse the average audience—yet there are moments of tender pathos, and even a touch of melodrama in the storm, but there are no flashy characterizations of the theatrical kind.

As a consequence, Miss Pickford does not have to be theatrical. She does not have to sterilize her personality. She uses it brightly to stimulate the imagination, expressing temperamentally a variety of thought and feeling, ranging from the depths of sorrow to the heights of youthful spirits and good humor, with a lot of kindly sympathy interspersed. This is made possible by the high quality of the medium. The greater consistency of ideas throughout impels the actress to greater naturalness, to more effective characterization and emotional denotement. Play and player unite in an effort indispensable for the advancement of this new art of ours. They make it an instrumentality for humane advancement and, at the same time, raise the standard of motion picture representation.

The recently completed Alice Brady photoplay for World Pictures is now called "A Maid of Belgium" instead of "The Refugee," as at first.

Pathe Pictures

"War and the Woman," Five-Reel Melodrama Featuring Florence La Badie, and "The Angel Factory," Five Reel Astra Production Featuring Antonio Moreno.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

BECAUSE war is uppermost in the minds of all at the present time, "War and the Woman," a five-reel Thanhouser melodrama featuring Florence La Badie, is an acceptable offering and should get over. Considered solely on its merits as a photoplay and aside from its association of ideas with that which is most vital to us just now, the picture is not so much. It is a composite of ideas used in several war pictures of late, with enough original touches and plot twists to carry it through. There are no battle scenes. Philip Lonergan wrote the story and scenario. He has given us a highly imaginative story of, as he terms it, "what might have been"—what might have happened had a foreign enemy invaded this country. Miss La Badie is seen in the role of a girl whose stepfather is suspected of being a spy. She leaves him and, through a series of circumstances marries John Barker (Wayne Arey), after she has rescued him from an aeroplane accident. John is called to duty. The foreign enemy invades the country and takes over the Barker country home. The girl is made a servant because of her refusal to meet the advances of the commander of the invading army. John, now an aviator, gets leave to search for his wife. He gets through the lines and plans to rescue the girl. She manages to elude the invaders as they are at a Bacchanalian dinner. She lights a fuse connected with a dynamite charge in the cellar. The house blows up and the girl is carried away in her husband's airplane.

One touch that could have been left out is that in which President Wilson is shown purchasing books. The actor who plays the part bears a striking resemblance to the President, but it is doubtful if the incident will take well. Another incident that might have been left out is that showing one of the girls who had been "invited" to the invaders' dinner, and who too obviously had been ravaged.

Miss La Badie is thoroughly capable in her part, as is also Mr. Arey. Other important parts are in the hands of Tom Brooke, Grace Henderson, Arthur Bower and Ernest C. Warde, who also directed. Mr. Warde directed with his usual skill.

"The Angel Factory."

At all times interesting and with an idea that scratches below the surface, "The Angel Factory," a five-reel Astra production, is a good photoplay. Into the picture have been kneaded all the elements that make for interest, and the whole is served in a fitting manner. Antonio Moreno is the featured player.

Scene from 'The Angel Factory" (Astra).

Opposite him is Helene Chadick, a young woman who shows rare promise. Much interest in the picture centers in the types obtained for even the smaller character parts, and the production given Lucien Hubbard's story by Director Lawrence McGill. The picture shows that the author knows the slums and knows how slum inhabitants act; also that the director was in sympathy with the story.

Mr. Moreno has the part of a wealthy young man who conducts a settlement house which has been dubbed "The Angel Factory." Miss Chadwick is seen as a virtuous slum girl who is more or less carried away by the adventurous charm of a gang leader. The settlement worker's efforts to uplift, despite his society's fiance's objections, lead the latter to invite the girl, now the youth's protege, to a dance. The girl carries off honors at the dance. The gang leader becomes jealous of the settlement worker and, as he attempts to shoot his rival, is himself killed. The girl is first accused of the murder. Later the settlement worker is accused. During this part of the picture there is a fine degree of suspense worked up, which is finally dispelled when Sailor Bill, a man whom the youth had helped, and who finally had given in to his whiskey craving, confesses. The youth's society fiance jilts him, and he and the girl of the slums confess their mutual love.

The character portrayals are excellent. Important players besides the leads are Armand Cortez, Laura West, Margaret Greene, Suzanne Willa and Franics X. Conlan.

"Fools For Luck"

Taylor Holmes Makes Second Hit in Photocomedy Adapted from Kenneth Harris' "Talismans."

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

WHEN Kenneth Harris wrote "Talisman's," he aimed at making each of the characters fit into his or her niche in real life as closely as possible. In other words, the story impresses one as a matter-of-fact story, which will remind the spectator of incidents in his own life or in the lives of people whom he has known, without any attempted exaggeration. Naturally the hero of the story is placed at a disadvantage under these somewhat prosaic conditions, especially in the judgment of people who revel in melodramatic, or unreal life; but to those who have learned to look for a faithful reflection of life on the screen "Fools For Luck" will be gladly welcomed and Essanay will be credited with another success in which Taylor Holmes is the leading figure.

At this point it is timely to remind Mr. Holmes that in the early reels of this picture, in certain scenes, he can be justly accused of over-acting the role of Philander Jepson, an oversight that is emphasized by contrasting the simple, natural treatment of the part of Brunhilda by Helen Ferguson.

Essanay's foreword to this photo comedy prepares the spectator for what is to come in the following words: "This is a darn fool story about good luck, bad luck, love and other silly things. If you are not a little bit superstitious, please pass out quietly, and maybe the box office will give your money back —maybe." I have very little fear, however, that any one of the many hundreds of thousands who will view this picture will take the chance, for it is exceedingly pleasing to stay. There is such a gratifying, pleased feeling in one's heart to watch the self-redemption of Philander, who has been a firm believer in rabbit foot, and other good luck charms and superstitions. We see him get down to bedrock and begin building the foundations of character on his own best efforts, and we joyfully watch him as he throws gambling and his gambling friends aside and devotes himself, heart and soul, to the nursing of his job. And this leads him back again to Brunhilda, whose father had forbidden him his home, because he was "going straight to the devil, with a clear track."

Scene from "Fools for Luck" (Essanay).

Mr. Holmes will add to his following by his screen creation of Philander Jepson. The natural talent for the conveying of fine comedy points before the camera is again pleasingly evidenced. In the love scenes between Philander and Brunhilda, Mr. Holmes shows great tenderness and devotion. While Helen Ferguson's Brunhilda cannot fail to win a host of admirers.

Robert Bolder and Frankie Raymond, as the father and mother of Brunhilda; John Cossar, as the boss who fired Philander; James C. Carroll, as the succeeding boss, who gave Philander another chance, and Ed Cooke, as the barroom waiter, who advised Philander to jump in the lake, are the other members of a capable cast.

The release will be made through K-E-S-E, Inc., October 8.

"The Little Pirate"

Five-Reel Butterfly Subject Features Zoe Rae in Story of

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A STRONG juvenile interest is uppermost in this five-reel number, written by Norris Shannon and produced by Elsie Jane Wilson. It has a simple, direct plot, which could easily have been encompassed in a less number of reels, but which, nevertheless, holds the interest firmly as presented.

"Scene from "The Little Pirate" (Butterfly).

Zoe Rae, a child actress well known to the films, has the part of Margery Baird, daughter of a business man in temporary financial straits. The father is trying to raise some money to tide him over a crisis and his suspicions are aroused by the disappearance of some securities in the hands of a man named Drake. The latter individual is also the cause of trouble between Baird and his wife. This latter phase of the story constitutes the chief adult interest in the number.

It is after the quarrel and separation of Baird and his wife that little Margery ventures out upon the exploit which brings up the chief incidents of the story. She is riding through the woods on her pony, which she leaves temporarily in order to pursue a rabbit. The pony runs away and Margery then meets the boy pirate, played by Burwell Hemerick. The latter attempts to terrorize her, but only makes her fall in love with him. Then they decide to leave civilization and take a boat for the pirate island.

The remainder of the story is concerned with the efforts of two sets of grieving parents to get trace of the missing children. The latter for a time enjoy life on the island, turning up the missing "securities" in their search for treasure. They attempt to return in a leaky boat and considerable excitement ensues before they are rescued.

Others in the cast are Charley West, Frank Brownlee, Gretchen Lederer, Mr. Titus and Lillian Peacock.

George Ade Fable

The Fable of "The Wandering Boy and the Wayward Parents" an Amusing Two-Reel Essanay.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

THE second of George Ade fables made by Essanay in two reels, "The Wandering Boy and the Wayward Parents," is a splendid photoplay in every respect. It was directed by Richard Foster Baker.

This fable points the moral that if you want to see city life you must go to the country. Rodney La Rock plays the part of the country boy just returned home from college. This is the best piece of acting we have seen him do. He is the life of the picture and he makes it very funny indeed. Magna Anderson plays opposite him as the millionaire's daughter, who considers it her duty to bring Maeterlink to the masses. Her part is more or less of a burlesque, but it, too, is a scream.

The photoplay shows the college boy coming home. He finds nothing to do. He gets an invitation to the city. He goes and gets into social uplift work. He helps clean up the morals of the city. He has not time for even such conventional temptations as musical comedy. He visits his parents and finds that they have gone to the bad. Father is head of the house committee of a fashionable club that runs a blind pig. He returns to the city to live a clean life with the girl who likes to read aloud from the Belgian playwright.

"Polly of the Circus"

Goldwyn Initial Production a Great Picture—Mae Marsh in Margaret Mayo Story Shines Her Brightest.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN "Polly of the Circus," Goldwyn's initial production, we have a great picture. It makes a twin appeal—to the eye and better still to the heart. If Adrian Gil-Spear's development of Margaret Mayo's story has been somewhat slow it has been sure. The eight reels may be divided into two equal parts. The first half is pure entertainment, or nearly so. The last half is sterling drama. It grips and it deeply stirs. The spectacular, of which there is much, is subsidiary. It rounds out, it complements, the whole; but what dominates, holds tight, is the growing affection of Polly for the "sky pilot" toward whom at first sight she displayed nothing but scorn—a perfectly natural attitude on the part of the girl reared among the big tents.

Mae Marsh shines as Polly. It is over five years since we saw her first in a big role—and her portrayal of Lilywhite in "Man's Genesis" was one of the first pieces of work she did for the screen. As Polly she displays the same talent evidenced in the earlier characterization, and in addition the art that she has acquired in a busy half decade under exceptionally keen instruction. Polly enters the story as a girl untamed, inured to the hurlyburly of the show and accustomed only to the ways of men and women who act and speak frankly. She emerges a woman—softened by contact with men and women of quieter ways, of education, of simpler life, and touched by love.

The opening of the picture is addressed to those boys and girls whose childhood is far behind them; it is an effective appeal, made stronger by reason of the charming bits of village scenery. There is brought out the fascination for mankind that inheres in the annual circus, with its strange humans and animals. We are intoduced to the two boys and the girl who figure in the main story. The first touch of real drama comes when Polly, injured in the ring, is brought to the home of the boy "Skinnay," now the village preacher. Indignant parishioners declare the girl of the circus must not enter the parsonage. "This is the Lord's house, and while I dwell in it none shall be turned away," says the pastor, and the matter is settled.

Right here the story really begins. Polly's first day, a Sunday, in her new home is full of interest. In her bed, pulled to the window, she can look in on the services in the church and hear the minister, as well as see him. There is rare comedy when Polly, catching the eye of the speaker, furiously waves her arms to him. It is a tragic situation for the preacher and for one of the protesting ancient members of the choir who has witnessed the action. The home life of the parsonage, with its two negro servants, is finely shown. Polly, convalescent, romps with the children—and with the pastor—studies and leans more and more on her protector.

Vernon Steele is John Douglas, the minister, a fine character, and he gives an equally fine characterization. Wellington Playter is Big Jim, the Boss Canvasman, the protector of Polly and in love with her, a strong performance. Charles Eldridge's identity is concealed under the make-up of Toby the clown. Mr. Eldridge is at his best. George Trimble is Barker, the portly owner of the show, a convincing ringmaster. There is a long supplementary cast, among them the villagers and church members, the latter of whom are made to show us the most uncharitable sort of persons—an interpretation that very likely will be resented in communities that best know that non-cosmopolitan type.

On the dramatic side there is much to commend. The ever new story of Ruth and Naomi is effectively told by the pastor to his injured visitor; that its influence on Polly is marked we have abundant proof later. If any screen horse race has in its suspense ever matched Bingo's battle to be first under the wire we did not see it.

On the pictorial side the subject is notable. Charles T. Horan directed. To Everitt Shinn is given the credit for the art direction. George W. Hill was the photographer. There are many examples of night stuff, all of them unusual and remarkably effective—of the show, of street scenes.

"Polly of the Circus" will go strong in any house.

"Polly Ann."

THE humors of New England village life are entertainingly set forth in "Polly Ann," a five-part photoplay written by J. G. Hawks and R. Cecil Smith and produced by the Triangle, with Bessie Love in the title role. The bewitching Bessie appears as a neglected orphan whose only home has been the poor farm until she is hired out to the proprietor of the village tavern and made to do most of the work about the place. The story follows along the accepted lines laid down for this class of screen and stage romance, and Polly Ann's fairy prince arrives in due time and carries her off to the city and a life of ease and luxury. Before this happens, however, she goes through a series of amusing experiences; she even becomes a member of a one-night-stand show troupe and plays one of the little Princes in Richard the Third.

The engagement of the company is not a success, but Polly departs with them when the star and his support jump their board bill and flee in the faint light of early dawn. The attentions of the handsome leading man becoming too insistent, the ex-slavey is glad to be rescued by the real hero. The plot is mainly valuable by reason of the opportunities it gives Miss Bessie to play a simple hearted but clear headed little waif whose good fortune at the finish will be welcomed by everyone in front of the screen. The amount of charm, sly humor and human nature that the actress puts into her creation will be easily anticipated. The supporting company, consisting of Rowland Lee, Walt Whitman, John Lockney, William Ellingford, David Foss, Alfred Hollingsworth and Josephine Headly, portray the various New England types with the proper amount of realism. Charles F. Miller's direction of the picture adds materially to its worth.

"Flying Colors."

The moral to be learned from "Flying Colors," a five-part photoplay written by John Lynch and R. Cecil Smith and directed by Frank Borzage, is not to pull a long face when down on one's luck but to encourage a genial smile. William Desmond, who has the leading role in this picture, is a living example of the force of the above precept and, as Brent Brewster, a famous college athlete who turns detective when forced to by circumstances, illustrates that a pleasant look, backed up by a firm will and strong muscles, is quite sure to make any young chap come out with flying colors. Brewster is sent to keep his eye on a house party, the mistress of the place having been robbed of her jewels. The first thing he does is to fall in love with the sister of his hostess. He then gets down to business, and fastens the robbery upon a certain Captain Drake, a high class crook of English birth, who is also endeavoring to carry off the object of Brent's newly awakened affections.

"Flying Colors" was evidently written with William Desmond in view and proves an excellent fit. It is good entertainment of its class, and is assisted in this end by the acting of Golda Madien, Jack Livingston, Laura Sears, J. Barney Sherry, Geo. W. Chase, John Lockney, Bert Offerd, Mary McIvor and Ray Jackson.

"Lost in Transit"

drama—of life on the pathetic side artistically portrayed. There's a baby in this story, too—very much in it, by the way. Bob White is an interesting youngster, but it is likely his natural attractiveness is very much increased by his contact with the leading player; Beban surely has a way with him when he is engaged in securing the confidence of a little one. The actor is a natural-born playmate, and the entertainment he radiates extends beyond its immediate subject. In this instance, by the way, there is a suspicion the relationship between the two is more than casual. The resemblance is marked.

Mr. Beban is Niccolo Darini, an Italian junkman, with a wagon —and a white horse; a thoroughbred by no means, but just good-natured, plodding, plugging old plug. The animal looks wise, too, when his master whispers in his ear. The baby enters the story when its mother lifts it in among the rags in Niccolo's cart and disappears. From this point on the baby is right up in front. He is not turned over to the "peleece"—he becomes a part of the life of Niccolo.

Helen Eddy plays opposite Mr. Beban, and plays in her always finished manner the smaller part that falls to her. Vera Lewis is Mrs. Flint, the matron of the children's home who takes the baby from Niccolo and passes it off on Mr. Kendall for the reward of five thousand dollars. Henry Barrows is Kendall, who for two and a half years refused to look on the face of his child because its mother had died at its birth, only to suffer the loss of the little one by kidnapping when his heart softened.

Kathlyn Williams has given us a story of real human interest and Donald Crisp has so directed it as to bring out the best drama in it. "Lost in Transit" possesses the rare faculty of sending 'em away in a happy and also in a melting mood.

"Under Handicap"

Harold Lockwood in Eight-Part Yorke Photoplay Has Congenial Role—Released on Metro Program.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ALTHOUGH handicapped by an unmusical title, the eight-part photoplay produced by Yorke and named "Under Handicap," is a well made picture and has a pleasing story. It is the familiar one of the rich man's son who goes the pace, until his father comes to his senses and refuses to keep up the supply of necessary coin. Thrown on his own resources, the young man, having the right material hidden away in his backbone, turns to and works out his own salvation. In the present photoplay he again follows the beaten trail and heads for the West. Once there, he meets just the sort of young woman to inspire him with a desire to show her that he is a real man, and before the end of the last part succeeds in downing his enemies, completing an important piece of engineering work and winning the heart of the Western heiress.

The importance of intrusting the part of the hero to the right type of actor has not been overlooked in the casting of the photoplay. As Greek Conniston, the young man with too much money to spend, Harold Lockwood fills all the requirements of the character. Anna Little is uncommonly attractive as Argyle Crawford. The picture was directed by Fred S. Balsholfer.

KALEM'S "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" series finished up with "A Champion of the Law," a two-reeler that is more full of thrills than have been any of the preceding episodes. Also it brings to the screen almost the entire roster of Kalem players. The story is not so connected as it might have been, but the "punch" is there nevertheless. In the last chapter Stingaree, through a series of melodramatic circumstances, becomes one of those who defend a house against a band of outlaws. Incidentally he is brought face to face with his sweetheart from England. The end shows the gentleman bushranger sailing for home with his sweetheart. His defense of the house set upon by the bandits has earned for him a pardon.

True Boardman finishes his Stingaree role with his usual ease. Paul C. Hurst is the Howie that is left in Australia. The cast includes Marin Sais, Chris Lynton, Edythe Sterling, Edward Hearn, Ronald Bradbury, Hart Hoxie, Frank Jonasson and Edward Clisbee.

Mr. Hurst, who directed, has succeeded in obtaining some good night scenes, showing various groups around campfires. The number is one that finishes the series in a fitting manner.

"Politics in Pumpkin Center."

Ham and Bud are responsible for a number of laughs in this one-reel comedy. Ham is the mayor, fire chief and everything else in a rural town. Bud is the assistant everything. Henry Murdoch is the cause of Ham's deposition. Bud takes his place. Considerable fun is had with a flivver, which changes from a fire engine to a police patrol quite often.

"A Stormy Knight"

Franklyn Farnum Is Featured in a Bluebird That Holds Well for Three Reels and Then Lets Down.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE is real interest in the first three reels of "A Stormy Knight," the five-part Bluebird released on September 10 and featuring Franklyn Farnum. Brownie Vernon is in the cast, but her appearances are so widely spaced it can hardly be said she is featured. What counts much in the picture is the fine night storm stuff. It seems to be a foregone conclusion that the more some directors get away from the attempted illusion of tinting down for night scenes the more some others will have to meet their work and give us the genuine article. In the opening of the picture there are also shown some remarkable views of banks of clouds, seen from the mountain tops above. It will be sure to make a hit.

The subject gets well started as a melodrama, but the action toward the ending diverges to the farcical. Throughout the story one is curious to know what it's all about; at the denouement he is informed that all of the seeming plots and counterplots have been designed solely for the sake of interesting the hero in a young woman—all ordinary means having failed. Mr. Farnum's smile lacks the illusive quality that may be noted in the case of its obvious inventor. Perhaps the fault lies in overworking it, in smiling when the observer cannot in the immediate situation discover any occasion for evidence of pleasure.

Others in the cast besides the two principals are Jean Hersholt as Dr. Fraser, Hayward Mack as Richard Weller and Frank McQuarrie as Mr. Weller. The story is based on Jack Cunningham's tale of "The Fourth Glove." Waldemar Young made the adaptation and Elmer Clifton directed.

screen version shows many traces of its origin. Although history gives the making of the flag as the most important event in the life of Miss Betsy, the playwright uses it merely as an incident, her personal affairs of the heart taking up the larger part of the action. Through a misunderstanding, due to Betsy's sister wearing her cloak, the heroine's lover thinks she is untrue to him and fights a duel with his supposed rival, leaving him for dead. This is the means of tying the usual dramatic tangle, which is only straightened out after Betsy has had several opportunities to exhibit her courage and loyalty. George Washington and Benedict Arnold also figure in the cast of characters.

The direction of the picture was intrusted to Travers Vale and George Cowl, and reflects credit upon them both. Alice Brady finds the character of the historic flag-maker quite in her way. Her personal charms offer sufficient excuse for her lover's devotion, and she acts the part excellently. The supporting company is a large one and consists of such well schooled actors as John Powers, Lillian Cook, Eugenie Woodward, Kate Lester, Frank Mayo, George MacQuarrie, Robert Cummings and Nellie Fillmore.

"To the Death"

Olga Petrova Appears in a Melodramatic Story of a Woman's Revenge—Tragic in Theme, but With a Happy Ending.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

CORSICAN revenge is the basis on which "To the Death," the five-part Metro production released August 27, starring Olga Petrova, is founded. The story, tragic in theme, has been given a happy ending, which, while tending to weaken it, makes it more acceptable to a majority of audiences.

Bianca Sylva (Olga Petrova), a lace maker in Calvi, Corsica, is sent to Paris by a sculptor who is impressed by her talent while watching her modeling in clay. She meets Robert Dumont of the Secret Service and they are attracted to each other. Dumont is warned to go to Corsica and watch Laporte, who is engaged in government work. Some time later Bianca, who has achieved success, is suddenly called home. She finds her sister dying and discovers the note which lured her to her destruction, signed "Pierre Renard," and vows vengeance "to the death." On returning to Paris, she meets Laporte, and agrees to sacrifice herself upon his promising to find "Pierre Renard." On learning that Dumont is Renard, she stabs him, and goes with Laporte, who then boasts that it was he who signed Renard's name to the note. Detectives break in and arrest Laporte for treason, while Bianca rushes back to her studio and finds that Dumont will recover.

While the work of the star in this picture is good, she is not afforded as great opportunities as in some of her other productions. Evelyn Brent is attractive as Rosa, the younger sister, and the rest of the cast, including Wyndham Standing as Laporte and Mahlon Hamilton as Dumont, are satisfactory. The story was written by Madame Petrova and L. Case Russell, and the production directed by Burton L. King.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs"

Herbert Brenon's Eight-Part Picture Novel of the Russian Revolution Has the Absorbing Interest and Dramatic Sweep of the Actual Events.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AMONG the many excellences to be found in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," Herbert Brenon's eight-part picture novel, based on the Russian Revolution, one attribute stands out in bold relief—the swift onrush of events. Realizing that the multiplicity of amazing happenings which have taken place since Rasputin, the Sacred Devil of Russia, came in contact with the unhappy ruler and his family, offered an embarrassment of historical facts, Austin Strong and George Edwardes-Hall, the writers of the scenario, and producer Brenon, have hurried the action from one salient episode to another and dispensed with the minor detail generally found in works of fiction. In this way the historical events of several years have been compressed into an eight-part picture, and its effect on the beholder is as if he himself were an actor in the scenes that have but recently been added to the pages of history.

It is hardly necessary to outline the plot of "The Fall of the Romanoffs." Rasputin, the illiterate sled driver who rose to power on the ladder of religious superstition, is the dominant figure of the novel. Other characters from life are Nicholas II, the Czarina, the German Emperor, Grand Duke Nicholas, Alexander Kerensky, and Iliodor, the Siberian monk who attempted to overthrow Rasputin, and was himself obliged to flee from Russia. The fictitious characters and events that have been introduced to assist in telling the story fit in admirably with the selection of material from the actual course of affairs. In tracing the rise and fall of Rasputin, the self-styled prophet, the overthrow of the Romanoffs is also shown; and the amazing power commanded by this drunken, licentious mountebank fascinates the spectator, despite his better judgment. Rasputin's effect upon the fate of a great nation when ruled by a man whose only qualification is one of birth, offers a potent argument in favor of democracy. The spectacle of the Czar and Czarina listening to this charlatan as to one inspired and allowing him to direct matters of state as well as their private lives, strengthening the conviction that absolute monarchs are no longer needed on this war-rent world.

To Herbert Brenon belongs a large share of the credit for putting "The Fall of the Romanoffs" before the public in an able and impressive manner. The reproduction of the scenes, episodes, characters, and all that goes to make up the life of the country, has been accomplished with convincing skill. Palace and hut, noble and peasant, the lone figure of the Czar or the rabble in the streets clamoring for freedom—the director has placed them on the screen in exact counterpart and made them do his bidding in an absorbing story which he wisely classifies as a picture novel. One touch of theatricalism mars his work. In the banquet scene, which ends with the killing of Rasputin, a soldier enters the room on horseback and rides his mount down the length of the long table. A very good circus trick, but out of place in this scene.

The cast could hardly be bettered. Edward Connelly as Rasputin gave a character study, based upon actual knowledge of the man, that was finely conceived and adroitly executed. Charles Craig's performance of the Grand Duke Nicholas was equally meritorious, and Conway Tearle as Prince Felix, Nance O'Neil as the Czarina, Alfred Hickman as the Czar, R. Payton Gibbs as Baron Frederick, Mlle. Ketty Galanta as Anna, Pauline Curley as Princess Irena, Mlle. Marcelle as Sonia, William E. Shay as Theofan, George Denueburg as Wilhelm II., Master Lawrence Johnson as the Czarevitch, and W. Francis Chapin as Alexander Kerensky, sustained their roles with commendable ability. Iliodor, the Russian monk, appeared in person and was surprisingly excellent before the camera.

"An Alabaster Box."

IT was a foregone conclusion that a story by Mary F. Wilkins Freeman would contain sound character drawing and be wholesome of theme. Both of these qualities are found in "An Alabaster Box," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, written by Mrs. Freeman and Florence Morse Kingsley, and directed by Chester Withey. The leading character of the drama is Andrew Bolton, the "big man" of a New England village, whose energy and push keep the place alive and furnish employment for nearly all the inhabitants, but whose financial failure is brought about by the refusal of his fellow townsmen to support him when he tries to enlarge his business interests, and he is sent to prison for embezzlement. Years after his daughter, who was a young child when her father was convicted, returns to the village under an assumed name, and becomes the Lady Bountiful of the place, a fortune having been left her by an uncle. Her father also returns and when his old neighbors learn the truth they turn on his daughter and attempt to wreck the old Bolton home where she is now living. Bolton tries to defend the house, and falls dead from excitement. An interesting love interest runs through the story.

Alice Joyce fits the character of Lydia Bolton to a nicety, and Marc MacDermott plays Andrew Bolton with the necessary force and finish. Harry Ham, Patsy De Forest and Frank Crane have other important roles and act them properly. The production is adequate, and Chester Withey has directed it with skill.

"The Fighting Trail."

The opening installment of "The Fighting Trail," the new Vitagraph serial in fifteen episodes, written by J. Stuart Blackton and Cyrus Townsend Brady, is called "The Priceless Ingredient," and deals with a struggle to control a powerful explosive the use of which would go far in settling the Great War. One ingredient is very difficult to obtain, a young mining engineer named John Gwyn, having a secret source of supply. The Central Powers attempt to gain possession of it, and stop at nothing in their efforts. With a motif such as this, it should be easy to build up a powerful story, and vindicate the claims of the Vitagraph that the serial is one of the best adventure tales ever filmed.

The cast has been well selected. William Duncan has the brawn and brains to portray the mining engineer, and Carol Halloway, as Nan Lawton, his sweetheart, appears as a Western heroine of the particularly feerless type. George Holt, Joe Ryan, Walter Rodgers, H. Ducrow and Charles Wheelock are prominent members of the cast.

World Film Prepared for Emergencies

Its Reserve of Brady-Mades Carry It to February, 1918—List of Available Subjects.

WORLD Pictures, Brady-made, are now completed for publication far beyond the beginning of 1918. This is the result of steady accumulation in following out the policy long ago established by Director General William A. Brady, under which the rate of manufacture has been considerably in excess of the volume of issue.

The outcome has been brought about not by speeding up the making of each picture—which might have affected the quality of the product to some extent—but by increasing the number of plays simultaneously in process of production. For months the World studio and outdoor stage at Fort Lee have been occupied constantly by at least six working photoplay companies all the time.

The situation thus developed places World Pictures in a very advantageous position. It enables the director general to correct any minor defects that may come to notice on repeated private showings of a given picture, permits of a complete shift of publications whenever a particularly timely play comes along (as for instance "Rasputin, the Black Monk"), and supplies a constantly swelling list of tangible assets.

Further, in case of any sudden upheaval of general business affairs, the World interests would find it possible to cease making productions for some months without interrupting the regular series of releases. Of course, no such situation is at all likely to arise, but the World executives obviously perceive the advantage of being ready for emergencies, unforeseen and otherwise.

Following are the World Pictures Brady-Made, in the order of their publication up to and including the week of February 11 of next year:

September 24, Ethel Clayton in "The Woman Beneath;" October 1, Lew Fields and Madge Evans in "The Corner Grocer;" October 8, all star cast, headed by Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Arthur Ashley, Julia Dean, Henry Hull, Irving Cummings and Hubert Wilke in "Rasputin, the Black Monk;" October 15, Carlyle Blackwell, Madge Evans and Evelyn Greeley in "The Burglar;" October 22, Alice Brady in "The Maid of Belgium;" October 29, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "Shall We Forgive Her;" November 5, Ethel Clayton in "The Dormant Power;" November 12, Madge Evans in "The Little Patriot;" November 19, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "The Good for Nothing;" November 26, Kitty Gordon in "Her Hour;" December 3, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "A Creole's Revenge;" December 10, Montagu Love in "The Beast;" December 17, Ethel Clayton in "Easy Money;" December 24, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "The Ladder of Fame;" December 31, Kitty Gordon in "The Divine Sacrifice;" January 7, June Elvidge in "The Way of the Strong;" January 14, Alice Brady in "The Spurs of Sybil;" January 21, Madge Evans in "True Blue;" January 28, Ethel Clayton in "Stolen Hours;" February 4, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "Almost a King;" February 11, Kitty Gordon in "Making a Man Pay."

This list insures a definite program for twenty-one weeks, which is said in the offices of World Pictures to embrace a much greater number of releases than were ever made in advance by any other picture producing company.

NEW FARRAR SPECTACLE FINISHED.

The new Geraldine Farrar motion picture spectacle, staged under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille, "The Woman God Forgot," has been finished in California and marks the initial Farrar release through Artcraft Pictures. The last scenes for this production were staged in the Yosemite when Director De Mille took 200 people by special train to this beautiful section for several immense exteriors.

Supporting the famous diva in "Woman God Forgot" are many of the artists who appeared with her in "Joan," including Wallace Reid, Raymond Hatton, Hobart Bosworth, Walter Long, Charles B. Rogers, Olga Grey, as well as Theodore Kosloff, the Russian dancer. The story is by Jeanie Macpherson, who also wrote "Joan."

A Three-Star Mutual Week

Mutual's Schedule for the Week of September 17 Contains Three Productions of Unusual Interest—Fischer, Day and Holmes Featured.

MARGARITA FISCHER, whose productions has been interrupted by illness, is starred in "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up," a five-reel comedy drama listed for September 17. Juliette Day, who deserted the footlights of Broadway for the Santa Barbara studios, is released in "The Rainbow Girl," a five-reel drama on the same date.

"The Lost Express," the first chapter of "The Lost Express," fifteen chapter Signal-Mutual photonovel, is scheduled for first run on Monday, September 17. The schedule for the week includes "Officer Jerry," a one-reel Cub Comedy, Mutual Weekly, the current events reel and Reel Life, the one-reel magazine of the film.

Miss Fischer comes back in pants. "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up" is a rollicking comedy and provides Miss Fischer with a role well suited to her abilities. She wears middy and trousers, an over-sized dress suit and adorable pajamas. She is a mischievous college girl, loved by a British nobleman who masquerades in his valet's place while his valet is being lavishly entertained by the girl's stepmother and her daughters at papa's home in the mountains.

The plot brings in a dozen intricate and comical situations which provide Miss Fischer with splendid chances for fast comedy action. The picture isn't all funny, for there are a lot of serious situations and Miss Fischer wears her most becoming gowns in most becoming style.

Miss Fischer's illness followed the production of "The Devil's Assistant," and she has spent most of the summer recuperating. "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up" shows that she has regained her health and her energy and that she is the same beautiful Margarita who scored so heavily in "The Pearl of Paradise" and "Miss Jackie of the Navy."

Miss Day, star in "Upstairs and Down," during its successful run on Broadway, went to the Pacific Coast early in the spring to produce a series of pictures for the American Film Company for Mutual release, and "The Rainbow Girl" is the first completed for presentation. "The Rainbow Girl" deals with a couple of young folks who loved each other but thought that the other loved somebody else.

Miss Day's value at the box office lies in her fame on the legitimate stage, but that is quite sufficient to attract the crowd. When Broadway will part with its money, night after night, to see an actress and she reaches the point where she is styled a hit, photoplay fans want to see her on the screen. Miss Day is declared to screen well and she is known to be a clever little actress. "The Rainbow Girl" is a crack story. The picture was directed by Rollin S. Sturgeon.

"The Lost Express," the serial release for the week of September 17, has been pronounced a corking photo-novel by the reviewers who have seen the opening chapters. It opens—bing—with the mysterious disappearance of a trainload of valuable documents. A band of pirates has raided the laboratories of old General Thurston to steal his formula for granulated gasoline and the old general himself has been shot in the fight. His daughter Helen, played by Miss Helen Holmes, orders that the documents in his safe be removed to a safety vault in a nearby city and charters a train to take them. Between stations the whole train disappears.

"The Lost Express" will be released, a chapter at a time, for fifteen weeks. The chapters are in two reels each. The production was directed by J. P. McGowan, celebrated for his stage management of photo-melodrama starring Helen Holmes, acknowledged to be the most fearless of motion picture actresses. It was produced by the Signal Film Corporation.

The Cub comedy "Officer Jerry," released on September 20, gives George Ovey the role of a masquerading policeman in which he goes through a series of humorous situations. Reel Life No. 73, the release of September 20, carries scenes showing the making of army rifles, running an aeroplane without danger, portrays the principle of the gyroscope and animated drawings from Life. Mutual Weekly, scheduled for September 19, includes current events up to the time the reel is assembled.

ESSANAY-CHAPLINS TO BE REISSUED.

Essanay has bowed to the call of the public for its famous Charlie Chaplin comedies and will put out new prints of all the Essanay-Chaplin productions. The first one will be offered on September 15, and one a month will be issued thereafter. "The Champion," with a screen time of approximately thirty minutes, will head the program.

This will be followed by other equally humorous comedies, including "In the Park," "By the Sea," "A Woman," "Shanghied," "Work," "A Jitney Elopement," "The Bank," "A Night in the Show," and others. They will be distributed through the General Film Company, Inc.

These comedies were all made in the heyday of Chaplin's popularity and have been held by both critics and the public to be the very best of his pictures.

The Essanay Company has issued a warning that it will prosecute any person making, distributing or renting spurious company in its fight for picture honesty if exhibitors will kindly report such abuses.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Corporation.

SELIG WORLD LIBRARY NO. 17 (Selig), September.—In this number of the Selig World Library will be found the following subjects well illustrated: "The Mussel Pearl Industry"; "American Beach Resorts," and "The Sugar Industry of Java."

THE WANDERING BOY AND THE WAYWARD PARENTS (Essanay).—A George Ade fable in two reels. This is a very amusing subject that will entertain the intelligent. Rodney La Rock does the best work we have seen him do. The moral of this fable is that if you want to see city life you must go to the country. A review of this picture is printed elsewhere.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM (Sept. 3).—A gem of motion picture production, resourceful in all departments, with Mary Pickford in what may be justly called her finest impersonation. A screen story well calculated to please old patrons and bring a host of new ones to the theater.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

TRIUMPH, September 3.—A five-part photoplay from a story by Samuel Hopkins Adams; directed by Joseph De Grasse. In the cast are Dorothy Phillips, Lon Chaney, William Stowell, William J. Dyer and Claire Dubrey. The tragedy is told as a tragic story within a story with a happy ending. The inside story has some strong moments. The story hinges upon a theatrical manager's improper advances to the leading lady of his show. This is followed by a murder and two suicides. A review of this photoplay was printed in last week's issue.

A STORMY KNIGHT, September 10.—Franklyn Farnum is featured in this mystery story. Opposite him is Brownie Vernon. The story gets away to an excellent and a picturesque start, but the interest lets down in the last two reels. The subject is reviewed in another column.

Butterfly Pictures.

THE LITTLE PIRATE, September 10.—A five-reel story, by Norris Shannon, featuring Zoe Rae, Burwell Hemerick, Gretchen Lederer and others. This will perhaps make its strongest appeal to children, as it concerns a boy and girl who run away to become pirates. The story interest is moderately strong and the presentation is consistent. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Greater Vitagraph.

BOBBY'S SECRET (Vitagraph).—This is a one-reel Bobby Connelly picture with Aida Horton poor again and lame. The story was written and directed by Charles M. Seay. It is a clumsy story within a story. The inside story is fairly entertaining. Bobby's parents leave him in care of the maid who begins to receive presents of jewelry from an admirer. When the parents return, Bobby's bank that had ten ten-dollar gold pieces in it is found empty. The maid is accused, and then Bobby tells the long inside story, which is the main story. He finds the poor lame girl, and takes her to a hospital and pays for the operation. The best scene is where a dog, thrown into the river in a weighted bag, is rescued by Bobby's pal and taken home for Aida.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

MEN OF THE DESERT (Essanay), September 24.—This is a Western picture that is certain to win high favor. It is of the new Western type, affording much that is satisfying to the spectator. Jack Gardner, Ruth King and Carl Stockdale play the principal roles with fine spirit. Director Van Dyke is to be complimented for the art and care bestowed on the production. A detailed review appears in last week's issue.

FOOLS FOR LUCK (Essanay), October 8.—A clean, wholesome photo-comedy, abounding in mirthful incidents, in which Taylor Holmes and Helen Ferguson appear as the lovers—ably directed by Lawrence Windom. An extended review appears on another page in this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

TO THE DEATH, August 27.—A five-part Metro production, presenting Olga Petrova in a story of Corsican revenge, tragic in theme, but having a conventional happy ending. A review is printed on another page of this issue.

MUSIC HATH CHARMS (Drew), September 3.—This is not the best of the Drew comedies by any means. At the same time it is capable of getting a laugh. The subject is presented amusingly, and deals with the effect which the music played at the wedding ceremony has on the bride. In one instance Mr. Henry learns by accident of the quadruplettes were the result of the playing of the quartette from "Rigoletto"; and when on the anniversary of his own marriage his wife in reminiscent tones reminds him of the various things which happened on their wedding day, among them the playing by the orchestra of the sextette from "Lucia" a closeup of Mr. Henry's face suggests nervous prostration. We venture to say that none but the Drews could present such a subject in comedy without offense.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 138 (Gaumont), August 22.—Items of interest in this issue show us our boys learning the art of trench digging, motorcycles climbing a rocky grade, Colorado honoring her soldiers, and presenting each with a $10 gold piece, army lumber taking a 1,500 mile journey on a log raft, and 1,800 student officers receiving their commissions at Fort Meyer, Va.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 139 (Gaumont), August 29.—The launching of a big steel freighter at Seattle opens this number. Other interesting sights are the mobilization of camera men at Los Angeles for war service, the speedway triumph at New York City won by De Palma, General Pershing visiting French munition factory, and Norman Ross winning the swimming championship at Golden Gate, San Francisco.

REEL LIFE NO. 73 (Gaumont), September 20.—The subjects in this number of Reel Life are "Weaving the President's Portrait"; "Running an Aeroplane Without Danger;" "The Principle of the Gyroscope," and "Student Officers." An interesting and well-illustrated number.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

LOST IN TRANSIT (Pallas), September 3.—A typical George Beban subject, with lighter touches and pathos. A fine picture, as is set forth in a review in another column.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

WAR AND THE WOMAN (Thanhouser), September 9.—A five-reel war melodrama featuring Florence La Badie. The picture tells an imaginative story of what might have been had a foreign enemy invaded this country. There are no battle scenes. Spies and other war followers are seen in the picture. It is melodrama pure and simple, and as such should interest. A longer review can be found in the review columns.

THE ANGEL FACTORY (Astra), September 23.—A five-reel picture featuring Antonio Moreno and Helene Chadwick. It is at all times interesting and has an idea that scratches below the surface. While the story centers around a girl of the slums and a wealthy settlement worker, it carries the idea of uplift. The story is full of suspense and interest. Reviewed in the review columns of this issue.

THE AIR PERIL (Astra), September 30.—Chapter No. 3 of "The Seven Pearls" serial. The story speeds up considerably in this number, and Mollie King in the role of Ilma creates more mystery and goes through more adventure. The chapter ends showing her bound to a balloon that is released by a man who murdered his brother for one of the pearls.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 87 (Universal), August 29.—An entertaining and diversified number, picturing various war activities on land and sea, burning of an Armour ice plant in Illinois, car strike in San Francisco and other features.

CURRENT EVENTS, NO. 17 (Universal), September 8.—Graduation exercises at West Point, annual baby parade at Asbury Park, bathing suit styles in Chicago and many war scenes are included in this instructive number.

A PRAIRIE CHICKEN (L-KO), Rel. Week of September 17.—Myrta Sterling is featured in this two-reel comic, playing the part of a fat, roly-poly Western girl who goes East to visit relatives. She shocks the effete Easterners with her uncouth ways, and some amusing situations result. This is free from offense and is well up to the average of this company's productions.

HAWAIIAN NUTS (Joker), Rel Week of September 17.—A comedy number, by William Beaudine, featuring Gale Henry, William Franey, Ed Baker and Milton Sims. Franey is designated by a secret order to procure a certain valuable ukulele. The plot rather fizzles out, but there are some very amusing situations of a nonsensical sort.

CIRCUS SARAH (Joker), Rel. Week of September 17.—A comedy number, by Tom Gibson, featuring Gale Henry and Milton Sims. The circus manager, in financial straits, meets Gale and invites her to do bareback riding. Her awkward attempts at this are funny, though there is not much to the plot as a whole. It makes a fair subject.

THE PULLMAN MYSTERY (Gold Seal), Rel. Week of September 17.—A three-reel subject by Robert von Saxmer, featuring Hayward Mack, Molly Malone, Ray Hanford, Larry Peyton, T. D. Crittenden, Fred Montague and Josephine Sedgwick. The story is of the melodramatic type and has no particular plot novelty. The action and continuity are good, however, and it makes a fairly strong offering. It begins with a murder committed during some labor troubles. The hero, accused of the crime, impersonates a man supposed to be dead, but in the end reveals his true identity. The real murderer then makes a confession of his crime. There is the usual love story.

WELCOME HOME (Nestor), Rel. Week of Sept. 17.—A comedy subject, by Fred A. Palmer, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts. Lee Moran is amusing in the part of the hobo who observes the "game laws" and refuses to shoot snipes under two inches in length. The plot is not particularly strong, but the subject proves quite entertaining. The close is rather conventional.

THE RIGHT MAN (Star Featurette), Rel. Week of September 17.—A two-reel subject, by M. McCall, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, E. M. Wallack, Edith Johnson and Charles Cummings. This tells of a young bank clerk, in love with the president's daughter, who is found guilty of embezzlement, though the job was put up on him by another. He goes West and later a friend tells him the true facts. He hastens back home, just in time to interrupt the wedding of the girl to the real villain. This makes a good offering of the slightly melodramatic sort, and is enacted by a pleasing cast.

MARATHON MANIACS (Victor), Rel. Week of September 17.—A comedy number, by Craig Hutchinson, featuring Dave Morris, Max Asher and Gladys Tennison. This has a "sporting" flavor, most of the scenes transpiring in a training quarters. It is an amusing and successful offering of the type. The reel closes with a footrace.

THE LAST OF THE NIGHT RIDERS (Bison), Rel. Week of September 17.—A two-reel subject, by Jack Cuningham, featuring Fred Church, Eileen Sedgwick, Frank Lanning, Leonard Clapham and others. This begins with the incendiary firing of a tobacco warehouse by some Southern night riders, and the story deals with the efforts of the hero and his father, the sheriff, to bring the miscreants to justice. The plot is melodramatic at times and none too convincing. At the same time the scenes are picturesque and the action good.

THE POISONED RING (Universal Special), Rel. Week of September 17.—Episode No. 12 of "The Gray Ghost." This is an eventful number, in which the arch vilain fulfils his threat to call upon the commissioner of police. He does so and by a trick escapes with the valuable pearls. The ring is also returned to Morn Light, but has been poisoned, and the last reel closes just as she is about to place it on her finger.

Hart's Initial Artcraft Finished

"The Narrow Trail," to Be Released Next Month, Marks Double Debut of Star as Author and Artcrafter.

WILLIAM S. HART'S initial Ince-Artcraft production, "The Narrow Trail," has been finished at the Lasky studios in California. This photoplay marks a double debut for "Big Bill," so to speak, in that it presents him for the first time as an Artcraft star and also presents his initial endeavor as an author. The story was scenarioized by Harvey Thew. In writing the tale Mr. Hart has not forgotten the popularity of his Pinto pony Fritz and has given his horse particular opportunity to display his talents for the benefit of his many admirers.

The story has to do with Ice Harding, a notorious Western bandit, whose beautifully marked pinto makes him an easy mark for the members of the law who are hunting him and his gang. The wonderful speed and endurance of the animal keeps the outlaw safe from the sheriff and his posse, but finally the animal causes considerable trouble for its master, who refuses to part with his best pal. A romantic theme is also involved in the story when the outlaw falls in love with his ideal of a girl and turns over a new leaf only to be suddenly confronted with the belief that his new faith has been shattered.

Among the thrills offered in the picture are daring feats in horsemanship, a stirring fight between Hart and two opponents, and an exciting horse race with crowded grandstands, offering a surprise climax to the story.

"MADAM WHO" MISS BARRISCALE'S FIRST RELEASE.

Bessie Barriscale's first Paralta release will not be Grace Miller White's "Rose o' Paradise," as at first announced. Instead, Harold MacGrath's "Madam Who," Miss Barriscale's second Paralta production, will be presented in October and will be followed by "Rose o' Paradise."

Mrs. White's story may be termed an emotional optimistic romance in which the principal characters, "Jinnie Singleton," played by Bessie Barriscale, "Lafe Grandeken," acted by Howard Hickman, and "Peg," impersonated by Edythe Chapman, are beset by poverty, intrigue and danger and yet they form a "Happy in Spite" club, in which they find inspiration to see in every disappointment and disaster—"it happened for the best."

Mrs. White's story has attracted much attention because of her very beautiful handling of its optimistic theme. The result has been that over one hundred "Happy in Spite" clubs have been formed throughout the country.

A nation-wide publicity campaign in connection with "Rose o' Paradise" and its optimistic clubs has been inaugurated and will reach and interest over one million people before the picture is released. A special picture edition of the story will also be issued to further the promotion of these "Happy in Spite" clubs.

"The Pullman Mystery" Leads Universal

Mystery Drama, Several Rollicking Comedies and Three Big News Features Complete Strong List for Week of September 18.

THE PULLMAN MYSTERY," a Gold Seal drama, released Tuesday, September 18, heads Universal's schedule for the week of the 17th. On the previous day, released under other arrangements, "The Spindle of Life," is the regular Butterfly feature for the week. "The Pullman Mystery" was written by Robert Von Saxmar and Jack Cunningham, Charles Swickard being the director in charge. An excellent cast, including Molly Malone, Larry Peyton, Hayward Mack and Ray Hanford, is provided. The story is built around the masquerading adventures of Paul Dustin who, an innocent suspect of a murder, the immediate circumstances of which seemed to incriminate him, dons the clothing of a suicide whose body he discovered in a compartment by his losing fight for the affections of the heroine, confesses with his dying breath, and Dustin is able to clear himself of suspicion in the mystery of the Pullman car.

A clothes-changing episode under decidedly different circumstances is one of the high spots in the Nestor one-reel comedy, "Welcome Home," released on the same date. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are the chief fun makers, with Edith Roberts playing the part of Eddie's innocent wife, who didn't get Eddie's letter announcing his return—because Eddie never mailed it.

The release for Wednesday, September 19, is a rattling good two-reel L-Ko comedy entitled "A Prairie Chicken," directed by Vin Moore. Merta Sterling plays the part of the "Chicken," who pays a visit to her blaze city relatives and gives them a shock upon shock by indulging in all her ranch accomplishments, even to shooting at the feet of the butler. She squares herself with the family when she gives chase to a thief who has stolen her aunt's jewels, pursues him to the edge of a drawbridge, ropes him and recovers the jewels.

Thursday, September 20, is the date of release of another of the popular J. Warren Kerrigan features in two reels, this one being entitled "The Right Man," by E. M. McCall and William Parker, directed by Henry McRae. It is a highly exciting story of the rivalry of two suitors for the same fair lady's hand. They are employees of the same bank, and the president's daughter is the girl in the story. One of the rivals tampers with some bank notes, casting suspicion upon the other, who loses his job, girl and all. But truth finally prevails and the marriage of the girl to the wrong man is prevented, after a series of thrilling adventures, in the nick of time. "Hawaiian Nuts," a Joker comedy, is released the same day. It was filmed under the direction of W. W. Beaudine.

"Marathon Maniacs," a Victor comedy, is scheduled for Friday, September 21. Max Asher, Dave Morris and Gladys Tennyson are featured and a riotously funny "Marathon race" is staged. Universal Screen Magazine No. 37 is scheduled for the same day.

For Saturday, September 22, a thrilling Bison drama, "The Last of the Night Riders," is the offering. As the name implies, it is a story of the night-riding days in Kentucky, in which the course of true love is decidedly ruffled by the enmity between the riders and the officers of the law. "Circus Sarah," a Joker comedy, written and produced by Allen Curtis, the scene of which is laid under the "big top," completes the bill.

October Keystone Comedies Completed

Girls and Favorite Comedians Are Prominent in Two-Reel Triangle Mirthmakers.

DUE to the system recently inaugurated at the Triangle west coast studios, productions are being made a month or two in advance of their release dates in order that they may be at the exchanges in time for exhibitors' pre-release showings. With new directors and players already added to its large staff, the Keystone company has been in a position to complete all October productions during August and early September.

"His Crooked Career" with the blond Keystone siren, Claire Anderson, and the character comedian, Fritz Schade, is scheduled as the first October release, the week of the 7th. Robert Milliken, who has been in pictures a comparatively short time, flashes forth as a new type of the comedy species in this Keystone.

The Keystone beauties in a fashion show will be one of the features of "Pearls and Perils," released October 14. A classic dancer, Alice Maison, is among the featured players, who include Dora Rogers, Alatia Morton, Harry McCoy, George Hall and Lloyd Bacon.

Dale Fuller, George Binns and Maude Wayne are the comedy trio appearing in a picture called "A Hindu Hoodoo," the October 21 feature. Binns is a get-rich quick gentleman of the Wallingford school. By day he is a city editor; at night he is Swami Swobodi, crystal-gazer. Guy Woodward, Eddie Gribbon and Mal St. Clair also have important roles in the comedy, which was directed by H. Raymaker.

Myrtle Lind and Jay Dwiggins are the victims of "A Seminary Scandal," the comedy scheduled for the last week in October. They are supported by two of the Keystone featherweights, Caroline Rankin and Martin Kinney. The Keystone beauty squad will be represented by Rose Carter. Aileen Allen, the champion driver, is another siren of the bathing scenes.

Foreign Buyers Explain Aims

Organization Hopes to Eliminate Middlemen—New Credit System Planned—Affiliated With Lee Organization.

THE formation into an association of the foreign film buyers resident in this country, and the affiliation of that body with the organization of state rights buyers promoted by Joseph F. Lee, marks a departure in the manner of handling films for foreign exploitation. The prime purpose of the new foreign buyers' organization, which became such mainly through the efforts of Jacques Kopfstein, will be the centralization of the buying of films for the foreign market. Under the plan the individual broker and dealer in foreign rights is eliminated. The buyers now will deal direct with the manufacturers through their organization.

The association will rent offices, where each of its members will be housed. Vaults, packing and shipping rooms will be engaged, to be used for the joint benefit of all the members. A screening room will be built, to be used only for association purposes and exclusively for the use of members. Notices of films offered for the foreign market will be posted on the board and in this wise it will be possible for all members to view a film at one time and make a combination offer for all territory outside the United States and Canada.

The greatest problem which today confronts the foreign buyer is the transfer of credits from abroad to this country, and the long delays necessitated by the prevailing system of money transfers. "Cash against documents" often causes film to be held up for a long period. As a consequence, the foreign buyer must have large sums of money tied up in the banks here in order that he can get delivery of film, and where transfers are slow or the buyer operates on a limited amount, he is almost certain continually to change his schedule of releases and shipments because of this unfortunate condition. Mr. Kopfstein is negotiating with one of the largest American banking houses engaged in the foreign business to act as factors to the members of the association, and if satisfactory arrangements are concluded, members of the foreign buyers' association will be enabled to operate on about one-quarter of the ready cash capital they have required heretofore.

The following countries, comprising ninety-five per cent. of the film buying foreign territory, are represented in the new organization: France, Francisco Elias; England, David P. Russell; Italy and Switzerland, The Royal Cinema Corporation; Australia and New Zealand, the Progressive Film Company of Australia; Scandinavia, the Scandinavian Films Company; Philippine Island, C. W. Thompson; Cuba, Santos and Artigos; Central America, the Las Americas Company; Mexico, Kopfstein and Thomas; Spain and Portugal, Alfonso and Guinea; Brazil, Frederick H. Knocke; Argentine, Chile and Uruguay, The Sociadad General Cinemetografica (Leroy Garfinkle, representative); Japan, U. Ono; Russia, David P. Rissell; Peru and Bolivia, Charles Thompson; India, Symington, Cox and Company; The Far East, David P. Howells; the West Indies, Frederick H. Knocke, and Greece, Alexander Stathopoulo.

Offices for the new association will be engaged jointly with the Lee state rights organization at a very early date.

NEW YORK RIGHTS ON "TODAY" AND "MAD LOVER" SOLD.

Pathe announces that the rights for the state of New York on "Today," with Florence Reed, and "The Mad Lover," with Robert Warwick, have been sold to the Civilization-Pioneer Film Corporation.

"Today" is the refutation of the theory which once held that a successful play suffered by transportation to the screen. In the opinion of competent critics "Today" as apicture is as great as the play was as a play. The punch, the vitality which Messrs. Broadhurst and Schomer put into the situations and dialogue of the spoken drama is retained and accentuated in the feature. Miss Reed adds materially to the laurels which she has gained as an emotional star of the first magnitude. It is called Ralph Ince's best work.

"The Mad Lover" enjoys with "Today" the distinction of being called by Harry Rapf, the producer, the two best pictures he ever made. Leonce Perret, who wrote and directed it, put into a rare beauty and finish. Elaine Hammerstein plays opposite Mr. Warwick.

MICHIGAN RIGHTS TO "WRATH OF GODS" SOLD.

The Dawn Masterplays Company, of Detroit, has purchased through Hiller & Wilk the Michigan rights to "The Wrath of the Gods," the reissue in which Sessue Hayakawa is the star.

Blumenthal Buys "Loyalty" and "Humility"

Entire Foreign Rights to Bernstein Production Purchased by Export and Import Executive.

THE Export and Import Film Corporation, Inc., have bought the world rights to the Isadore Bernstein productions "Loyalty" and "Humility," excepting the United States and Canada, and are at present negotiating for the sale of the entire territory. Ben Blumenthal, president of the organization, has had years of experience in Europe with the foreign market, and is one of the keenest judges of picture sales possibilities in the business. He has taken the rights to these pictures feeling that they are assured immediate success in the foreign field.

"We have bought these pictures," he said, "because they have a moral value and purpose, and although like all American made pictures, they have the happy ending, their structure and lesson cannot but appeal to the European audiences. I am glad to see that the American producer is finding courage enough to teach a definite moral lesson, undisguised, while possessing the ability to do it interestingly and convincingly. The pictures are well produced and well acted and filled with thrills from beginning to end. The foreign markets are demanding the American product at present, and we look confidently toward a brilliant future for these new releases.

"I feel that 'Loyalty' will present a great appeal to the foreign audience. It is the powerful story of a man conquering a great weakness with the help of a true woman. It is an arraignment of snobbery and the sham of false social position, which will not let itself see the real things that count in life. Under the pressure of the present crisis, people are daily realizing the futility and danger of this false attitude, and the picture will help to bring home the lesson. Added to this fact, the story, although crammed with thrills, does not see-saw up and down over climaxes, but maintains a tremendous dramatic tension, so dear to the European heart.

"The people abroad go to the theater not only to be entertained, but to be made to think, but they do not wish a problem merely presented and left to them to solve. They want it entirely worked out to a logical conclusion, and it is here that these pictures will successfully pass the test."

"A MORMON MAID" SOLD FOR NEW ENGLAND.

The Boston Photoplay Company has purchased the New England rights to the Friedman Enterprise feature, "A Mormon Maid," in which Mae Murray is the star. This is the feature which created so much discussion when it was shown at the Park theater, New York. It deals with pioneer days in Utah and it served to bring Mae Murray into the lime light as one of the few charming photoplay stars.

In addition to owning the New England rights to "A Mormon Maid" the Boston Photoplay Company controls the New England rights to "Joan the Woman," "The Common Law," "The Foolish Virgin," "The Price She Paid," "The Easiest Way," "War Brides," "Panthea," "The Argyle Case," "The Libertine," "Where Are My Children," "Wars' Women," "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Conquest of Canaan" and "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

LUST MAKES SEVERAL PURCHASES.

Sidney B. Lust, of the Super Film Attractions, Washington, D. C., has purchased "The Whip" for the District of Columbia, Delaware, Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina. The deal was negotiated for Paragon Films by Hiller & Wilk, as also was the deal whereby Mr. Lust obtained from the Lynch Enterprises, Inc., the rights for the same territory to "The Cold Deck." On his shopping trip Mr. Lust also purchased the rights to "The Wrath of the Gods."

SPITZER OPENS NEW YORK EXCHANGE.

Nat. H. Spitzer, sales manager of the King-Bee Films Corporation, announces that the Billy West Comedies are in such great demand that they have decided to open their own exchange for the State of New York. All the other state rights have been disposed of. King Bee releases two comedies a month.

FRIEDMAN ON WESTERN TRIP.

Benjamin Friedman, head of the Freidman Enterprises, Inc., left Minneapolis on Sunday, September 8, on a tour of exchanges of the Middle West and West. He will work in the interests of the Friedman Enterprises' "The Mormon Maid" during the trip.

ALBERT SCOWCROFT RETURNS TO OGDEN.

Albert Scowcroft, president of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, left New York for Ogden, Utah, Friday, August 31, after having seen the establishment of the Eastern executive office of that company well on its way. Mr. Scowcroft, before leaving, stated that his visit to the East was for the purpose of securing a competent Eastern manager of productions and general representative.

"Our Eastern organization now is completed," said Mr. Scowcroft, " and the second Lillian Walker extraordinary attraction will be made in the East; the third will be made at Ogden, Utah; the fourth at Los Angeles, and the remaining four of the first year's series also will be made in the East. I shall report to my co-directors the wonderful progress we have made and will present to them a plan of enlarged operations that will call for a scheme of advertising, publicity and exploitation the like of which never has been attemtped in the exploitaton of any individual star. We know we have made no mistake up to this point. What those plans are, however, cannot be given to the trade at this time, excepting to say that we hope to teach the photoplay public a few additional startling innovations that will convince them of the wonders that motion pictures can really perform. Several such innovations, we are advised by our attorneys, are patentable and we have already applied for patent rights on them. When I state that I hope to present to the world, through the medium of Ogden Pictures, a stereoscopic form of photography that will present the characters of the screen almost as if they were in the flesh and on the stage, you can well appreciate what I have in mind."

Mr. Scowcroft will return to New York at the completion of the production now being made in the East.

"THE FATED HOUR" READY.

Victoria Feature Films, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, have contracted to release Clines' six-reel sensational drama. "The Fated Hour," in the United States and Canada. It will likely be offered to state right buyers and the sales campaign will commence Sept. 15.

The picture had a big foreign run and is considered one of the few of the larger features that have attracted attention in Europe in the last year.

The punch of the picture is a thrilling fire scene, depicting the destruction of a theater. This particular effect is reported to never have been secured with such realism before. The star, Minichelli, has attained much publicity abroad.

"We had this ready for the market in June," stated a Victoria representative, "but it was not thought to be the best time to launch such a big picure. The result was that we locked it up in our vault, and it will stay locked there until Sept. 15."

A. KAY GETS LION HUNT FILMS.

The A. Kay Company announces that it has closed a deal with Bob Bakker, the celebrated lion hunter, in which it has secured for universal distribution the hunter's famous motion pictures of "Hunting Mountain Lions in Montana." The pictures are a distinct novelty and depict in master fashion the hunting of mountain lions in the rough, mountainous sections of the Rockies.

Bob Bakker comes from Libby, Montana, and holds the unique distinction of having captured more mountain lions than any man in America, and since most hunters are not over anxious to attempt to wrest these laurels from him, his championship and record are most likely to remain his for many years to come.

LESSER BUYS "TODAY" AND "THE MAD LOVER."

Sol L. Lesser has added to his ever-growing list of features the new seven-reel production, "Today," featuring Florence Reed, and the six-reel feature, "The Mad Lover," with Robert Warwick, for exploitation in California, Nevada and Arizona. The deal was consummated through his associate, Mr. Leon D. Netter, during Mr. Lesser's illness.

Mr. Lesser has now so far recovered from the attack of typhoid fever that Mr. Netter, who has been with him constantly, has found it possible to make a trip to Cleveland for a few days. From present indications, Mr. Lesser will be out of the hospital within a week.

LUST PLACES MOTOYS IN SEVEN THEATERS.

Sidney B. Lust, of the Super Film Attractions, Washington, D. C., distributor of the Peter Pan Film Corporation's Mo-Toy Comedies for Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina and District of Columbia, announces that these comedies have been placed in the following theaters: Garden, Strand, Lyric and Navy, Washington; American, Hopewell, Va.; Strand, Petersburg, Va., and American, Norfolk, Va.

INTERNATIONAL VAMPIRE IN METRO-DREW COMEDY.

Evelyn Dumo, "the international vampire," will be seen in the forthcoming Metro-Drew comedy, "The Unmarried Look," in the role of the newest and smartest type of vampire. She is the "lady buyer" from "the provinces," in the big city to get a new stock of goods for her firm, and all the amusement possible for herself.

STANDARD MAN GETS ST. LOUIS CONTRACTS.

Phil L. Ryan, sales manager of the Standard Film Corporation, paid a visit to the organization's St. Louis office, which resulted in the securing of several large contracts from the local theater men on the Billy West comedies, which the Standard is handling throughout the Middle West. Mr. Ryan's visit extended over a period of sixteen days, a part of which time was given over to the consideration of the many new angles of the sales problem in the St. Louis territory, which is now under the management of "Barney" Fegan.

Mr. Ryan, who is also advertising manager of the Standard, gives considerable credit to a persistent advertising policy for his success in selling the Billy West comedies not only in St. Louis, but in other cities served by the Standard as well. "We have," said Mr. Ryan, "virutually created this question in the mind of the theatergoer: why has not my theater manager booked the Billy West comedies? And the theater manager is not the last person in the world to sense the existence of this question, either as is illustrated in the case of Messrs. Cella & Tate, the leading exhibitors of St. Louis, who operate the Columbia and several other theaters there.

"Cella & Tate have arranged with us for the Billy West comedies for a run of fourteen days in their theaters, and Mr. Cella was frank in admitting that, aside from the value of West as a drawing card and a comedian, he was booking him because of the accumulative interest-force of advertising that we have placed in the St. Louis and surrounding papers."

STRAND BOOKS FIRST WALT MASON STORY.

The Short Features Exchange of New York announces that it has arranged with Manager Harold Edel of the Strand theater, New York, whereby "Bunked and Paid For," the first of the series of Walt Mason Stories, which are now being made by the Filmcraft Corporation, was shown at that theater during the week commencing September 9. Mr. Edel expressed himself as highly delighted with the picture, and his placing it on the Strand program confirms the fact that he was well pleased with it.

RENOWNED OPENS PROJECTION ROOM.

Further evidence of the activity of the Renowned Pictures Corporation, located on the fourth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, is demonstrated by the opening of the new and up-to-the-minute projection room in their suite of offices. No effort has been spared to make an improvement over the projection rooms now being used in the trade. The result is a comfortable and handsomely furnished projection room where pictures can be screened under the most ideal conditions.

The projection room is at the disposal of the trade; perfect projection by a competent operator is assured.

"THE STAR BOARDER" (King-Bee).

Billy West, King-Bee's comedy star, has just completed his ninth two-reeler, entitled "The Star Boarder." In this number Billy is seen as the star boarder in a boarding house, in which most of the other boarders are pretty girls. But there are janitors, cooks, cows and lots of other things around the house in which Billy is the star boarder, and each furnishes the comedian with laugh-making possibilities that are taken advantage of to the full. Many of the scenes of "The Star Boarder" were made at a well-known seashore resort. Gil Gilstrom, Billy's director, has injected into the latest King-Bee release comedy action enough to satisfy even the most laugh-hungry appetite.

Zena Keefe Star in "Shame"

Considers Her Best Work Done in John W. Noble's Big Feature—Most Dramatic Role of Career, She Believes.

ZENA KEEFE, who in spite of her long stage career and many notable appearances in important picture productions, still enjoys the distinction of being one of the youngest stars in the theatrical firmament, will soon be seen in the leading role of the special state rights feature "Shame," recently completed by John W. Noble.

The new Zena Keefe vehicle, which is in seven reels, and which is said to represent ten weeks of Mr. Noble's greatest effort as a director, is considered by the beautiful little star as the most ambitious production in which she has ever appeared. "I deserve very little credit for my work in 'Shame,' although I must confess that I think it the best I have ever done," said Miss Keefe. "Every actress looks forward to a time when she will be given an opportunity to play a really great part in a powerful drama. I was just lucky enough to get my wish, that's all. Can you imagine a girl being placed in more dramatic situations than the little daughter of the hero of the trenches in 'Shame'? Why, I simply had to act."

Zena Keefe.

Miss Keefe is one of the interesting personalities of the stage that, starting as mere tots, practically grow up behind the footlights and act as naturally as they walk. She starred as a child, being closely identified with the remarkable success of "The Fatal Wedding" and later becoming an established vaudeville headliner. Her long engagement with the Vitagraph comedy made her a prominent screen star. Her experience there was followed by notable appearances in feature pictures, of which "Enlighten Thy Daughter" and "One Hour" are now enjoying exceptional popularity. Notwithstanding the fact that her stage and screen record equals that of many of the older stars, Miss Keefe is only twenty-one years of age, having been born in San Francisco on June 26, 1896.

More Cities Acclaim Italian War Films

William Moore Patch Announces Extraordinary Business—Chicago Run Extended—Plans Another New York Engagement.

PILING UP the success which has marked its presentation everywhere, the official Italian war pictures, "The Italian Battlefront," opened at the Garrick theater, Philadelphia, last week, to crowds which, on the first day, blocked Chestnut street, in a vain effort to gain admission. The production accomplished that which has never been achieved by any other picture shown in that city—the complete sell out of the house for a solid week in advance. The opening performance was attended by the Mayor of the city and other important public dignitaries, including the various foreign Consuls of the Allies stationed in Philadelphia.

As in the instance of Chicago, the run in Philadelphia is proving doubly remarkable, because of the presence of so many Americans in the audience. Although Philadelphia has a large Italian population, the interest and support accorded these war films by its native public easily equalled that given to them by the Italians. As has been pointed out before, this seems to be due to the fact that "The Italian Battlefront" is totally unlike any other war series heretofore presented in this country, introducing suspense, dramatic action, beauty, heroism and thrills, rather than horror.

William Moore Patch, under whose direction the American tour is being conducted, stated upon his return from Philadelphia to New York that the Chicago run, in the Auditorium theater had been extended to September 9, and that arrangements were being made whereby these pictures would be returned to the Forty-fourth Street theater, New York, where they played to unparalled business for four weeks. Mr. Patch said that the only reason the New York run had been interrupted was because of the total inability to obtain a theater along Broadway for Labor Day week.

Arrangements are already being made in quite a number of Western states, including Cleveland, St. Louis, Kansas, and in the East, Baltimore, Providence, Washington, Norfolk and similar centers.

Lubin and Sawyer Active

Heads of General Enterprises Inc., Plan "Warrior" Campaign—Negotiate Contract for Washington Film Building.

THE activities of General Enterprises, Inc., have attracted considerable attention in film circles during the past few weeks and interest culminated last week in the announcement by the firm that the United States and Canadian rights to "The Warrior" had been secured. The prime movers of General Enterprises, Inc., A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, propose to allot territorial rights to the master feature starring Maciste, the Herculean lead of "Cabiria," and already offers from prominent buyers are pouring into headquarters at 1600 Broadway, New York. A technically-planned exploitation campaign has been laid out by experts to properly assist the showmen who will exhibit "The Warrior," and many advertising novelties of a "different" nature have been devised. This trilling and timely feature controlled by General Enterprises, Inc., has been unanimously declared by New York theatrical and film critics a worthy successor to the famous "Cabiria," and Maciste actually outdoes himself in feature of strength and hair-raising, death-defying stunts.

Of equal importance is the statement issued by A. H. Sawyer to the effect that General Enterprises, Inc., has successfully negotiated a contract for the erection of a modern film building in Washington, D. C. This deal, highly significant to the Southern film trade, was closed Saturday, September 1, with Alonzo C. Mather of Chicago. The structure, to be known as the Mather building, will be a ten-story affair, completely equipped with vaults, a series of projection rooms, telegraph offices, express facilities, etc., and will be the last word in construction of this nature. Construction will commence on the new building Tuesday, September 4, located at 916 G street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

The new organization rapidly is increasing its scope in the buying of film rights and in line with this progress the foreign rights to the McClure Series of "The Seven Deadly Sins" have acquired. This series, starring eminent players of the silent and spoken drama, has met with sweeping success in this country and the securing of the foreign rights is considered a coup by wise film men.

HOFFMAN ABOLISHES RELEASE DATES.

"Ancient methods of booking subjects on release dates have been done away with by Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges," declared M. H. Hoffman, president and general manager of his organization, on his return a few days ago from his Western trip. "From now on there will be no such thing as a release date in any of our service stations.

"Every Hoffman-Foursquare exchange will be ready at any time to supply the demands of the exhibitor, and will release any desired feature the moment prints and advertising material are ready for runs. Because of this, exhibitors need not look for release dates on any picture we control. They merely have to examine our list of subjects available and act accordingly.

"There is one thing, however, I wish to emphasize: the elimination of release dates does not mean that there will be no protection of first, second or third runs in territories or towns. Each run will be amply guarded by our division and branch managers, whose instructions to salesmen will be clear in this most important matter.

"It is my belief that this policy—which I regard as a long step in the direction of advancement—will work to the advantage of both exhibitors and public. When an exhibitor requires a certain production we have we will see to it that he gets it. The fact that some of our pictures may not suit his need of that particular moment will not prevent him from getting those, of later production, which he can use.

"Priority runs, as one may readily see, can and will be protected under our system as well as any other. It is simply that our method has all the advantages of the old system and none of its disadvantages. An exhibitor interested in the tail-end feature may have it; 'the last will be first' whenever he says the word."

SCHWARTZ OBTAINS SHORT SUBJECTS.

Eddie Schwartz, of the Federal Feature Film Company, announces that he has just secured a large assortment of one, two and three-reel pictures from several film companies, for exploitation in New York State. The pictures consist of one-reel comedies, scenics and educations, two-reel comedies and dramas and a numbr of three-reel dramas. Several of the two and three-reelers are features in themselves, and each one of them is strong in plot and in cast. With this new addition of short subjects to his list of features, Mr. Schwartz plans to innaugurate a new service, which he will call the Federal's Short Picture Service. The new service department which Mr. Schwartz plans to put into effect will cater only to the wants of exhibitors who are desirous of obtaining short pictures of merit. Mr. Schwartz will manage this department in conjunction with his other duties, and will see to it that every exhibitor gets what he wants at a price within the reach of his pocketbook.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Beach Pictures on Separate Contract

Goldwyn Announces Its First Story by Author Will Be Ready for Trade Showing in Two Weeks.

THE productions of Rex Beach Pictures Corporation, which are to be distributed exclusively by Goldwyn, will be issued to exhibitors on contracts separate from those of the regular Goldwyn subjects and will be maintained as a distinct selling unit.

The officials of the Beach company—Mr. Beach, Benjamin B. Hampton, president, and Larry Trimble, director—announce that "The Auction Block" will be ready for the trade in a few days. Goldwyn plans to have enough prints for trade showings delivered to each of its branches in the United States and Canada within two weeks. The task of cutting and titling the film has proved to be a large one. More than 18,000 feet of film were exposed in the making of the picture, virtually all of which was good. Mr. Beach, who is doing his own subtitles, finds that brief conversational excerpts from the book serve to thread the picture story together. The continuity was so carefully done that even with a great deal of cutting he has not found it necessary to insert more than occasional explanatory leaders.

VICTOR MOORE IN "CAMPING."

Victor Moore gets back again to the "family series" in his Sept. 10 release called "Camping," written by Thos. J. Gray. Vic is a lover of fresh air, and decides that the best way to get it is to go "camping." He manages to induce his wife to go along with him and take the kids. He also takes his nephew, and two nieces. After equipping them with camping outfits, and also loading his Ford up with the necessary camping things they make a start. The car looks like a moving circus and the kids have the time of their young lives. Vic encounters many troubles en route to the camping place, the last one being the climbing of a mountain, which is very exciting and funny. He eventually arrives at a spot he thinks will do. The tent is put up, and camping life is on in full blast. Everything would have been ideal if it was not for a "would be" Indian who tries to scalp Vic. He nearly scares the daylight out of Vic, and only the arrival of an old hermit and the kids save him. They knock the spots out of the Indian, and the hermit takes him off in his custody. By this time the nightfall is coming on, and Vic and the family get in the sleeping bag, to get into the arms of Morpheus. It had to pick out that night to rain, and rain it does, as it never did before. Vic unfortunately built the trench around the tent the wrong way, and consequently the water runs in the tent instead of out. Added to this comes a gale, which blows the tent away, and they are all left standing in their "nighties." Vic makes them all get under the Ford, which he says is like a rich uncle, it always comes in handy.

"Camping" is the funniest "family" comedy Moore has made, and it is "chucked" full of laughs and ridiculously funny situations.

"THE CONQUEROR" (Fox).

In "The Conqueror," a Standard picture with William Farnum in the stellar role, which he presented at the Globe theater Monday night, September 10, William Fox believes a new standard has been set in motion picture production—a standard which, going further than the thrill and the spectacular in which "The Conqueror" abounds, affords a new and higher plane for dramatic exposition through the medium of the screen.

"The Conqueror" picturizes the heroic life and romantic times of General Sam Houston, known to every American as the Liberator of Texas. It is a cross-section cut out of American history in the making, and it holds intense interest for every citizen and resident of these United States.

There is probably no more romantic figure in American history than Sam Houston, and there is unquestionably no actor better equipped artistically as well as physically for the portrayal of Houston than William Farnum. Mr. Farnum's is said to be a masterly interpretation of a role in which his admirers will like him best.

Given Henry Christeen Warnack's engrossing, virile story, and the enormous facilities afforded by the unlimited resources of the Fox producing organization, it needed but the master hand of R. A. Walsh, the famous Fox director and the man who staged "The Honor System," to make of "The Conqueror" a photodramatic masterpiece. This Mr. Walsh has done.

"The Conqueror" was photographed in California, Texas and Mexico. It was six months in the making. In the making of the picture were 450 Sioux Indians secured through the Department of the Interior from the Pine Ridge Agency, and for whose safe return at the end of their artistic labors a bond of $50,000 was deposited. There were also Mexican soldiers, negroes from Southern plantations, Texas Rangers and regular Cavalrymen.

Prominent in Mr. Farnum's support are Jewel Carmen, who appears as Eliza Allen; Charles Clary, J. A. Marcus, and William Eagle Shirt, Chief Birdhead and Little Bear, Indians all.

HOLUBAR STARTS NEW PLAY.

Director Allen J. Holubar's next production will be entitled "The Twisted Soul," the story of which is by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton. It is a psychological drama in which heredity figures to a considerable extent and it will be produced in five reels.

Director Holubar's star in "The Twisted Soul" will be Miss Brownie Vernon, who although the only woman in the production, will be supported by an unusual cast, among whom will be Murdock MacQuarrie and William Garwood, two former well-known actors and directors at the Universal Company, who have returned to the fold.

Garwood will play the lead opposite Miss Vernon and the principal character lead will be in the hands of MacQuarrie, who ranks high in the cinema world for his remarkable character portrayals.

Others in the cast will be Myles McCarthy, whose legitimate stage work is well known; Joseph Girard and Charles Hill Mailes.

A Five-Star Pathe Week

Appearing in Features and Serials—French War Pictures, Cartoons and Scenics Complete Program.

THE Pathe program for the week of September 23 is characterized by two unusually big features, a very funny comedy and two strong serial episodes. The box office stars who appear on this program are Frederick Warde, Jeanne Eagles, Mollie King, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd.

The five-reel production of the week is Frederick Warde and Jeanne Eagles in "Under False Colors." It is an original story by Lloyd Lonergan, produced by Thanhouser under the direction of Emile Chautard, with one of the best starring combinations ever seen on the screen—the best known Shakespearian actor in America in the role of a modern financier, and the most charming young leading woman on the American stage in the role of a beautiful Russian countess, forced to take refuge in the United States under a false passport.

"The Bow String" is the title of the second episode of "The Seven Pearls" serial in which Mollie King is featured with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary.

The suspense of the first episode is heightened in the second, one of the features of which is a fight between two men dressed in armor and thus disguised as knights of old. As Ilma (Mollie King) starts toward the curtain, a hand steals out from behind it, takes the pearls and before she is able to untangle herself the indistinguishable figure steals out and escapes.

Pearl White stars in the 12th episode of "The Fatal Ring" entitled "The Desperate Chance." This chapter is characterized by breathless suspense and many thrills. At the point of a revolver in a fight on top of a fast moving train, Carslake and Pearl both fall off. Carslake rises and starts after the train, leaving Pearl lying prone across the track. With a northbound train only fifty yards from Pearl, Tom Carleton, after an exciting race in his automobile, manages to pull the switch in time to save her. Learning where Carslake is hiding, Pearl, accompanied by the Spider, Tom, and detectives, invades the house. After a terrific fight, Carslake opens a trap door in the roof and climbs out. Pearl comes out of the trap door as Carslake gets to the edge of the roof by the iron girder. As he starts over the girder Pearl pursues him. Thinking that this is a good chance to get rid of her, Carslake seizes her and as the film fades out, starts to bend her back, back, back.

The second big feature of the week is the three-reel Official French War Film entitled "In the Wake of the Huns." Pathe calls attention to the drawing power of this title "plastered all over town on the most striking paper you ever saw and advertised big in the newspapers."

"In the Wake of the Huns" is official. It is the first French picture of its kind to be seen in this country, and it is safe to say that the interest of the people of America is greater in what the French are doing than in the activities of any other belligerent, except Uncle Sam itself. These pictures show the actual French territory which has been recovered in the great Allied advance and in which the American troops will see their first action.

It is an impressive historical document, which is so absorbingly interesting that though it is only three reels in length it deserves the featured position in any theater's bill.

Harold Lloyd is seen in "Pinched," a one-reel comedy, produced by Rolin. It is one of the funniest of the Lloyd comedies. In it the star and Snub Pollard manage to get their clothes and identities mixed and both land in the police station with "a-laugh-a-foot" complications.

International cartoon and Scenic, and Hearst-Pathe News No. 78 and No. 79 complete an unusually strong program.

HERBERT BRENON AT WORK ON "EMPTY POCKETS."

The filming of Rupert Hughes' popular novel, "Empty Pockets," is now progressing rapidly at Herbert Brenon's Hudson Heights studios. "Empty Pockets" will be the Brenon production to immediately follow "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

In "Empty Pockets" Mr. Brenon has another swift moving romance. The story is built around the murder of a debonaire millionaire, "Merry" Perry Merithew, who is found dead on the dirty tin roof of an East Side tenement. Strands of a woman's red hair are clutched in his hands. This is the only clue. The mystery involves four Titian haired girls; one a millionaire's beautiful daughter; another a model installed by the dead man in a Central Park West apartment, the third the unscrupulous daughter of a bankrupt society matron, and the fourth a cabaret dancer married to a thug.

One of the thrilling incidents is a midnight motor chase back and forward across the island of Manhattan and ending at the edge of Spuyten Duyvil Creek. This is said to be one of the most thrilling things to yet reach the screen.

For the role of the heroic Doctor Worthing, Mr. Brenon has selected Bert Lytell, who scored so decidedly as the Lone Wolf. Reviewers pronounced him the genuine find of the past screen season.

Barbara Castleton has been selected to play Muriel Schuyler, the daughter of a money king, who is involved in the murder mystery. Miss Castleton is looked upon by Mr. Brenon as a distinct discovery.

Mr. Lytell and Miss Castleton have the principal roles. The other parts will be enacted by equally well known players since Mr. Brenon is a believer in the well balanced cast, rather than the top-heavy star cast.

"THE SPINDLE OF LIFE" (Butterfly).

Ben Wilson is the featured player of "The Spindle of Life," the Butterfly picture scheduled for release September 17th. He will be capably supported by Neva Gerber, Richard La Reno and Hayward Mack, who have prominent parts in a well-selected cast.

"The Spindle of Life" is a picturization of Sidney Robinson's novel, "Gladsome," arranged for the screen by Karl Coolidge and produced by George Cochrane.

It tells the story of the unconventional meeting of Gladsome

Scene from "The Spindle of Life" (Butterfly).

Harrison, an interesting young tomboy heiress, and "Alphabet" Carter, crown prince of America's financial realm, in a quaint seacoast town. Gladsome's mother, a wealthy widow, tries to bring her daughter up according to the latest approved mode of the smart set, but Gladsome would rather knock around in overalls with her old pals, the fishermen, than drink pink tea out of a Soissons tea-cup. This is a sore trial to mother, who would like to see Gladsome safely married to Vincent Bradshaw, the tiresomely correct son of her financial adviser.

One day on the sands Gladsome meets an interesting stranger, and they strike up a friendship which develops along unexpected lines, when the girl asks the "sandman" to help her devise a way to foil her mother and the ubiquitous Bradshaws. The way out of the resulting tangle is the occasion for considerable fun, interspersed with some good dramatic work, in which both Wilson and Miss Gerber score.

THE WEEK IN THE FOX STUDIOS.

William Fox's present schedule of releases calls for the issuing of "When a Man Sees Red," the powerful extra-reel drama with William Farnum in the stellar role during October. Frank Lloyd was the director. He filmed the picture from the story "The Painted Lady," by Larry Evans.

Jewel Carmen, who played opposite Mr. Farnum in this production, as well as several others, has been transferred from the Fox studios in California to the plant at Fort Lee, N. J., where Mr. Farnum is making "Les Miserables." Miss Carmen will have the role of Fantine in the production.

Work is progressing rapidly on Virginia Pearson's new starring vehicle, and on the first of a series of eight light comedy dramas starring the magnetic Jane and Katherine Lee. Miss Pearson's picture is to be called "Thou Shalt Not Steal," and is being directed by William Nigh. In the supporting cast are Claire Whitney, Eric Mayne, Robert Elliott, John Goldsworthy, Victor Delinsky, Dan Mason, Dan Sullivan, Lemuel Kennedy, Martin Faust and Mathilde Brundage.

The Lee children's subject is almost completed. Kenean Buel, who screened the highly successful "Two Little Imps," is again in charge of the direction.

George Walsh, the man who made the smile famous, has started another production on the West Coast. It will be his thirteenth photoplay.

The release for September 9 will be "When False Tongues Speak," in which Virginia Pearson has the chief part. The story is by George Scarborough and the direction is by Carl Harbaugh. Hardee Kirkland is the leading man.

"MEN OF THE DESERT" SHOWN BY K-E-S-E.

Trade showings of "Men of the Desert," the fourth of Essanay's series of Western photodramas, featuring Jack Gardner, the musical comedy star, are in progress at all branches of the George Kleine distributing system. This picture, presenting a screen version of the Taylor-Norris feud, one of the most notorious of the West, is said to be the strongest unit of this series. It will be released September 24.

Mr. Gardner is supported by Ruth King, Carl Stockdale and the remainder of the company, which has been seen with him in "Land of Long Shadows," "The Range Boss," and "Open Places." The picture was staged on the plains of Arizona and presents many picturesque settings. It has a screen time of approximately sixty-five minutes.

What Triangle Offers for September 16

"Mountain Dew" Has Kentucky Locale and Kentucky Star; William Desmond in "Flying Colors" Is Other Feature of the Week.

MARGERY WILSON'S first starring play, "Mountain Dew," will be released on the Triangle program for the week of September 16, together with "Flying Colors," in which William Desmond is starred.

Being a Kentucky girl, Miss Wilson is naturally adapted to her role in "Mountain Dew," which has as its locale the Blue Grass state. Miss Wilson is seen as a wild sprite of the mountains who knows nothing of "larnin'" and is not worried over the deficiency.

The Triangle comedy accompanying "Mountain Dew" is entitled "His Baby Doll." The players featured are Claire Anderson, Mal St. Clair, George Binns, Florence Clark and James Donnelly.

In "Flying Colors" Bill Desmond has the role of a Yale athlete who puts to practical account some of the dare-devil stunts he learned at college. A one-reel Triangle comedy will be presented as a demitasse for the program of which "Flying Colors" is the feature. It bears the title of "His Unconscious Conscience" and features Hugh Fay, Tom Persse, Phylis Hoover, Wm. Irving, Geo. Jessks, James Spencer and Jack Perrin.

"Hula-Hula Land" is the Keystone comedy for the week and brings forth the Keystone bathing girls, this time in grass skirts and strings of beads. Billy Armstrong, Maude Wayne and Guy Woodward disport at the head of this band of ukelele maids.

GAUMONT'S "REEL LIFE" NO. 74.

Californians regulate their watches when they reach their offices at 9 a. m. Chicago men perform this duty at 11. New Yorkers and other Easterners wait until they are ready for luncheon, at 12 o'clock. Strange though it may seem, all these timepieces are checked up at the same moment. The determining of exact noon by the Naval Observatory at Washington, for flashing throughout the United States, forms a most interesting subject which is shown in Reel Life No. 74, released the week of September 24.

President Washington's spectacles differed greatly from the curved lenses of to-day, which science has enabled even the poorest to wear. The manufacture of glasses which duplicate the best natural sight is another section of this film magazine.

That many are willing to fight if they can be assured of good bread is shown in "The Soldier's Staff of Life," which depicts the use of a portable bread-maker which the government used in seeking recruits. Last year the bean-eating aphides contributed to the shortage of another army standby, but this year we need too many beans to humor these plant lice, and so scientists have sicked lady-bugs onto them. Scientists are also working to get rid of the lamprey, a fish which has killed thousands of others because of its blood-sucking proclivities. These three subjects add to the variety of this issue of Reel Life.

"So Easy," an animated drawing from the leading humorous weekly, Life, closes a highly entertaining reel.

CANADIANS LOOK ON "POLLY OF THE CIRCUS."

A large audience crowded the Regent theater, Toronto, on Thursday, August 30, at an invitation showing of the first Goldwyn production, "Polly of the Circus." Prominent exhibitors from all over Ontario made a flying visit to the city for the purpose of seeing the results of a year's efforts on the part of the Goldwyn producing forces.

At the screening were prominent city officials, representatives from all of the city newspapers, besides practically every exhibitor in the city. The Regent Symphony orchestra, under the leadership of John Arthur, gave the musical setting. The audience showed its appreciation of the picture by hearty applause.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors who made the trip to the city especially to see the picture were: Clyde Curry, Favorite theater, Windsor; J. A. Walsh, Walkerville; John C. Green, Temple theater, Galt; William Stewart, Patricia theater, London; T. W. Logan, Majestic theater, London; Dr. Robinson, Empire theater, Peterboro; Ernest Moule, Brant theater, Brantford; F. Pursel, Lyric theater, Simcoe; James Sullivan and Jack Sullivan, King George theater, St. Catherines; J. Brady, Princess theater, Sarnia; Meighan and Roneigk, Academy theater, Lindsay; Mr. Simpson, Apollo theater, Guelph; Leo Longo, Roma theater, Kitchener.

"ANTICS OF ANN" NEW PENNINGTON PICTURE.

Ann Pennington has begun work on her new Paramount picture, a charmingly written little comedy entitled "The Antics of Ann." Edward Dillon is directing the production and a number of the interior scenes already have been made. It offers the young star an opportunity of proving that she is a comedienne of no small skill and in addition permits of her wearing many fetching costumes, including something new in the way of satin pajamas and bathing suits that were never made for the water, but which are nothing short of bewitching.

SELIG RELEASES ON GENERAL FILM.

"Over the Top to Victory" is the title of one of the latest of motion pictures announced by William N. Selig for release in General Film service on Monday, Sept. 24. The production is in two reels and should prove particularly interesting to the mothers and fathers, the wives, sisters and sweethearts of the young men who have become soldiers.

"Over the Top to Victory" is said to present as details of the development of America's young men into soldiers who will defend their country's honor in the battlefields of Europe. From daybreak until "Taps" are sounded, we follow the citizen-soldiers through their drills and pastimes.

For release Saturday, Sept. 29, the Selig Company announces the one-reel drama, "The Angel of Poverty Row," with winsome Bessie Eyton as the star. Colin Campbell directed this production, which is said to possess many of the characteristic touches which have made Colin Campbell famous as a director.

On Monday, Oct. 1, the Selig Company announces the release of a two-part Western drama entitled "The Rustler's Vindication," with daring Tom Mix performing many of his death-defying feats. Myrtle Steadman is also seen in an important part.

"The Witness for the State" is the title of the Selig one-reel release in General Film service for Saturday, Oct. 6. Bessie Eyton and Eugenie Besserer both have important parts in this one-reeler, which was also produced by Colin Campbell.

ACTIVITIES AT L-O STUDIOS.

With five directors working, General Director J. G. Blystone is turning out a supply of L-Ko's to last through the bad weather that is bound to come on the Pacific Coast. Noel Smith, Archie Mayo, Dick Smith, Phil Dunham and Vin Moore are rushing matters as expeditiously as possible.

Lucille Hutton has written a story which will be entitled "A Giddy Girl's Love," when it eventually becomes an L-Ko from Mr. Blystone's scenario. This is the first time Miss Hutton has done more than to act in other people's stories. If the expected success attends her first efforts as a screen novelist, she will probably write her own material hereafter.

Vin Moore has just completed a Western comedy and has started another feature with beginnings in Mexico and a finish in San Francisco. The work required a special steamer, on charter, to carry Myrtle Sterling and her company, as well as figuring in the scenes.

Because of the increased production of L-Ko's a new studio is under course of construction, with an addition to the main stage, occupying 80 x 120 feet. A new wardrobe department is also being outfitted, to meet the extra demands of five active producing organizations.

Hughie Mack, latest addition to the L-Ko comedy leaders, has just finished his first release. It will be sent along to exhibitors early in October through Universal exchanges.

LOIS WEBER HAS "THE TIME OF HER LIFE."

"The Time of Her Life" is the alluring title of the first of the new Lois Weber productions, which is now completed and ready for release. Any production by Lois Weber is an event of interest and curiosity to all exhibitors and film fans who look with confidence for something unusual and worth while in all plays bearing her name. "The Time of Her Life" will prove no exception to the rule, save that in this—her first independent production—this "dean" of directors has forsaken propaganda only to demonstrate the more dramatically the influence of home upon character and one's subsequent life and career. In her new play Miss Weber takes for her principal characters two girls working side by side in a big department store, to show how the influence of their respective homes so widely distinguishes their destinies. It is a big theme, handled with that fearless fidelity to facts and yet that unswerving idealism in purpose which distinguish all Lois Weber's productions. Mildred Harris, the former Fine Arts ingenue, is seen in the stellar role, supported by Helene Rosson, Kenneth Harlan, Adele Farrington, Gertrude Astor and Alfred Allen, of "Hell Morgan" fame—some cast. As for the play—well, see for yourselves, and remember it's Lois Weber's choice for the first independent release.

ALADDIN THE NEXT FOX KIDDIES RELEASE.

An early release of William Fox's kiddies pictures will be the picturization of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." This fairy story film has just been completed, and those who have seen the uncut film believe the picture will even surpass "Jack and the Beanstalk," the first Fox kiddies picture which has been so favorably received throughout the country since its most successful run at the Globe theater in New York in August.

It was felt by those who had seen "Jack and the Beanstalk" that the acting of Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin and the other children could not be bettered, but in "Aladdin" they have even gone beyond their work in "Jack." According to those who have seen the film the portrayal of those eastern characters is a revelation.

In one of the scenes the lamp is rubbed and a palace appears on the burning desert. And the desert itself gives to one an atmosphere that is romantic, mysterious and oftentimes consuming.

Paramount October Releases

Marguerite Clark, Billie Burke, Vivian Martin, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, Jack Pickford, Louise Huff, Sessue Hayakawa and Ann Pennington Among Stars Listed.

SOME inkling of the tremendous drawing power and wide variety of entertainment to be furnished by Paramount under its new "Star Series" selective booking system of distribution can be gained by that company's announcement of its releases for the month of October. The October list of Paramount releases furnishes a striking example of the combined strength represented by the various producing forces in addition to the tremendous producing organization already built up and perfected by Famous Players-Lasky. The October schedule marks the first appearance of a Blackton production on the Paramount schedule and also contains the first of the Paramount-Ince photoplays in addition to embracing such stars in its roster as Marguerite Clark, Billie Burke, Vivian Martin, Jack Pickford, Louise Huff, Sessue Hayakawa and Ann Pennington. The stellar forces of the Thomas H. Ince organization are represented by Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray. In the Blackton production, which is an adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's celebrated novel, "The World for Sale," the principal roles are played by Anna Little and Conway Tearle. The tentative arrangement of the schedule is as follows:

"The Ghost House," starring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, directed by Wm. C. DeMille, leads off. This is a story which has to do with an old haunted house and a band of criminals—which is enough to tell at present. Suffice that it is a picture calculated to thrill as well as entertain.

"Arms and the Girl," from the successful stage play, has as its bright particular star the lovely Billie Burke. This picture deals with the invasion of a Belgian town by the Germans and the scenes depicting this particular event are said to be so near the actuality as to be positively startling. Needless to say, in the stellar role, Miss Burke gives a charming performance. Joseph Kaufman directed the film and Thomas Meighan, who played opposite Miss Burke in her first Paramount picture, also supports her in this one.

"The Trouble Buster"—with Vivian Martin in the star role—is, as the title implies, another of the optimistic films for which Miss Martin is already famous. It is a "cheer-up" story with plenty of action.

"The Call of the East," starring Sessue Hayakawa, the eminent Oriental actor whose popularity in Paramount pictures is unquestioned, gives him a splendid chance for his dramatic ability, because it is a tale of modern Japan with a plot based on the racial conflict. Margaret Loomis supports Hayakawa, while Tsuru Aoki, Jack Holt and other well known Paramount players appear in the cast. The story is by Beulah Marie Dix and George Melford is director.

"The World for Sale," by Sir Gilbert Parker, directed and produced by J. Stuart Blackton, is a picture with a carefully chosen cast of type actors, and headed by Conway Tearle and Anna Little.

"Bab's Burglar," second of the "Sub-Deb" stories by Mary Roberts Rhinehart, directed by J. Searle Dawley, and starring Marguerite Clark, will further establish the popularity of the star in the role of ingenuous Barbara Archibald.

"The Son of His Father," offers Charles Ray, among the most popular of all the younger stars. The Ince picture is directed by Victor Schertzinger and stages a thrilling hand-to-hand fight that is said to be a "hummer."

Dorothy Dalton will make her first appearance in Paramount-Ince pictures in "The Price Mark," an exceptionally powerful drama such as those with which the name of Mr. Ince and Miss Dalton have already been indelibly associated.

Ann Pennington, the Ziegfeld Follies star, who has already made an enviable reputation in Paramount pictures, returns to the screen after a successful season upon the stage in "The Antics of Ann," a delightful comedy written especially for her.

From the foregoing list of attractions it need scarcely be repeated that October is certain to be a memorable month in the history of Paramount, where every month is notable. It is the logical beginning of the Fall season in motion pictures and a more auspicious opening could hardly be desired, and while it is to be expected that Paramount should take front rank position, it is at least worthy of note that in the October list there appear the names of not only several new stars—new that is on the Paramount schedule, but already established favorites with the film-going public; several authors of world wide prominence, and, withal, a series of offerings that should supply every exhibitor's need.

GREAT FIGHT IN "WHEN A MAN SEES RED."

A motion picture director's word is law to the players in his company. Actors carry out his commands by instinct. While making the Fox production of "When A Man Sees Red," one of the Standard pictures soon to be released, William Farnum stood facing G. Raymond Nye, preparatory to the great fight scene. Nye, like Farnum, was known affectionately as "Bill." Suddenly Frank Lloyd, who directed the picture, called out: "Hit him Bill!" The two players both struck, and went at it hammer and tongs. When Lloyd was asked afterward which "Bill" he meant he smiled.

"THE NURSE OF AN ACHING HEART" (L-Ko).

Eva Novak, Chester Ryckman, Eddie Barry and Bob McKenzie are featured in the forthcoming L-Ko that General Director J. G. Blystone has captioned "The Nurse of an Aching Heart." In this work Archie Mayo shows himself for the first time as a director of L-Ko's. As this is his first L-Ko, it may be his last one, for the reason that the Board of Examiners in Hollywood, Cal., have given him his "number" and he awaits the final call to arms. As the title would indicate, "The Nurse of an Aching Heart" is located in a hospital where Eva Novak, as a nurse, does some heroic work. Comedy situations have been created in abundance amid unusual surroundings, and it is promised that L-Ko standards are well maintained.

PEGGY O'NEILL IN "THE PENNY PHILANTHROPIST."

Peggy O'Neill, famed as the creator of the title role in the big Broadway success, "Peg O' My Heart," has been signed by Wholesome Films Corporation to play the lead in that organization's first feature production, "The Penny Philanthropist."

Miss O'Neill will have ample opportunity in this feature to display on the screen all that charm which has made for her success on the speaking stage.

Miss Clara Laughlin, one of America's best known women writers, is author of "The Penny Philanthropist," and Guy W. McConnell will personally supervise the production.

Miss O'Neill will have playing opposite her Ralph Morgan, a young convert from the speaking stage, whose work in "Turn To The Right" was one of the best dramatic characterizations of the year. The story of "The Penny Philanthropist" is replete with a humaneness, virile and yet gentle, carrying a message of good deeds in a manner compellingly interesting and entirely unique.

O. HENRY'S "BLIND MAN'S HOLIDAY."

Scarcely a better story could have been chosen for picturization than O. Henry's "Blind Man's Holiday." This is the second of the 4-reel de luxe features released through General Film Company, as a departure from the already famous two-reel subjects from the great short story author's repertoire. "Blind Mans' Holiday" has its scene laid in New Orleans. Incidentally there is another New Orleans four-reel story to follow this one in another month, "The Enchanted Kiss." Before that, however, there will be one with a Washington atmosphere, "The Duplicity of Hargraves," also in four-reel form.

In "Blind Man's Holiday" the story is that of Lorison, a young man who is the victim of extreme moods. His romance is one of psychological peculiarities handled in a most telling and lucid fashion, an art which O. Henry more than any other popular short story writer has mastered. Added to that O. Henry puts sentiment into the story that irresistibly sways the emotions. This story also has one of O. Henry's most triumphant "happy endings."

ESSANAY-HOLMES COMEDIES.

Essanay has completed the production of three pictures in which Taylor Holmes, the stage comedian, is featured. A fourth is now in the filming process.

"Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," the first of this series, and, incidentially, the star's initial screen vehicle, was released September 3. The second picture, entitled "Fools For Luck," will be released October 8.

This picture will be followed in November with the release of "Two-Bit Eats," and "The Small Town Guy" will be the title of the December releases.

In line with the policy recently announced by George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, that his organization henceforth will produce only pictures of a lighter vein in an attempt to offset the gloom of war, all Holmes pictures will be comedy-dramas. The George Kleine System will distribute these films.

Triangle Aims for Variety

Kiddie Features, Patriotic Plays, Western Dramas, and Comedies of All Varieties Now in the Course of Production.

DIVERSITY of subjects, having an appeal for all classes, ages and professions, is to be a feature of the Triangle policy, according to a schedule recently evolved, which provides for kiddie features, western dramas, stories of business, patriotic plays, mythical fables, and comedies ranging from those of human interest drama in five parts—to the fast and furious burlesques in one and two-reel comedies. These will be presented in rotation, with the intention of providing exhibitors with a program which, like the leading national magazines, will have something of interest for everybody.

During the past few months the Triangle Distributing Corporation has issued plays in keeping with this policy. The Triangle September schedule has been carefully arranged with plays of contrasting type succeeding one another. "Idolaters," a drama of city life with a designing adventuress as the chief character, is followed by "The Haunted House," which presents a spiritualistic girl living with her fairy fancies in a quiet New England village. "Polly Ann," the next release, is described as a play of gladness, recounting, as it does, the humorous experiences of a little orphan. "Mountain Dew" is a story of a girl of the Kentucky Cumberlands who learns the secrets of love and "larnin'" at the same time. A Yale athlete who becomes a society detective is the central figure of "Flying Colors." The following week, September 23, presents "The Devil Dodger," a western drama with the new bad man star, Roy Stewart. This is followed by "Broadway, Arizona" with Olive Thomas as the gay young chorus girl who is abducted and carried to the western mountains where she creates a Broadway of her own.

The October productions are being completed and the order of their release is now being planned. The schedule will lead off with "Ashes of Hope," a drama that is said to be similar in action and spirit to "The Flame of the Yukon." "Doing Her Bit," a patriotic play, is another feature of the month which was devised with an eye to timeliness of appeal. About October 21 Alma Ruebens will come forth as a star in "The Firefly of Tough Luck," scenes of which are now being filmed on the deserts of Arizona. The Triangle kiddies, headed by Georgie Stone, Beulah Burns, and Thelma Burns will appear in support of Margery Wilson, who stars in a gypsy role of "Wild Sumac."

RITA JOLIVET PICTURES TO BE "LEST WE FORGET."

"Lest We Forget" is the title which has been selected for the great screen drama of international events in which Rita Jolivet is starred. This picture depicts occurrences at the beginning of the war and especially the early German invasion of Belgium and France, the sinking of the Lusitania, and deals with secret service in France, England and America, and shows the co-operation between the British and American foreign offices in handling German spies on both sides of the Atlantic.

Miss Jolivet is surrounded by a notable cast, among whom are included Hamilton Revelle, an actor whose prominent work has scored in many Broadway productions. Roger Lytton, who so capably portrayed a German spy in "The Battle Cry of Peace," again is seen as an agent of the Wilhelmstrasse in "Lest We Forget!" Mr. Lytton holds an officer's commission in the American army. He was excused from duty at Plattsburg for a period of weeks in order to allow him to take part in Miss Jolivet's great photoplay. At the conclusion of the scenes in which he is required he leaves at once for a military camp, from which he is scheduled to depart at a very early date for France.

The Jolivet picture is an unusually pretentious production. The actual taking of the scenes in the picture has been proceeding since July 7 and will not be completed for another month. At present Director Leonce Perret is working in the large village—a duplication of a French coast town—which has been erected on the Watson farm in Westchester County. Many of the scenes in the picture are laid in this village. When these scenes have been filmed the destruction of the village by German bombardment will be photographed. This is one of the spectacular moments in the picture.

CANADIAN RIGHTS FOR ART DRAMAS SOLD.

Another big deal was consummated last week by Art Dramas, Incorporated, when contracts were closed for the distribution rights of the Art Dramas pictures for all Canada.

Despite its importance, the final arrangements were made in record time between Arthur F. Beck, general manager of Art Dramas, and George F. Perkins, a prominent Canadian exchange man, who immediately formulated plans for the exploitation of the Art Dramas Program in his territory.

Mr. Perkins is a veteran film man and is known as one of the most capable men in the business. He owns the Independent Film and Theater Supply Company, which handles a vast amount of business throughout Canada, and has exchanges in Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, Canada.

Mr. Perkins has engaged A. Fischer, who accompanied him on the trip to New York, as general manager. Both were in conference at the Art Dramas executive offices, and matters of distribution were discussed at length.

Also accompanying Mr. Perkins and Mr. Fischer was George Rotsky, general manager of Montreal's two leading theaters, the Holman and the New Grand. Mr. Rotsky arranged to run Art Dramas in his houses.

GAUMONT PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF SEPTEMBER TWENTY-FOUR.

On the road to Berlin, via France! Our soldier boys are everywhere—in camp, on the high seas, even at the very edge of battle! And wherever they may be there you will find Gaumont cameramen to keep the home folks posted as to their movements. The people have come to look forward with eager expectancy to the release of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly on Wednesday of each week, and they can safely expect that when Weekly No. 143 is released on September 26 they will not be disappointed in its contents. As the Weekly is "made up" at the last moment, like a daily newspaper, it is not possible to predict its contents.

One day later the Gaumont film magazine, "Reel Life," will be released. It is the policy of the Gaumont Company to make the subjects in this release as diversified as possible, no two similar subjects appearing in a single issue. "Reel Life" No. 74, which will reach the public on September 27, contains a half dozen subjects of such dissimilar nature that no spectator can fail to be entertained. "The Correct Time" shows how the U. S. Naval Observatory determines exact noon each day and flashes it throughout the country. "Beans and Lady-Bug" illustrates how the common lady-bug is working to prevent a shortage in the food which makes Boston famous. Contrarily, "The Lamprey," a blood-sucking fish, is doing its best to deplete the food supply. In "Making Eyeglasses" we are familiarized with a novel industry, and shown how even the poorest of us may duplicate the best natural sight. "The Soldier's Staff of Life" enabled Uncle Sam to gain many recruits. "So Easy," an animated drawing from Life, America's leading humorous magazine, completes the reel.

"SINS OF AMBITION" (IVAN).

"Sins of Ambition," Ivan Film Productions' play now in making, written and directed by Ivan Abramson, promises to be a super-feature of exceptional quality.

As usual, Ivan Abramson has gathered around him a stellar cast, the names of which are suffcient to guarantee the artistry to be developed upon the screen. Wilfred Lucas, for a long time with the Triangle Fine Art Films, and known as leading man in "Hell-to-Pay Austin," "Orpheus in Our Square," and lately appearing in the leading male part of "The Food Gambler," has been entrusted with a big part in "Sins of Ambition." Co-starring with him we find such screen favorites as beautiful Leah Baird, charming Barbara Castleton and James Morrison, who, as always in Ivan productions, carries away his full share of honors. Other well-known stars appearing in the picture are Madaline Travers, Anders Randolf and Edward Lawrence.

The picture will, Mr. Abramson says, be an epoch-making one, both on account of its exceeding timeliness and exceptional dramatic action. While it has to deal with a great international question, yet it is in no sense whatsoever a military picture, as its basic proposition is to show the philosophical side of the sins of ambition and the consequences when ambition oversteps its boundaries.

HOW TO RAISE STRONG CHILDREN.

Bernarr Macfadden, widely known as the editor of Physical Culture, has made an agreement with Universal whereby he will demonstrate feats of strength and methods of physical development for the average man or woman in future issues of the Screen Magazine.

In the 39th issue, to be released shortly, Macfadden gives some highly entertaining scenes in which he and his children take part. He is an advocate of the training of children from their earliest babyhood, and in the case of his own family shows that normal children can soon be developed into prodigies of health and strength. His three-year-old son is shown punching the bag, turning hand springs and performing other feats ordinarily far beyond the ability of a child so small. The boy's ten-year-old sister demonstrates that she possesses the stamina and agility of a boy of fifteen by chinning herself fourteen times on a horizontal bar. Macfadden maintains that his system of strenuous but judicious training from the earliest days of the child's life not only builds muscle but gives fine poise and completely banishes fear. Directions are given for the building of inexpensive apparatus that can be erected and utilized in any backyard.

"SUNSET TRAIL" IS A PLAY OF THE GREAT OUTDOORS.

Vivian Martin appears in a new Paramount picture, "The Sunset Trail," September 17th, and in addition to the fact that it is a story with a genuinely interesting plot, many unique situations and a splendid cast in support of the charming young star, it is notable because of the exceptional photography and the spirit of the great outdoors which it possesses.

Beulah Marie Dix made the scenario of the photoplay from a story by Alice McIver and George H. Melford directed it. Cameraman Percy Hilburn will come in for a good share of praise when the picture is exhibited owing to the remarkable work he has done in perpetuating in celluloid some of the exquisite scenery in the mountains and the views of sunsets and drifting clouds which were found in the locations chosen for many of the scenes. Harrison Ford appears as the sweetheart of Bess and the others in the cast give entirely adequate performances.

MME. OLGA PETROVA IN "EXILE."

Oddly enough the title of "Exile" is derived from the name of a town—or colony—a Portuguese settlement. This is the picture in which Mme. Petrova will appear September 17, under the Paramount banner. It is a Lasky production, directed by Maurice Tourneur, and is said to be a really "red-blooded" picture, with a world of opportunity for the star as well as the exceptional supporting cast, together with settings that are far beyond the ordinary.

The story is by Dolf Wyllarde, with a scenario prepared by Scene from "Exile" (Paramount).

Charles E. Whittaker. It deals with the efforts of a young American engineer, played by Mahlon Hamilton, to bring better conditions in the lonely colony. He encounters the Chief Justice of the place, Perez, an unscrupulous wretch who becomes realistic in the hands of Wyndham Standing. Claudia, protrayed by Mme. Petrova, is the wife of Perez and when the engineer secures a hold over the official he undertakes to gain his way with Claudia. He learns, however, that she is genuinely in love with him and refuses to take advantage of the situation with the result that Perez is permitted to go unscathed. But he is afterward lynched by the furious natives against whom he has long plotted and the American saves Claudia. They watch the Arabs departing over the desert and turn back to finish out their own span in mutual happiness.

The scenes in the Portuguese-Arabian colony, the startling situations and the splendid acting of all concerned should render "Exile" an unusually strong attraction. Others in the cast beside those mentioned are Warren Cook, Charles Martin and Violet Reed.

"IN THE WAKE OF THE HUNS" (Pathe).

Pictorial evidences of the progress the French are making in regaining the northern part of their land from the Germans is shown in the Official French War Pictures titled "In the Wake of the Huns," which will be released by Pathe September 23.

These pictures are different from any other war pictures shown, because, while they show war as it really is they also show France recovering herself from the blows struck by the Germans. They depict the French army rebuilding the railroads, the bridges and the roads. They show the ruin left by the Germans, in the orchards, in the villages, in the cities and the devastation of churches and other public buildings.

One of the features of the film is the picture of the Chateau de Coucy. This chateau was built over six hundred years ago and many famous events in French history happened under its roof and around its walls. The pictures show the chateau as it was before its occupation by the Germans. These pictures, of course, were taken before the war broke out. Then is shown the devastation wrought by the Germans when they were forced to evacuate the chateau and it typifies in a measure the wantons spite that is being taken out on French monuments and on France itself by her invaders.

Troops in action, troops on the march, troops moving forward to engage the enemy are shown and will arouse the enthusiasm of American audiences.

"TILLIE" THE SCRUB-LADY" IS FINISHED.

Compressing 459 comedy scenes into 1,800 feet of motion picture film is likely to be a fast-moving whole. Marie Dressler has demonstrated this with "Tillie, the Scrub-Lady," the first of her two-reel comedies for Goldwyn distribution. The subject, titled and finally cut, is being printed for trade showing at all the company's branch offices.

Marie Dressler has substituted plot for pies, so that her audiences may not feel compelled to laugh when they feel perfectly sure they oughtn't to.

CURRENT EVENTS IN ANIMATED WEEKLY.

Practical lessons in the art of cooking and handling food, demonstrated by a corps of experienced cooks for the benefit of the new American army, furnish one of the most interesting features of the 87th issue of the Universal Animated Weekly, just released. These pictures were posed exclusively for the Animated Weekly, and present many human interest bits, besides imparting much valuable information.

In the same issue, Anna Case, whom many consider the most beautiful of the younger American opera singers, is shown singing for the New Jersey troops encamped at Sea Girt. Some effective close-ups of Miss Case are pleasingly introduced.

The recent championship tennis match between Molla Bjurstedt and Mary K. Browne at Forest Hills, L. I., has been graphically recorded in a series of views bound to stir the blood of any spectator who has ever wielded a racquet.

Other subjects that help make this number notable are scenes taken during the recent parade of street car workers with their wives and babies in San Francisco; pictures of the wreck of the grain steamer Spokane at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan; the review of British volunteers from America, recently held in London; and the ceremonies in connection with the welcoming of the Japanese envoys in Washington. Brief, snappy subtitles add considerable interest to the reel, which is concluded, as usual, with one of Hy Mayer's timely cartoons.

MARY GARDEN SAILS FOR HOME.

Mary Garden, famous opera prima donna, has taken ship from France for home. Upon her arrival here she will be met by officials of Goldwyn Pictures and will go at once to the Goldwyn studios at Fort Lee to begin work in the splendid motion picture production of "Thais."

Miss Garden will not get into the swing of her work, however, until she has made a little concert tour she herself suggested. She wants to sing at least once for the soldiers in every northern cantonment before her camera engagements keep her close to the studios.

The script of "Thais" has been completed in the Goldwyn scenario department and awaits Miss Garden's approval. In the picturization the story of the opera has been deviated from but slightly—only enough, in fact, to lift the principal character a shade above the estate of a courtesan.

"THE MAVERICK" (Bluebird).

Franklyn Farnum makes his first appearance as a lone-star ir Bluebirds on Oct. 8, presenting a sensational comedy-drama, tentatively titled "The Maverick." William Parker prepared the scenario from a story furnished by Isola Forrester and Mann Page and Joseph De Grasse directed the production. Mr. De Grasse previously supervised the screen appearance of Dorothy Phillips in the Bluebird series but has now undertaken the direction of Mr. Farnum during his progress as an individual star.

Claire Du Brey, who has worked herself up from playing humble "maids" in Dorothy Phillips' company, has also been transferred to the support of Mr. Farnum as his leading lady.

Scene from "The Maverick" (Bluebird).

Lon Chaney, previously featured in Miss Phillips' support, has an important character role in "The Maverick" and will continue in the De Grasse company for more Farnum pictures. Mr. St. John, Margery Lawrence, Sam De Grasse, Eugene Moore, Wm. Dyer and D. A. Appling are other members of Mr. Farnum's support.

"The Maverick" has a plot that starts in the East and winds up in the West where Farnum cuts a sensational dash as a "tender foot" ranchman.

THE SCREEN SHOWS A NEW EVA TANGUAY.

Those persons who have long been familiar with that dynamic personality of the vaudeville circuits, Eva Tanguay, will be surprised to find an entirely new Eva when they see her in "The Wild Girl," the first screen production in which Eva Tanguay has come before the public. For the Eva of "I don't care" fame is lost among the hundred other Evas who play the central character in "The Wild Girl."

Miss Tanguay, experienced artist that she is, has not made the mistake of cutting her screen heroine after the pattern of her vaudeville self. The problem of characterization in the photoplay has been made clearly and fully by the eccentric little artiste. Eva Tanguay of the music halls has disappeared and a new—and dare we say greater?—Eva has come in her place.

The story of "The Wild Girl" is based on a suggestion by George M. Rosener, and was directed by Howard Estabrook. The play has been given a costly production and is unusually handsomely mounted. Miss Tanguay's screen debut will be made in a picture well worthy of the fame of its star.

EDNA GOODRICH IN "AMERICAN MAID."

With the completion of "Reputation," "Queen X" and "A Daughter of Maryland," her first release of the series of star productions which she is to make for the Mutual Film Corporation, Miss Goodrich is at work at her studio on Long Island under Albert Capellani's direction in "American Maid," a five-reel patriotic picture. "Reputation" was released on Sept. 3 and met with an enthusiastic reception from exhibitors and their patrons.

The other forthcoming Goodrich productions are "Queen X," written by Assistant United States District Attorney Edwin M. Stanton of New York; "American Maid," scenarioized by Hamilton Smith from a story by Julius Rothschild, and "A Daughter of Maryland," scenarioized by Anthony Kelly from a play by Samuel Morse.

LOYALTY IS THEME OF "DOUBLE-CROSSED."

Loyalty to her husband, even when she discovers that in his past there is a black spot which is cropping up to menace their happiness, forms the theme of "Double-Crossed," in which Pauline Frederick will appear September 17th. This is a Paramount picture produced under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, with the same attention to detail, the same richness of settings and excellence of support that characterizes all Paramount productions.

Hector Turnbull, author of "The Cheat," is responsible for the scenario of "Double-Crossed," and in the cast are such well-known players as Crawford Kent, Clarence Handyside, William Riley Hatch, Harris Gordon and Joseph Smiley. This picture will appeal to women particularly because of the exquisite gowns that Miss Frederick wears and the fact that it is a story which touches the home so deeply.

MARGUERITE CLARK AT WORK ON THIRD "BAB" PICTURE.

After a brief rest, Marguerite Clark begins work this week on the third in the Paramount series of "Sub-Deb" stories by Mary Roberts Rhinehart, which are being filmed under direction of J. Searle Dawley from the stories originally published in The Saturday Evening Post. The first story, "Bab's Diary," will be released on the 24th of this month and in October "Bab's Burglar," also completed, will be placed on the market. The idea is to follow in regular sequence the order of the stories as published in the Post and for the entire series the same cast will be used in support of Miss Clark.

"Jack and the Beanstalk" Pleases Boston

Newspapers and Public Accord Fox Big Fairy Tale Feature the Warmest Welcome at the Majestic Theater—What Dailies Said About It.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—The great Fox feature film, "Jack and the Beanstalk," got a big welcome in Boston. Here are what the leading daily papers had to say of the first day's run at the Majestic theater:

Harlow Hare, in the Boston American: "There was a large audience on hand which wasn't youthful by any means, but the big folks seemed to enjoy the picture as much as the children."

Cortlandt Marsden, in the Traveller, said: "The work of that youngster, Francis Carpenter, as Jack, was a revelation. 'Jack and the Beanstalk' is well worth seeing."

Salita Solano, in the Journal: "Film to delight the imagination of every child who ever lost himself between the covers of a book of fairy tales."

The Globe: "The most fertile imagination never travelled faster or reached greater heights than this William Fox production of the oldest of fairy tales. Thrills and enchantment combined to the complete joy and satisfaction of the juveniles and to the admiration of their elders."

A large amount of space was purchased in the Boston papers for the exploitation of the picture at the Majestic, one of Bosaon's largest legitimate theaters in the downtown district. The picture drew large crowds. Some specially good press work was done by Joseph DiPesa, who was retained by the Fox interests to look after the publicity end of the run.

Premier of Waterbury's Rialto.

Waterbury, Conn.—The new Rialto theater in Waterbury, Conn., was opened on Labor Day, with William Fox's feature production, "The Honor System." There was a capacity crowd all day. The Rialto is one of the finest show houses used for motion pictures in New England. It was formerly the Bijou, which was torn down and rebuilt into the Rialto. The theater seats 1,400. Manager Nichols is booking only the very best productions for this house.

Joseph Mack on Manager Campbell's Staff.

Boston, Mass.—Harry F. Campbell, manager of the Boston Goldwyn exchange, has completed the personnel of his office by adding to his sales and office staff, and now has everything in readiness for a great drive.

Joseph Mack, one of New England's foremost film salesmen, has become a member of the Boston exchange and will represent the Goldwyn productions in western Massachusetts, Worcester inclusive, and the territory east of the Connecticut river handled by the local office. This territory is very familiar to Mr. Mack, who has a wide acquaintance among the moving picture men in this vicinity.

Mr. Mack is one of the most popular film men in New England and controls the Onset theater in Onset, Mass., which he personally manages during the summer months. He was formerly sales representative for the World Film in the Bay state, under Stanley Hand, manager until a few months ago when he was succeeded by George M. A. Fecke. He was the winner of a sales contest conducted by Manager Hand, turning in the largest amount of business for a two months' period.

The Bowdoin Square's Sunday Evening Shows.

Boston, Mass.—Manager Al Somerby, of the Bowdoin Square theater, in the west end of the city, has inaugurated a new program for his patrons on Sunday evenings. The entire bill of moving pictures will consist of Paramount productions. There will be vaudeville in addition to the picture program. Last Sunday Manager Somerby played "Out of Darkness," with Charlotte Walker, and "Hearts and Flowers," with Mrs. Thomas Whiffen and Beulah Poynter. A record-sized audience was in attendance at this performance and many favorable comments were heard from patrons as they passed out of the theater regarding the new policy.

Manager Farrell Pleased With New Pathe Serial.

Boston, Mass.—"The Seven Pearls," the new Pathe serial, bids fair to do unprecedented business in New England. The interest with which the chapter picture is being received by local exhibitors indicates that the new serial will go over bigger than any other chapter photoplay ever exploited in New England. Manager Edward J. Farrell, of the Boston Pathe exchange, states that he is very well pleased with the bookings that are coming in every day, some from his sales representatives and others direct from the exhibitors.

The release date of the serial has been changed from Sept. 3 to Sept. 16.

Manager Farrell's staff of salesmen, Frank J. Grady in greater Boston; J. J. Donnelly in Connecticut and Rhode Island; H. I. Goldman in Western Massachusetts and A. E. Penn in Maine and New Hampshire, are all working hard to put this new serial over in grand style and make it a record-breaker for business.

Frank J. Grady Leading Pathe Salesman.

Boston, Mass.—Frank J. Grady, Pathe sales representative in Eastern Massachusetts, is receiving the congratulations of many of his friends today, having achieved the honor of being the champion salesman of the entire Pathe forces of the country for the month past. He turned in more business than any other roadman for Pathe in the United States. Mr. Grady has achieved this feat several times since joining Pathe a little over a year ago.

Straight Pictures at Colonial Theater.

Haverhill, Mass.—Keon Brother's Colonial theater, one of Haverhill's finest theatrical houses, has reopened under an entirely new policy. The management has arranged a six-day program of pictures and on Sundays will run moving pictures and vaudeville. The picture program will consist of Metro productions, Conquest films and open market pictures.

During the summer months, while the house was closed down for repairs, Keon Brothers employed the services of two well-known club women to make a complete canvass of the city, visiting every house in an effort to find out at first hand just what the people of the city wanted at the Colonial. They unanimously acclaimed the straight moving picture policy, which is expected to be successful.

Al Couture Takes Scenic Theater.

Rochester, N. H.—The Scenic theater, a moving picture house in this town, was sold last week to Al Couture, owner of the Crown theater, Manchester. The Scenic was formerly owned and managed by L. H. McDuffee and has always been a very successful enterprise.

Moses Demers Buys Globe Theater.

Boston, Mass.—Manager L. A. Watrous, of the Boston office of the Vitagraph, announces that the new V-L-S-E serial production, "The Fighting Trail," is making a tremendous hit with New England moving picture exhibitors in general.

Boston, Mass.—The Hyde Park theater, in Hyde Park, a suburb of Boson, which has been closed during the summer months, reopened Labor Day. The theater has been completely renovated both in the interior and on the exterior and has been greatly improved upon.

Seattle Film Trade News and Theater Notes

Clemmer Theater Has Big Success on Reopening for New Season—Changes Among Exchange Offices and Jottings About Local Exhibitors.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, Wash. — The show at the Clemmer theater the last week in August, advertised as the Fall Opening, was a big success from the points of view of both business and satisfaction of patrons. Few programs shown in Seattle have been so widely and so favorably commented on. To begin with, Guterson's Russian orchestra had been augmented by four pieces. A special concert was given every afternoon and twice each evening. In all the newspaper advertisements the Clemmer is now labeled as "The House of Music," but this description was not adopted until the people had already begun to think of it as such.

The feature on the opening program was "The Whip," and the audiences became so enthusiastic that they cheered again and again during the showing.

The "filler" was a travel picture showing the Columbia Highway in Oregon. The clear photography was commented upon by all who appreciate beautiful pictures. Beverly B. Dobbs, a Seattle cameraman, was the photographer.

With this week's bill the admission price after 6:30 has been raised to 20 cents. Fifteen cents will remain the price of admission to the matinees.

H. Sussman Buys Out Waring & Finck.

Seattle, Wash.—H. Sussman, president of the Peerless Film service, has bought Waring and Finck's supply store at 1014 Third avenue. The deal includes the transfer of the agency of the Motiograph machines to the purchaser. Mr. Sussman will carry out the plans of Waring and Finck in moving to the new location built for them on film row at 2020 Third avenue, which will be completed by September 15. The new store will be known as Sussman's Theater Supply Company and will be operated as an altogether separate business from the Peerless Film Service, which will continue at 218 Seneca street.

Mr. Sussman has engaged as manager of the supply store E. L. Shwetzer, for the past few months manager of the G. A. Metcalfe store in this city. Mr. Shwetzer knows every phase of the exhibitor's business, having been both an operator and an exhibitor. He came to Seattle directly from the San Francisco headquarters of G. A. Metcalfe. Mr. Sussman has been receiving congratulations on his good fortune in securing the services of so able a manager.

For several years Mr. Sussman has conducted the Peerless Film Service, buying and renting short-length films and dealing in certain lines of theater supplies. It was an unpretentious business, but he continually made good at it, until he has been enabled to buy one of the best supply businesses in Seattle. Progressive business men like to see a man make something big out of a little thing. Therefore some of Seattle's film men have named Mr. Sussman "The Little Giant."

H. W. Finck, one of the former owners of the supply store, has been wanting to get away to the officers' training camp at the Presidio in San Francisco for some time. He left the day after he sold out to Mr. Sussman. After the war he expects to return to some phase of the motion picture business in Seattle. Mr. Waring will probably enter some branch of studio work in Los Angeles immediately.

New Manager for Seattle "U" Office.

Seattle, Wash.—B. R. Latz has resigned as manager of the Seattle Universal office and will leave next week for Portland to take charge of the office of the Jewel Productions in that city. John R. Meldrum, formerly Bluebird representative in Butte, has arrived in Seattle to take Mr. Latz's place. Mr. Meldrum opened the first office in Seattle of the Film Supply Company, the organization that handles the sale of Universal pictures in this territory. This was in 1912, and he remained until 1915, so he is not a stranger in this new location.

Select Pictures Takes Over Selznick Productions.

Seattle, Wash.—The Lewis J. Selznick exchange in Seattle, which has been taken over by the Select Pictures Corporation, will handle all Selznick productions, including those formerly handled in this territory by the De Luxe Feature Film Company. The De Luxe company will, however, continue to serve exhibitors who still have deposits on their Selznick pictures. The Select Pictures' Seattle branch will also handle Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge releases. B. R. Keller will remain as manager.

E. R. Redlich Takes Management of Seattle Metro.

Seattle, Wash.—E. R. Redlich has returned to Seattle from Toronto to become manager of the local Metro office. H. L. Lustig, division manager, will remain in the city to help Mr. Redlich get settled in the new building at 2002 Third avenue. B. F. Rosenberg, Metro representative, spent last week in Spokane. He reports that first, second, and third runs of Metro pictures have been signed for in that city. Mr. Lustig reports tremendous business in this territory on "The Slacker" and that Metro's prospects for all fall and winter business is very encouraging.

Two New Houses Open in September.

Mansfield, Wash.—Theodore Radtke will open a new house of 350 capacity on September 25. He has purchased his entire equipment from the Sussman Supply Company of Seattle, including two of the 1918 De Luxe models of the motiograph.

Zillah, Wash.—A. S. Hillyer will open a new motion picture theater this month. Mr. Hillyer purchased his outfit from the Sussman Supply Company of Seattle. He will also use the De Luxe model of the motiograph projection machine.

Idaho Exhibitor in Seattle Hospital.

Seattle, Wash.—R. S. Tucker, manager of the Strand theater, Moscow, Idaho, is confined in the Providence hospital in Seattle.

H. C. Arthur, Jr. and J. E. Hudson With Goldwyn.

Seattle, Wash.—E. I. Hudson, formerly road man for Triangle, is now with Goldwyn. He has the western Oregon territory and will have his headquarters in Portland. H. C. Arthur, Jr., is the new Goldwyn representative for eastern Washinton, northern Idaho, and northwest Montana.

Exchange Notes From Seattle.

Harry Leonhardt, western division manager for Goldwyn, with headquarters in Los Angeles, stopped for a few days in Seattle this week while on a tour of the western offices.

C. F. Hill, manager of the Seattle Goldwyn office, is carrying on an extensive publicity campaign through billboards. He already has 46 boards on the leading car lines of Seattle covered with 24 sheets.

Eugene L. Perry, Fox special representative from New York, was in Seattle in conference with A. W. Eden, Seattle manager.

J. L. Merrick, manager of the Seattle Mutual office, had a conference recently with J. F. Dippy, manager of the Vancouver office, and F. S. Marshall, manager of the Calgary office. The two Canadian managers spent several days in Seattle.

The productions of the Frohman Amusement Company will be handled in this territory from the Seattle Mutual office.

Mike Rosenberg, president of Greater Features, has just returned from his trip to New York. While there he bought the latest Hart picture, "The Cold Deck," and "Redemption," starring Evelyn Nesbit.

H. A. Johnson, of the H. A. Johnson Company, returned to Seattle this week after several weeks in New York and Chicago.

S. J. Ekre, salesman for Selznick, who has just returned from a trip through his territory, wishes it announced that he is eating regularly since joining the Selznick forces.

Supply Store Manager Receives Bad Cut.

Seattle, Wash.—Dr. P. Metcalf, of the G. A. Metcalf supply store of this city, had to spend two days in a hospital last week as the result of splitting too much kindling early in the morning. It would seem that Dr. Metcalf tried to add his hand to the kindling pile. The tendons of the thumb and index finger were cut, and the operation of sewing them back together was a long and painful one.

Tacoma Exhibitor Drafted.

Tacoma, Wash.—Clarence Summerville, manager of the Melbourne and Hippodrome theaters, two houses operated by Eugene Levy of Seattle, has been selected in the draft and will go to American Lake to begin training on September 5.

Snapshot taken by Seattle World Correspondent of H. D. Nangle, Vitagraph Coast Division Manager, and G. A. Faris, Vitagraph Seattle Manager. Mr. Faris is the one casting his eyes at the "chicken" off stage. Mr. Nangle is the perfectly proper looking gentleman on the right.

Exhibitor Visitors to Seattle.

Seattle, Wash.—Among the exhibitors visiting Seattle's film row this week were: Henry Newman, Arcade theater, Hoquiam; W. D. Gross, Coliseum, Juneau, Alaska; E. A. Rupert, Dream, Aberdeen; J. D. Ferrel, Colonial, Ellensburg; E. A. Halberg, Lincoln, Port Angeles; E. I. Zabel, Ray, Olympia; Chas. Stillwell, Stillwell Theaters Company, Spokane; J. G. Gregg, Dreamland, Dayton.

BALTIMORE JOTTINGS.

Baltimore, Md.—Last year, about this time, the annual treat which has been given by Charles E. Ford, manager of Ford's Opera House, to the children at the Kernan Hospital for Crippled Children, could not take place owing to the outbreak of infantile paralysis. But on Wednesday afternoon, August 29, about twenty-five of them that were able to travel in automobiles were brought in to the theater and greatly enjoyed the treat of viewing Howe's Travel Pictures.

New Newark Theater Has Brilliant Premier

Theater Recently Rebuilt at a Cost Reaching Up in the Hundred Thousands Is Opened September 1—Mayor of City Makes Speech.

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J.—One of the most notable premiers of a showhouse took place Sept. 1, when the new Newark theater at 195 Market street was opened to an invited audience. The lobby was completely converted into a fragrant bower by the floral tributes.

Representing the management, Joseph J. Fiske, a local newspaper man, introduced Max Spiegel, president of the Market and Beaver Realty Company, owners of the theater.

The old Newark theater has been completely demolished, and now in its place is the modernly-constructed moving picture house, seating about 2,500. The chairs are upholstered red panne plush.

Music an Important Adjunct—Prices.

The musical program plays an important role at the new house. The orchestra, in charge of Warde Johnson, who was musical director of the Strand in New York, consists of twenty-five able musicians. A large Austin pipe organ has also been installed and two accomplished organists have been employed to play it. At the premier Miss Grace Hoffman, operatic soprano, sang, and Mery Zentay, violinist, played. Music forms no little part in the program of the Newark.

As the opening program, Mary Pickford, in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," was the feature. In addition, the British War Pictures were also exhibited. The week of Sept. 9 will bring Elsie Ferguson in "Barbary Sheep."

The programs will be changed twice a week, Thursdays and Sundays. There will be a continuous performance from 11 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock in the evening. The matinee prices are 10, 15, 25, 35 cents, while in the evening, 15, 25, 35 and 50 cents are the prices.

Personnel of the Firm.

The men behind the enterprise control the Strand theater, New York. The officers are Max Spiegel, president; Henry Waterson, vice-president; A. B. Stupel, secretary; Dr. Richard G. Tunison, treasurer, and Edward Spiegel, acting director.

John B. McNally will be the resident manager of the new playhouse, and he will have as his assistant George F. Turner. Mr. McNally is well known locally.

Philadelphia Theaters May Raise Prices

Film Circles Have a Feeling that the Price of Admission Is Too Low—Changes in Personnel at Exchanges—Trade Notes.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—There is talk among the local exhibitors of an increased admission charge. Promise of concerted action cannot be pinned down aywhere ,but the movement seems to be "in the air," and the general feeling is that in th late autumn all the photoplay theaters will raise their prices.

The cost of exhibiting is going up all around and it looks as if the customer, as usual, will have to pay the bill.

Moving pictures have steadily been coming into more popular favor, though, and it may be that no serious objection will be registered.

General Manager F. W. Buhler, of the Central Market Street Amusement Co., announces that admission prices at the Victoria theater will advance from 10 and 20 cents to 15 and 25 cents, while the Fairmount will also increase its price from 10 to 15 cents. However, the percentage of increase of prices among local exhibitors is expected to be large and should take effect in the very near future.

Charles Wanamaker Now With Nixon-Nirdlinger.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Announcement is made that Charlie Wanamaker, for several seasons resident manager of the Garrick theater, has become associated with Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger in his theatrical and motion picture interests as personal representative. Mr. Nirdlinger, who has just returned from a tour of the Far West, has many interests in a theatrical way in this city.

Will Run "Jack and the Beanstalk" for Month.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Al Boyd, to whom I was talking the other day, told me he is so confident of the future that he has enlarged his pretty little Arcadia theater so that it will seat six hundred persons, and that he contemplates an innovation in October that should be looked upon with interest. It is nothing less than the running for an entire month of "Jack and the Beanstalk."

M. D. Starkman Goes to Metro as Salesman.

Philadelphia, Pa.—M. D. Starkman, formerly of the Mutual forces, has joined the Metro staff of salesmen and will shortly begin a tour of the neighboring towns.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A noteworthy resolution presented by Walter Murray, of the Local 307, I. A. T. S. E., was unanimously adopted at the first meeting. It provides that in the event of any of its paid-up members who have enlisted or have been drafted into Uncle Sam's service should be killed or die in the defense of his country, the organization will pay $100 to the deceased member's family or dependents. This patriotic and humane donation is made up by a voluntary assessment fund of $1, being contributed by each of its members.

Thomas Love Feels Exclusive.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A general complaint was made to representatives of the daily newspapers by Thomas M. Love, manager of a large theatrical syndicate, regarding the advertising of photoplays under the head of amusements. The theatrical interest suggested the placing of sub-headings, like vaudeville, photoplays, burlesque and others, in the columns of the newspapers so readers could easily distinguish the various forms of amusements. However, as zoological gardens, musical and vocal concerts and a number of other classifications would be necessary, the newspaper men voted that the idea of any change would be impracticable and not in accord with the original heading of amusements, which has stood for all forms of amusements for over half a century.

Attractions Passed and Coming.

Philadelphia, Pa.—During the week of Sept. 3 interesting photoplay announcements disclose the following photoplay schedule:

As this is the first time for many years that Miss Mayo has been seen in this city and as this marks the inauguration of the Goldwyn Pictures in Philadelphia, this gifted woman will be tendered a dinner, served with the famous golden Bellevue service set, and reception by Stanley V. Mastbaum, in the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel at six o'clock. Miss Mayo will be greeted and introduced to the dramatic critics of the newspapers and she will be made welcome in that true hospitable style which Mr. Mastbaum is famous. After the dinner Miss Mayo will be escorted to the Stanley theater.

Buffalonians Want the Six Cent Pieces

Cheaper Theaters Would Find the Proposed Coin Much More Advantageous Than the Jitney—Many Other Good Uses for It.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Is the time-worn expression "the nickel show" to be relegated to the past in Buffalo and other cities and to be replaced by a new term, "the six-cent show?" This is a question which local film fans are considering as a result of a bill introduced at Washington by Representative Linkham of Massachusetts, authorizing the coinage of a six-cent piece. Many Buffalonians, especially in the mercantile lines, are writing to their representatives advocating passage of the measure. It has been pointed out that the general use of the six-cent coin would popularize the sale of many articles, which for a long time have been selling at a meagre profit at five cents. Of course in line with this change would be the six-cent picture show.

Buffalonians for a long time have been educated to a knowledge of the increased cost of giving " a nickle show." Under the present system, however, if the price were raised to six cents, patrons of such houses would object to paying the extra penny because of its inconvenience. The searching for the extra penny or the receiving of four pennies in change from a ten-cent piece would get on the nerves of patrons and would be out of step with their rapid way of doing business. If the proposed coin is introduced, it would be as easy to pay a six cents admission as it is to pay five cents. The possibilities of the proposed six-cent coin are therefore being fully realized by the men who run five-cent theaters in the Bufalo territory.

Shea's Hippodrome Enters Third Year.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, recently celebrated its third anniversary. This theater is regarded as one of the most luxurious picture houses in America. The management has just closed a contract giving the Hippodrome first run of Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Pauline Frederick, Marguerite Clark, and a long list of other stars, as well as the Arbuckle and Keystone comedies. This house has a concert orchestra of twenty-six soloists, who offer carefully selected incidental music for each production. The overture is changed twice a week. Matinee prices on the orchestra floor have been advanced from ten to fifteen cents.

Buffalo Jottings.

Various war scenes showing how soldiers greatly enjoy their "smokes" were shown in Buffalo recently. The purpose was to arouse interest in a campaign in which thousands of packages of cigarettes, tobacco, pipes, etc. were collected for Buffalo boys who are going to the front.

Manager Weinberg of the Elmwood moving picture theater, Buffalo, recently distributed minature pictures of Emily Stevens, who appeared in "The Slacker" at that house. Back of each picture was this information about the production: "A patriotic drama of the times. No war scenes, BUT it makes the old yearn to be young. It makes the young spring to the nation's call."

J. M. Sitterly, of the Popular Cinema, Buffalo, has a new motor car, in which he will cover his territory.

"The Barrier"—Regent theater.
"Beware of Strangers"—Strand theater.
"Redemption"—Photodrome.

New Policy at Toronto's Regent.

Toronto, Ont.—Upon the completion of the first year's operation of the Regent theater, Toronto, on September 1st, Manager Roland Roberts announced a new policy for the big downtown house. One of the principal features of this is a new scale of prices. At evening performances the new price for ground floor seats is 35c instead of 25c and 15c. Matinee prices, except on Saturdays and holidays, are 15c and 10c, and on the special days the matinee prices are 25c and 15c. Reserved loge chairs at evening performances are 50c.

New program features include a symphony concert every afternoon for half an hour, starting at 4:15, and the presentation of a solo number at every performance by a special artist. Manager Roberts also announces that he will insist on absolutely first run pictures simultaneously with New York release dates whenever possible. Shows will be held five times daily, starting at 12:15, 2:15 and 4:15 in the afternoons and during the evenings at 7:00 and 9:00 o'clock.

As a start for the new Regent year, Manager Roberts presented "The Barrier" during the week of September 3, and the first Goldwyn, "Polly of the Circus," was shown during the week of September 10. Programs will be changed weekly.

Small Toronto Theater Burns.

Toronto.—It is very infrequent that a fire occurs in a moving picture theater in Ontario during the course of a performance. One of these unusual experiences occurred, however, when the small theater at 1035 Gerrard street East, Toronto, was partially destroyed on Saturday afternoon, September 1. The operator was rewinding a reel when the fire started. G. T. McNally, the proprietor, was painfully burned about the hands and face when he attempted to extinguish the blaze at close quarters. The audience made its escape quickly and without mishap through the various exits.

The feature picture which was destroyed was Clara Kimball Young's "The Price She Paid." The loss to the building amounted to $400.

W. Yates Making Good at Royal Theater

Toronto.—The Royal theater, King street West, Hamilton, Ontario, has prospered since the recent change in ownership and management. The theater has been taken over by W. Meat Cutters May Trouble Sunday Theaters Want Closed Meat Shops and Butchers Threaten to Invoke Blue Laws to Aid Their Cause by Closing Up Everything in Sight.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—For the first time a threat of the enforcement of the old Ohio blue laws, involving Sunday closing, has been heard in Cincinnati as a result of the conflict between members of the Meat Cutters' Union and the Cincinnati Retail Grocers' and Butchers' League. The union men want all shops selling meat to remain closed on Sunday, so as to give them a full day of rest, while there are some retailers who desire to remain open, and these threaten that if they are forced by the union to close they will invoke the old laws to close the picture shows and other places of amusement and refreshment on Sunday.

Several Ohio cities have enforced the blue laws against picture shows, and are now without moving pictures on Sunday, but Cincinnati has heretofore been totally without trouble of this sort. The union representatives declare that they will get warrants under the Sunday laws against all grocers and meat retailers who remain open on Sunday hereafter, and if this is done the retaliatory measures referred to may be taken against the photoplay houses as well as the other theaters, thus bringing up the question in the local courts.

S. W. Hatch Takes Charge of K-E-S-E Offices.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager S. W. Hatch, for a long time associated with the Mutual and the Vitgraph offices in Cincinanti, being manager of the latter ever since C. E. Holah left, has taken charge of the K-E-S-E organization in this territory, being succeeded at the Vitagraph office by A. H. McLaughlin, of Chicago.

One of Mr. Hatch's first acts at the K-E-S-E was to arrange to move the exchange several blocks east, to 111 East Seventh street, which is just around the corner from the new Film Exchange building, is near other exchanges as well, and is only two blocks from the theatrical center. The move has not yet been completed, but is to take place shortly, giving the K-E-S-E branch much better quarters in every respect than those it has been using on West Seventh street.

Manager Wessling Pleased With New Features.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager W. S. Wessling, of the Pathe exchange, was highly elated recently at news from New York that his company has purchased the distribution rights to a pair of big features, "To-Day," made from the successful play of that name, and "The Mad Lover," featuring Florence Reed and Robert Warwick. Manager Wessling has already made arrangements for the first showing of these pictures, a pair of downtown houses having taken the first run as soon as they were offered.

Manager Harry Hawn Killed By Auto Accident.

Akron, O.—Harry Hawn, manager of the Casino Park theater for some years, and booking agent for the Meyer's Lake theater, was almost instantly killed when an automobile in which he and three companions were riding skidded against a tree. Mr. Hawn's skull was fractured. He had been for years prominent in theatrical circles, and was also a prominent member of the Elks.

"Nation Film" Coming Back to the Grand.

Cincinnati, O.—The Grand opera house is about to close the most successful summer season it ever had, starting the usual run of stage attractions for the fall season with "Dew Drop Inn." This, however, is a little early, so it is to be followed by a week's return engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," which had a remarkable success at its long run early in the season, going far toward making the Grand's summer period of pictures the record-breaker it was. The opportunity to secure the big Griffith picture for another week was promptly seized, as the crowds were still coming when the early run closed, and indications are that the week will be a successful one. The same prices as originally prevailed are scheduled.

Orphans Visit the Lyric as Guests.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager Herbert Heuck, of the Lyric theater, brought the moving-picture season of the house to a fitting close by entertaining the city's orphans with a free view of the Lyman Howe travel pictures, which featured the final two weeks of the season. All told nearly 2,000 children participated in the treat, each institution sending its children on the day appointed for them, and they formed an enthusiastic part of the audiences.

Short Notes of the Trade.

Piqua, O.—The management of May's opera house co-operated recently with a number of local merchants, who issued admission tickets with a certain amount of purchases made at advertised sales, and the net result was highly gratifying all around. The house entertained unusually large crowds, while the merchants participating in the sales reported considerable increases in business.

Lima, O.—The "four-minute men" have been addressing audiences at local theaters with talks on the necessity of unanimous co-operation in war-time work, all of the houses giving time to the speakers. Among those used were the Orpheum, the Star, the Lyric, the Dreamland, the Royal, the Star, the Majestic and the Empire.

CLEVELAND NOTES OF INTEREST

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Building, Cleveland, O.

AKRON, OHIO.—The exhibitors of Akron have formed an organization known as the Akron Screen club. There are 28 active theaters here and nearly all of the managers have joined. The following officers have been elected: Robert Miller, Waldorf theater, president; J. H. Moore, Ideal theater, secretary; C. H. Belden, Thornton theater, treasurer. Their first social affair will be a supper September 10 at Young's restaurant, a summer place near Akron.

He was financially interested in Cleveland theaters and at one time managed the Crown, on East 105th street. Mr. Morris was the father of Sam Morris, of the Selznick Pictures, and Isaac Morris, manager of the Home theater; also Mrs. L. H. Kilk, wife of the present manager of the Crown.

Atlanta News Letter

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Atlanta's Beginning of Prosperity.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Exhibitors here are beginning to feel good, since transportation facilities seem to be well provided for soon, to and from Camp Gordon, and this will give the forty thousand soldiers stationed there an opportunity to come to Atlanta. Already the moving picture theaters are beginning to feel the increased attendance, and much doubt is expressed, with the transportation facilities now being provided pouring soldiers into Atlanta during the evening hours whether the theaters can take care of them. It looks like boom days for Atlanta exhibitors.

Chamblee Church's Free Pictures for Soldiers.

Chamblee, Ga.—One of Chamblee, Georgia's, municipal activities in connection with the entertainment of the soldiers at Camp Gordon will be presentation of a free moving picture show every Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock at the Chamblee Methodist Church. Chamblee, Ga., has grown from a few houses to a city, since the establishment of Camp Gordon, and is sporting four moving picture theaters. They are, however, crude affairs.

"Modern Mother Goose" at Loew's Grand.

Atlanta, Ga.—The big feature film, "Modern Mother Goose," which Loew's Grand theater has brought to Atlanta especially for the entertainment of the children, had its first public showing at a children's matinee at Loew's Grand theater Friday morning. The theater played to capacity Friday and Saturday.

Alice Brady Appears in Person at Loew's

Atlanta, Ga.—Alice Brady, charming star of the Alice Brady Pictures, Inc., and recently of World Film, known and admired by thousands of Atlantians through her appearance upon the picture screen at Loew's Grand theater, in World Film pictures, appeared in person upon the stage of Loew's Grand Tuesday, Aug. 28.

Loew's Grand theater secured for first showing in the South, Miss Brady's newest picture, the historical drama, "Betsy Ross," to be shown conincidental with Miss Brady's appearance in person. Though Miss Brady was seen in person only on Tuesday, her new picture was shown at all performances on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Children Flock to See "Jack and Beanstalk" Lobby.

Atlanta, Ga.—Every child in Atlanta, so it seemed, came out Sunday, Aug. 2, to see "The Village of Cornwall," which had grown overnight in the lobby of the Criterion theater and which was on exhibition Sunday only, as it was cleared away before the opening of the doors Monday morning for the first performance of the big film spectacle, "Jack and the Beanstalk." Manager Willard Patterson spent much time and trouble getting the village ready and the kids saw with delight the most elaborate and lavish lobby exhibit ever attempted in Atlanta.

This miniature village was complete in every respect. Houses, barns, fences, roads, trees, shrubbery, churches, cattle, sheep and the cow that was sold by Jack for the beans. Even the enormous beanstalk was there, and hovering over all inhabitants of this tiny village was the giant, his bulky form towering over everything. One more play like this and Atlanta children will place Willard Patterson in the same class as Santa Claus.

J. H. Butner Arrives in Atlanta.

Atlanta, Ga.—J. H. Butner, who was for the last year, manager of the Washington branch of the Triangle, has arrived in Atlanta and taken charge of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., headquarters being temporarily established at the Lyric theater. The Atlanta branch will serve exhibitors in North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee.

Mr. Butner is delighted in being transferred to Atlanta, and the good fellowship that exists on exchange row among the exchangemen.

IN LOUISVILLE.

Worth a Passing Glance.

Louisville, Ky.—When the Walnut theater went dark at the end of a fortnight's showing Audrey Munson in "Purity," it closed on the two best weeks in the history of that theater. Not only, according to the management of the theater, were the attendance records broken, but the total box office receipts exceeded those of any other two weeks.

After having run tabloid musical comedy attractions through the summer at the Casino, Judge W. Allen Kinney, head of the Princess Amusement Co., has dispensed with the side issue. The Casino has gone back to straight pictures again.

During the showing of "The Slacker" at the Strand, Louisville, the management of the house had a "Camp Zachary Taylor Day," in honor of the soldiers stationed at the army camp just outside the city. On the day in question admission was free to every man in uniform. The house was well filled and very few of the soldiers came alone.

Lee Goldberg has just returned to Louisville from New York where he spent some time looking into forthcoming attractions. He was joined there by Col. Fred Levy, president of the Big Features Rights Corporation, and Mrs. Levy, and spent some time doing the studios. In New York, among others, Mr. Goldberg met Miss Marguerite Clark, and had the pleasure of recalling to her that she opened the Mary Anderson theater.

Kentucky Exhibitors Answer War Appeal

State Committeeman Lee Goldberg Finds No Lack of Patriotism—Gets Hearty Response All Over State—May Divide Territory.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—Lee Goldberg, general manager of the Big Features Rights Corporation, and the Kentucky war committeeman named by William J. Brady, has been in communication with all of the exhibitors in Kentucky and has obtained from them their promise to co-operate in every way possible to acquaint the people with the real inwardness of the war and to help war movements.

All of the exhibitors have agreed to use slides to help along the Red Cross work, food conservation and other allied movements. One of the big pieces of work which the exhibitors will help along will be the floating of the Second Liberty Bond issue, the selling campaign of which is to be undertaken in the near future. For this campaign not only the Louisville theaters, but the houses all over the state will use slides and such views as may be provided.

In the way of food conservation, most of the theaters of the state either have or will make provisions for the appearance of talkers who will spend four minutes at intervals telling those who have come to see the pictures what the food conservation movement means. In Louisville the theaters have or will set aside days on which parts of the receipts will be given to patriotic causes.

Mr. Goldberg is finding that there is a good deal of routine work attached to his office and it is likely that he will shortly divide the state into districts over each of which a sub-committeeman will be appointed.

Theatrical Season Began Labor Day.

Louisville, Ky.—Labor Day saw Louisville's theatrical season opened with Macauley's, the Gaiety and B. F. Keith's theaters bright, while the Buckingham, the burlesque house, hoped soon to be able to announce its premier. The summer vaudeville at Fontaine Ferry Park still continues, in addition to the moving picture theaters, all of which are operating except for the Walnut. This latter house is still dark, on account of the differences over the rent between the owner and the Broadway Amusement Enterprises interests.

In spite of the many amusement places in Louisville, all of them continue to be freely patronized and capacity houses are the rule. There is every indication that this will be a busy winter in Louisville. It is very noticable that audiences in all of the theaters and the moving picture theater crowds are peppered with the khaki of the men and officers stationed at the camps.

The retail merchants are already feeling present prosperity and one of the largest houses in the city reported that its August business this year was three times that of August of last year.

Big Features Go to the Mary Anderson.

Louisville, Ky.—A change that amounts to a complete switch has been announced by the management of the Keith photoplay theaters in Louisville for the winter. The Mary Anderson theater, which has been a 10-cent house, showing the popular pictures, with two and three changes of program weekly, becomes the feature house of the company, while the Strand, which has been the big features house, will take the popular-priced pictures, with two and three changes of program weekly. Prices at the Mary Anderson will be 20 cents and 15 cents, and those at The Strand will be 15 cents and 10 cents. This arrangement began on the first week of September with the Essanay production of Cohan & Harris' "On Trial." The Mary Anderson will also have the first of the new Chaplin series.

Ben Ali Shows "Joan" at 20 Cents.

Lexington, Ky.—For the first time in the history of motion picture in Lexington, prices have been put to a high figure. In connection with its showing of "Joan The Woman," the Ben Ali theater showed at a schedule ranging upwards from 25 cents, and had full houses all along.

Capitol Theater Advertises Stars.

Frankfort, Ky.—The Capitol theater of this city used a full-page newspaper advertisement announcing that it had contracted for the Paramount and Artcraft programs, the first of the offerings being Douglas Fairbanks in "Down to Earth" and the next Marguerite Clark in "The Amazons." The text of the advertisement discussed the Strand in New York, described as the "best known picture theater in the world," and closed with "The Capitol is Your Strand."

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Exchange's Bad Policy Hits Everyboay

Dayton Branch of Fox Lets Bigger Theater Snatch Program from Smaller House and the Consequence Is That No One in City Sees Fox Pictures.

By Paul J. Gray, Alhambra Theater, Dayton, Ohio.

DAYTON, OHIO.—Quite a surprise will be evidenced when the announcement is made that there is at present no house in Dayton presenting Fox features first-run exclusively. The Lyceum, which formerly ran the Fox features really made the program in Dayton, and after developing the stars into drawing cards, the Strand suddenly took the program away from the smaller house. As the Lyceum seats about five hundred and the Strand about eighteen hundred, it can be readily seen that no competition could be offered by them. The Strand did not run the program very long, until they dropped it in place of Artcraft, and, in consequence, the Fox people have no first-run house in Dayton.

It is rumored that the New Auditorium, which will open in the next few weeks, is to run the program; another rumor has it that the Columbia, another large house a square away, is to present first-run Fox features in Dayton. As it has been over three weeks that these conditions have been in effect, the people of Dayton are surely missing some good pictures, as the writer had the privilege of witnessing a private exhibition of "The Honor System," and thinks it a very good ten-reeler. If the rest of the new Fox pictures are to continue in the standard set by the "Honor System," it is hoped that some theater manager will book the program soon.

New Superintendent a Speedy Man.

Dayton, O.—Before being appointed superintendent of the Strand here, one of the largest picture houses in Dayton, Rudolph Yost, formerly assistant treasurer of B. F. Keith's theater, had the reputation of being the fastest ticket racker in the state. This is quite a record in a busy box office, and is something to be proud of. It is hoped that Mr. Yost will make another good record at the Strand and excel in some line there.

Projectors in Dayton's Schools.

Dayton, O.—In the future all school buildings erected in Dayton will be equipped with the latest model projectors, two new schools now being built have this plan in operation, which is only another proof that the moving picture is the leader of them all in up-to-date education.

Negro Situation Troubling Ohio.

Dayton, O.—Almost directly following the recent agitation concerning the showing of the "Birth of a Nation" in Ohio comes the news that the negro problem in this state is growing more acute every day. When one hears all the popular "Dixie" songs that are going the rounds and also thousands of victrolas over the country expounding the fact that Dixie is the dearest place in the world, it would naturally lead one to believe that there is quite a bit of affection in the hearts of Northern whites that is directed toward the black man and that is going to waste. Such is not the case, however, and when remembrances of the Illinois riots are refreshed it also pictures the sentiment of most Ohio people.

At least two-thirds of Governor Cox's Labor Day speech is taken up with the negro question, which indicates the deep feeling throughout the state. It seems that thousands of colored people have been induced to move to Ohio from the South, with promises of good jobs, low rent, etc., by employment agencies who do this only for the money that is in it. Estimates show that on one day this month over a thousand colored people arrived in Cincinnati from the Southern states. There are already demands from several labor unions that this influx be stopped, as it is growing to be a nuisance, for in the winter most of these people will be dependent on the general public for a living.

An excerpt from Governor Cox's speech on Labor Day gives the majority of people reason to be calm, as evidences are given that the question will soon be solved.

Exhibitors in residence districts will hardly find that this situation complicates their problems; but in other neighborhoods they may find matter in it worthy their careful consideration.

Nashville Local Union Gets Concessions

Wins Fight to Place Union Operators in All Local Houses Through Agreement of Crescent Amusement Company with I. A. T. S. E.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—After two years and a half of vigorous agitation on the part of organized labor unions in this city, the Crescent Amusement Company, through its president, Tony Sudekum, has come to an amicable agreement with Local No. 626, I. A. T. S. E., of which Wm. J. Crane is secretary, whereby the Crescent company has agreed to work union labor in its several houses located in Nashville. Heretofore these houses have maintained a strictly non-union policy, but largely through the influence and instrumentality of Lee Murkin, a member of Local No. 46, Stage Employees, a satisfactory agreement has been reached between the union men and President Sudekum. The agreement is already in force, having taken immediate effect, but contracts were drawn up following the verbal understanding, for a period of four years, August 31, 1917, to August 31, 1921, inclusive.

A voluntary feature of the agreement, on the part of Mr. Sudekum, was an increase in salary accorded the men in the employ of the Crescent Amusement Company, averaging two to three dollars per week. This was not called for by the operators, but holds forth in the written contracts. The houses affected by this action are the Fifth Avenue, Crescent, Elite, Rex, and Alhambra theaters, all located on Fifth avenue.

The victory of the union, however, is not limited to the Crescent company, but extends also to the suburban districts. L. E. Marshall, operating the Colonial, at Second avenue South and Carroll street, and the Dixie, for colored people, located at First avenue and LaFayette street, has signed similar contracts for one year. These theaters, up to two months ago, had been operating in sympathy with the union, but withdrew, and have just been brought back into the old working scale.

Robert Haury, manager of the Peafowl theater, Fourth and Meridan streets, has closed one year contracts with the local union. This leaves only three Nashville houses outside the local, which are under the control of Henry Mousson, operating the Central theater for white people, and the Liberty and Royal Palace for negroes. The union, however, will not let up on these three houses until some kind of a satisfactory understanding is reached, according to the secretary of Local No. 626, and it is expected that they will fall in line within a short time.

The Nashville local consists of forty-three members, and Secretary Crane has been in charge since February. Prior to that time Fred Carter held the secretaryship, but is now out of the city and no longer connected with this organization. His brother, Frank Carter, has had much to do with the success of the union policy in connection with the suburban houses, however, and is responsible for a large part of the union's achievements. The majority of the credit is being given to Lee Murkin by the operators, who, while not an operator himself, is an enthusiastic union man, being connected with the Princess theater as stage carpenter.

Elite Runs Billie Burke Whole Week.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Elite theater, recently opened as a moving picture feature house, ran "The Mysterious Miss Terry," featuring Billie Burke, for the entire week of August 27th, with prices set at 10 cents daytime, and 15 cents night. This is the third week of running a single picture at the Elite, something which is a rare occasion in Nashville, and will be followed next week by a Mary Pickford Artcraft subject.

Sunday Nuisance Case Decided.

Nashville, Tenn.—A decided victory has been achieved by amusement owners in Nashville through the decision of Special Judge Robert E. Blake, of the Second Circuit Court, who has ruled that Sunday baseball in this city can not be considered a public nuisance. It was pointed out at the time that if the courts decided in favor of the baseball club, that no nuisance was committed by an athletic contest of this kind on Sunday, certainly the operation of theaters on Sunday would not be a nuisance. Should the local theater managers decide at any future time to wage an active fight for Sunday opening, they will have a splendid basic ground to work upon.

Lincoln Theater Opens for Negroes.

Nashville, Tenn.—Entirely renovated, both inside and out, and under new management, the Lincoln theater for colored people opened for business on August 27th as a feature and comedy house. The management promises to furnish the negro population with a high-class line of film attractions for the fall and winter season.

A Successful Middle West Showman.

Battle Creek, Mich.—The sound business sense of a policy of "satisfaction guaranteed", as applied to what is known as "show business", is no better exemplified than in the career of W. S. Butterfield, more familarly known as "Colonel" Butterfield of Battle Creek. On this policy has depended the upbuilding of a large circuit of theaters, comprising both motion picture and vaudeville houses, as well as an important participation in the amusement affairs of Michigan. Colonel Butterfield started in as an usher and soon advanced himself to the position of treasurer in an upstate New York theater. Along came old man "Wanderlust" and before long Colonel Butterfield was a manager for one of Charles E. Blaney's then numerous traveling attractions.

Col. W. S. Butterfield.

His success with Blaney led him to branch out for himself and the result was the introduction of Rose Stahl and William Bonelli to the one-night stands. After several seasons with various road shows, the Colonel found himself one summer's day in Battle Creek. He decided that a vaudeville theater would be a valuable adjunct to the town's attractions.

The Hamblin opera house, which had welcomed Booth and Barrett to Battle Creek was vacant, owing to the recent opening of a fine new theater for the traveling shows. So the Colonel leased the theater, borrowed some opera chairs, sent to Chicago for some vaudeville acts, and laid the cornerstone of the present Butterfield circuit. At the present time this circuit includes two theaters in Battle Creek, one in Kalamazoo, one in Jackson, one in Ann Arbor, one in Lansing, three in Flint, three in Saginaw, and one in Bay City. In addition Colonel Butterfield is an active partner in theaters located in Waterloo, Iowa; Davenport, Iowa; Rockford, Illinois; Chicago, Illinois; Green Bay, Wisconsin, and Hammond, Indiana, as well as other theatrical holdings scattered through the Middle West.

The rapid evolution of the motion picture field attracted the Colonel's attention in the past few years, with the result that he is gradually coming into prominence in that division.

Michigan Filmdom Starts Its New Season

Flint Sees Premier of Butterfield's New Palace—Kunsky Opens Legitimate Theater—State's Biggest Theater Will Add Vaudeville.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The past week was an important one from the theatrical standpoint in the state of Michigan. Two brand new houses opened up, while the largest theater in the state reopened under a new policy.

First, there was the opening of the New Palace theater in Flint, owned by Col. W. S. Butterfield. The opening took place Thursday evening, August 30, and the affair was very successful. The policy of the Palace theater is vaudeville, Col. Butterfield shifting motion pictures to the Garden, and a combination of big features and road attractions to the Majestic in that city. The Palace seats about 1,500 and has a very complete motion picture booth, fully equipped with Power's machines and a Hertner transverter. After the night shows, Col. Butterfield entertained about 100 of his friends at a banquet in the Hotel Dresden, followed by informal vaudeville and dacing. Those from Detroit who went to the opening were J. O. Brooks, Art Hoganson, Eddie Murphy, Harry S. Lorch, Earl H. Rathbun, Jos. Kalisha, John M. Erickson, A. I. Shapiro, Harry Zapp and Jacob Smith (Moving Picture World), all from Detroit. There was also present two trainloads of Chicago vaudeville agents and managers, as well as a number of the managers of Butterfield theaters in other Michigan cities.

Second, the New Adams theater, Detroit, opened Saturday evening, Sept. 1, with dramatic stock. This house is owned by John H. Kunsky, making his tenth theater in Detroit. It is his first house devoted to this type of amusement, most of his other theaters being devoted to motion pictures. The Adams is a beautiful playhouse, seating about 1,800, and the sales of season tickets already assures Mr. Kunsky of another big theatrical success.

Third, the reopening of the Regent theater, Detroit. In the past this house has been devoted to motion pictures, but under the new lease to C. H. Miles it is devoted to vaudeville and pictures. The opening took place Labor Day, and the theater was packed to capacity at every show. If the opening is any criterion, the Regent is certain to continue with its present policy. The opening picture attraction was a Triangle feature, "They're Off." For the second week Mr. Miles is using the "Battle of the Tanks," Pathe release. Tom Ealand, manager of the Orpheum theater for Mr. Miles, is also managing and directing the Regent under the new lessee.

Operators Win an Increase in Wages.

Detroit, Mich.—The wage discussion between the union operators and the exhibitors in Detroit has been satisfactorily adjusted. The new contract at first demanded by the unions, effective Sept. 1, had a number of clauses which exhibitors considered unreasonable. Arbitration committees were appointed by both sides for a joint conference, and after several meetings, all matters were mutually fixed up. The operators get a wage increase, but eliminate the undesirable features of the new contract, which settles the wage scale for union operators until Sept. 1, 1918.

Mutual Exchange in New Film Building.

Detroit, Mich.—The Mutual exchange moved on Sept. 1 from 97 Woodward avenue, Detroit, to the new film building, at John R and Elizabeth streets, being the first film company to move to the new building. The Mutual occupies the greater portion of the second floor. Partitions are now being installed and it will probably be the 15th of the month before everything will be in its proper place. Other exchanges will be moving this month, so that by Octobr 1 most of the film companies will be doing business at the film building.

Joseph Horwitz Passed Cigars Recently.

Detroit, Mich.—"Hustling" Joe Horwitz, Universal salesman in Detroit, recently celebrated his 57th birthday, which was an occasion for "passing the cigars" among his many exhibitor friends. Mr. Horwitz came to Detroit several months ago direct from the New York office, where he had been in the life insurance business for 20 years. The Universal wanted a real salesman to locate in Detroit and build the city business to the point where it should be. Joe had made a success of the life insurance business by absolutely adhering to square principles—why wouldn't the same principles apply to his selling film. So he consented to go to Detroit.

Joseph Horwitz.

When he started to call on the Detroit exhibitors Universal had 31 aceounts. On August 18, Universal was supplying service of one kind or another to 121 Detroit theaters—and Joe says he is not through yet, although the town has only about 140 houses.

In consideration of his splendid work, Universal bought Joe a five-passenger automobile, which enables him to call on from 12 to 15 exhibitors every night.

Joe has "57 varieties" of pep—and for a man of 57 summers he is a wonder at selling film.

W. O. Kenan Has Enlarged His Theater.

Adrian, Mich.—The Crescent theater, Adrian, Mich., operated by W. O. Kenan, is being extensively remodeled and enlarged to 400 seats. Mr. Kenan has been conducting the house for eight years and has a big success of that institution. He will take into partnership his son-in-law, Vincent J. Williams, who will be active in the management of the Crescent. No less than ten thousand dollars will actually be spent in fixing up the Crescent, during which time the house will be closed. A new 20-year lease has been taken of the property by Messrs. Kenan and Williams.

Detroit's Duplex Will Be a Garage.

Detroit, Mich.—The theater equipment of the Duplex theater, Detroit, was sold at public auction on Sept. 4 to satisfy a judgment against that playhouse. This means "good-bye" to the Duplex as a theatrical enterprise. We will likely see the building converted into a garage.

Two Houses Charge 7 Cents.

Detroit, Mich.—This city now has several seven cent theaters—the Comique and the Rosebud, operated by the Woodward Amusement Co. Heretofore these houses have had a six cent admission price. "Increased expenses and increased film rental are the reasons for the advance," said Bert Williams, general manager.

Jewel Opens Temporary Offices.

Detroit, Mich.—The Jewel Productions, Inc., have opened temporary offices at 120 Broadway, in charge of Harry A. Bugie. Later he will have offices in the new film building.

Airdome Season in St. Louis Draws to Close

Mosquitoes Seek in Vain for the Thin Haired Patron—Legitimate Theaters Brush Up Stock Promises—Picture Houses Brighten.

By A. H. Giebler, 4123 Westminster Pl., St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS. MO. — It's getting along toward the shag end of summer here in St. Louis, and the baldheaded fans are happy because the shows will be moving back indoors pretty soon.

Downtown, in the treeless sections, the airdomes are not so bad from an insect standpoint, but out in the neighborhoods, where there are lots of leaves and grass, the bugs are fierce on a chap whose cranial foliage is getting thin, and even those who have hair find their whole evening spoiled when they have to go home and spend half an hour digging the katydids out of their ears.

Not Applause for Wild Cat Feature.

There was a "wild-cat" feature salesman here this summer who rented his unprecedented attraction to an airdome exhibitor out in the bug belt. Along about the last reel the "wild-catter" came in from the outside, stopped, and listened a minute.

"Gee, it's going great, ain't it?" he said to the exhibitor.

"It is not," grumbled the exhibitor, "it's a rotten show."

"But listen to that!" said the W. C. "Hear 'em applaudin' !"

"Applaudin' hell!" said the exhibitor. "They ain't applaudin', they're slappin' skeeters"!

Otherwise things are pretty brisk and the outlook for fall and winter business is promising.

Promises by the Legits as Usual.

The regular stage people are getting into print with their annual predictions of a revival of the drama. The newspapers are coming out with the usual this-time-of-the-year stories on the brilliant winter season that is about to burst upon us.

It is curious how hope springs eternal in the dramatic editors' breasts. They have been sitting back and watching the regular drama die of slow starvation for the last six years and they can not see the signs of dissolution yet.

Last year there was only one theater outside of the vaudeville and burlesque houses that kept its doors open all season, and the signs do not look any better for the future; yet, in the face of this, they whet up their fountain pens and rave about the momentous dramatic events that are about to happen to us, and predict a return of the old days when some of the regular houses were so arrogant that they did not have telephone connections with the common herd for fear some one might want to reserve a seat in advance.

Let 'em rave! We read their dope with our tongue in our cheek and the salt cellar handy.

The advance drama stuff is the same as it was last year. We are to get all of the great New York successes. And we will! We'll get 'em—we've got 'em before, and there's no earthly reason why we shouldn't get 'em again. Nobody in New York wants 'em any longer. They are all a year and a half and two years old, and they have worn themselves out utterly and completely.

They'll send us the New York shows with the original casts, the original scenery and the original costumes, just as they were bought two years ago without ever having been to the dry cleaners. They do that to give us the real New York atmosphere!

Same old jokes, same old songs we have been listening to in the four-a-day vaudeville houses all summer. And then some of these regular drama birds can't understand why St. Louis is a poor show town.

Houses Open for Fall Season.

The Jefferson will open next week, and the Garrick—which has been renamed the Shubert-Garrick, why, the Lord only knows; nobody will ever call it that—is to begin a brilliant season of speaking stage plays right away. But to make sure, they are opening with pictures, "Jack and the Beanstalk."

The Columbia has started a twelve-hour continuous grind with a half picture and half vaudeville bill.

The picture houses are booming and getting ready for what looks like good business for fall and winter.

The New Grand Central has just finished a two weeks' run of "Within the Law," and have "On Trial," the first of the First National Exhibitors Circuit releases on the screen this week.

The Lyrics are stepping along with their usual first run Paramounts.

Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu, of the Congress, is pleasing big audiences with a mixture of Triangle, Paramount, Fox and Vitagraphs.

Skouras Brothers, out at the Pageant, are doing a nice business.

The Kings theater is reigning again with first run Triangles, and A. E. Morelock is getting ready to break into the game with the beautiful new Liberty theater, which will open very shortly with big stuff.

Down on the South Side, the Shenandoah, the Juniata, and the Arsenal are holding their own, and Freund Brothers, with the big Cinderella, are handling crowds of more than the usual size.

Joe Mogler, up on Ninth and Bremen, reports prosperity at the Mogler and the Bremen.

The Lindell is pleasing the North Side patrons.

St. Louis Exchanges Steady.

With the exchanges things are somewhat quiet. There hasn't been a new manager appointed for a whole week. It got so for awhile that a person going into any of the St. Louis offices didn't ask where is the manager, but who is the manager. There have been twenty-seven changes in exchange heads in this town in the last few months.

Walter Irwin, head mogul of the Vitagraph, was in town for a day two weeks ago and said things look mighty good hereabouts to him.

Walter Sanford, head publicity dopester for Fox, was here for a few days, arranging for the first appearance of "Jack and the Beanstalk."

Mr. Sanford is an old-timer in these parts, having been manager of the Olympic for a number of years before he joined out with the movies. Everybody was glad to see Walt except the World correspondent, who didn't get to see him and is sore about it.

More About What's Going On.

St. Louis, Mo.—Roy Bettis has come all the way up here from Texas to help Syd Baker sell Foursquare features. Roy is a nice looking boy, doesn't look at all like we thought people from Texas looked. He isn't bowlegged from riding a horse, as all the Texas folks we see in the movies are, and he doesn't wear a wide hat, nor pants with hair down the sides, nor "pack" a gun.

Roy has been in the picture game quite a spell, he says, and from a kind of bright look about him we draw an idea that he'll make good. Syd Baker says he is going out on the road with "The Sin Woman," which isn't as bad as it sounds, the same being only a picture. Roy's address will be at the Foursquare Pictures Corp., Empress Theater Bldg., if any of the folks down in Texas want to write to him.

Little Levy is a Live One.

Leo (Little) Levy, who is pretty well known hereabouts as a chap whose size and weight doesn't seem to have anything to do with the number of contracts he brings in, has gone down to 3547 Olive street and got a job from G. F. Hennessy selling Bluebird features and Alice Howell comedies. Levy used to work for the Bluebird people, so it's like coming back home for him, and he says he's glad to get back, and Hennessy says he's glad to have him, and so exerybody's happy.

Hoffman Not at all Stuck Up.

St. Louis, Mo.—M. H. Hoffman, high mogul of the Foursquare Pictures Corp., dropped off the Cannon Ball when it stopped at the depot here for water last Thursday, and went to see Syd Baker, who runs the office for him here. He and Syd got so interested talking that he stayed over till the evening train. We were introduced to Mr. Hoffman and were pleased to meet him. He is a nice man to talk to and knows a lot about pictures and is not a bit stuck up like some of those New Yorkers.

Star Boarder at the Kings'll Stay.

A. F. King, auditor at the Universal exchange, has just taken a new boarder at his house. The newcomer didn't bring any personal property along when he came, but Mr. King and his wife liked his looks so well that they got him a brand new outfit of everything to wear and a rattle and some more things to play with, which pleased the little chap so well that he decided to stay, and Mr. King says he is already the star boarder.

New Paramount Office in Fine Location.

St. Louis, Mo.—The K. C. Feature Film Co., formerly the Monarch Feature Film Co., distributers of Paramount pictures, will move from the Gayety Theater building at 14th and Locust streets, where it has been located for several years, to the building formerly occupied by the Vandeventer Trust Co., at 3929 Olive street. The new Paramount offices are in a fine location, being just a little over a block from Film Row. Both floors of the building have been leased, each of which has a floor space of 35 by 80 feet. The offices are now being put in shape.

G. E. McKean, the manager, says that the new quarters will be fitted up in the most modern style and every facility for the prompt and efficienct handling of films will be installed.

Lafayette Theater Enlarged for New Session.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Lafayette theater, at Lafayette and Jefferson avenues, is being remodeled for the fall and winter season. The Lafayette is one of the first high class neighborhood houses to be built in St. Louis, and at the time of its erection its six hundred seats were considered ample for the patrons. The new alterations will increase the capacity to 800, and include a new lighting system for the front and lobby. The Lafayette is operated by the Athenian Amusement Company, with E. Pasmezoglu as manager.

"Jack" On the Job at Garrick.

St. Louis, Mo.—"Jack and the Beanstalk" opened at the Shubert-Garrick theater on Sunday, Sept. 2, with admission prices of 25 and 50 cents at matinees, and 25 cents to one dollar in the evening.

Minneapolis Letter on Week's Film News

M. R. Dick Sells Out to H. E. Pierce—New Exchange Opens to Distribute "Robinson Crusoe"—Pictures Shown Fair Week—Notes of Trade.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — Despite the fact that the Minnesota State Fair brought a bumper business to all Twin City photoplay houses during the week of September 2, there is not a great deal to write about; for, peculiar as it may seem, there was only one change of exchange managers during the entire week.

M. R. Dick Sells Out.

M. R. Dick, who for two years has operated a state rights exchange at Room 814 Produce Exchange building, sold his business to Harry E. Pierce of Duluth, Minn. Mr. Dick controlled territorial rights on "The End of the World," "Siberian Travel Pictures," Motoy comedies and other films. He has joined the Barnett Attractions exchange and will again act as first lieutenant to Bert Barnett, Sr., whom he once worked for at the old Famous Players All Star Feature exchange controlled by the Barnetts.

"Robinson Crusoe" Exchange Opened.

Dallas Woman Applies for Operator's Card

Local Union Puts Matter of Admitting Fair Operator Up to National Officers—She Asks Why She Wouldn't Be a Good Picture Operator.

By Douglas Hawley, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEX.—Would a picture look any better if the reel was operated by a lady? The question presents itself in the possibility of a woman operator for some Dallas show.

Miss Louise Millet has applied for membership in the Dallas union of motion picture machine operators. There was no precedent under which officials of the union might act in the matter, and consequently the fair one's application has been referred to national officers of the union.

"Why shouldn't a woman operate a motion picture machine?" she asked, answering a question as to how she came to select the profession, in the ranks of which thus far the Southwest knows only men.

"There are women bank presidents—there are women street-car conductors in some cities. Right here in Dallas, they tell me, women bill collectors are more efficient than the men. Why shouldn't a woman prove just as efficient in the operation of a picture machine as a man? I've qualified before the city electrician, and I mean to have a position if the union will accept my application for membership."

At Fort Worth Walk Out.

Fort Worth, Tex.—Fort Worth faces a strike of machine operators. Men in two theaters there—the Byers and Majestic—walked out on the night of August 30, demanding time and a half for overtime, double time for holidays and eight hours a day, with opening time at 8:30 and closing 11 p. m. The present rate of pay is said to be $25 per week for six days.

Iowa News Letter.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

Rumor of New Chain of Theaters.

DES MOINES, IA.—The film men of Des Moines are talking of the persistent rumor that a large syndicate of successful exhibitors in the eastern part of the state are strongly contemplating erecting a very large and up to the minute picture house in Fort Dodge, Waterloo and Mason City. At the present time this syndicate controls five first class houses and it is the aim to have a string of twelve or fifteen houses of the better sort all through Iowa.

"Twenty Thousand Leagues" Fourth Big Week.

Des Moines, Ia.—During Fair Week, Zach Harris, owner of the Iowa rights for "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," leased the Coliseum and showed his picture evenings. This made the fourth big week for this picture in Des Moines, an unprecedented run of any picture except the "Birth of a Nation."

Des Moines Exhibitor Works Trick on Fair Visitors.

Des Moines, Ia.—To the discredit of Des Moines exhibitors, one of the biggest of them worked a low down trick on visitors to the fair, during the whole week of the State Fair. Realizing how well people from the country enjoy vaudeville as well as motion pictures and how quickly they would grasp at an opportunity to see both for a dime, this man placed a one-sheet prominently in his lobby. The sheet was on white cardboard and at the top there were several photographs of vaudeville performers, a couple dancing, a comedian, a monologist and the like for eight pictures. Then in the center of the sheet in large brightly colored letters about eight inches in heigth was the word vaudeville with above it in letters less than an inch in size "Some people like—" and then just below the prominent word of "Vaudeville" were the same small lettered words, "but, we show pictures, only."

The trick worked all too well, the visitors flocking in and waiting for the vaudeville to start until their patience exhausted they would leave in a great rage. The film men of the town ridiculed this exhibitor and openly denounced him, but he seems to have little honor when it comes to making money. The vaudeville sign was kept in the lobby throughout the entire week, hoodwinking the public who read only the big word and glanced at the pictures. There ought to be some way of "getting" such exhibitors.

False "Slacker" Picture Causes Trouble.

Des Moines, Ia.—The local Metro exchange is having considerable trouble with exhibitors over the state, booking contemporary "slacker" pictures and advertising them as "The Slacker." In some cases rival exhibitors in the same town where the original "The Slacker" is running will advertise other pictures on the same order as "The Slacker."

In two cases it has been found necessary to prosecute exhibitors on the grounds that the exhibitor was not only defrauding the public but infringing on a copyrighted title. In one case an injunction was obtained that prevented the exhibitor from not only calling the picture "The Slacker" but from even showing the other film. Another time the erring exhibitor came half way and booked "The Slacker" picture after it had already been shown in another house. A circular letter has been mailed all over the state warning exhibitors from advertising any rival picture by the Metro title.

Notes From Midwest Office.

Des Moines, Ia.—A. Kahn has resigned from the selling force of the Triangle and will handle the Mid West productions in the western part of Iowa.

John J. Shipley, publicity manager of the Mid West office, took "The Lone Wolf" print into the eastern part of Iowa last week for a private trade showing of the successful picture.

Theaters Aid in "Smokes for Our Soldiers.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Des Moines Evening Tribune, the largest evening paper in the city, has opened a campaign for "Smokes for Our Soldiers," placing red, white and blue barrels in the cigar stores in the city and all over the state. Much publicity has been given the campaign and when the Majestic and Casino theaters placed a barrel in their lobbies they naturally received much press notice. In addition to the placing of the barrels the two theaters offered five per cent. of their proceeds to the purchasing of "smokes" for the barrels. Zach Harris also placed a barrel in the lobby of the Coliseum and gave ten per cent. of his proceeds to the purchasing of smokes. The stunt popularized all three places of amusement during Fair Week, and the Majestic and Casino barrels will be maintained until the close of the Tribune campaign.

Laemmle Exchange Happenings.

Des Moines, Ia.—J. F. Peckenpaugh, salesman for the Bluebird office in this city, has given up the film business entirely.

George N. Wood has taken charge of the shipping department of the Laemmle Film Service and will be assisted in his work by W. R. Peacocke. D. W. Haskell is a new poster man at the same office.

San Francisco, Cal.—Manager B. F. Simpson, of the local Triangle branch, states that the demand for the Douglas Fairbanks and William Hart re-issues has been very heavy and that the last week in August marked the biggest business ever done at this exchange. The re-issues of the productions featuring these stars have been booked, among others, to the following houses: Strand theater, San Francisco; Kinema theaters, Oakland and Fresno; Goddard's J Street theater, Sacramento; Lyric theater, Stockton, and U. C. theater, Berkeley. William Desmond was a recent visitor here.

Four Minute Men in California Theaters

United Motion Picture Men in Northern California Appoint Committee of Film Men to Supervise the Patriotic Campaign.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Arrangements have been completed for the inauguration of a campaign of Four Minute Men in local houses under the authority of the Committee on Public Information, Washington, D. C. This subject was made the principal item of business at a meeting of the United Motion Picture Industry of Northern California held late in August, and a committee was appointed to take this matter up with exhibitors, arrange for speakers and supervise the campaign generally. This committee consists of Louis Reichert, manager of the local Metro exchange, who will represent the film exchange interests, and Eugene H. Roth, of the Portola theater, who will represent exhibitors. They have appointed Jesse H. Steinhart, a local attorney, chairman of the local committee, with authority to arrange for the services of speakers.

Bar to "Clansman" Removed.

San Francisco, Cal.—By a ruling of the State Appellate Court the attempt of negroes at Oakland, Cal., to stop the exhibition of "The Clansman" has been quashed and this production may now be shown in California without further hindrance. The ruling was handed down in the case of D. R. Wallace against the Macdonough Theater Company, F. A. Geisea, owner, and D. W. Griffith and Thomas Dixon, Jr., lessors. The Alameda County Superior Court refused to grant an injunction and the matter was then appealed to the higher court, with the result that the action of the lower court was upheld.

Injunction in Infringement Case.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Metro corporation has secured a permanent injunction against the New York & San Francisco Amusement Co., the Strand Theater Company, D. J. Grauman and Sidney Grauman to prevent them from making any use of the name "Slacker" in connection with a photoplay. This injunction was secured on the showing that during the run of "The Slacker," a Metro production, the term "Slacker" was prominently used by the owners of the Strand theater in advertising another picture.

New Manager for K-E-S-E.

San Francisco, Cal.—W. O. Edmonds, who has had charge of the K-E-S-E exchange in this city since the opening of this branch, has tendered his resignation and will leave at once for Reno, Nev., where he will take charge of the Majestic theater, conducted by the Nixon estate. He will be succeeded here by Meyer Cohen, who has filled the position of head salesman at the Los Angeles office for some time, and who also has a wide acquaintance in the local field. When Mr. Edmonds goes to Reno he will take with him Architect M. V. Politeo, and plans will be considered for remodeling and enlarging the Majestic. It is also planned to erect a large amusement place with tea rooms, dancing floors, hanging gardens, soft drink parlors and the like on property adjoining this house owned by the Nixon estate.

Higher Prices With Increased Attendance.

San Francisco, Cal.—The new schedule of prices at the Imperial theater has been a success beyond all expectations, and instead of there being a falling off in patronage, as was expected by Manager J. A. Partington, there has been an increase in attendance since these were announced, with a marked gain in receipts. More seats at 35 cents are now being sold than was ever the case at 30 cents and on two occasions during August all former records for attendance and for receipts were broken. This is considered remarkable especially since a street car strike is in progress here that interferes with night business to a considerable extent. Business has shown a gain of almost thirty per cent. since the higher scale of admission prices was placed in effect.

R. A. Duhem Finds Business Brisk.

San Francisco, Cal.—Ray A. Duhem, of the Duhem Motion Picture Manufacturing Co., reports that business has been quite active of late, both in the line of camera work and in finishing and developing. He was commissioned to make a three-reel picture covering the recent visit of the Imperial Japanese mission to this city and accompanied the party headed by Viscount Ishii to Mount Tamalpais, the Yosemite Valley and other scenic spots in Northern California. One print of the film made has been sent to the President of the United States and another to the Emperor of Japan.

"The Lone Wolf" Makes a Hit.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Selznick release, "The Lone Wolf," has met with such favor here that the management of the Strand theater has retained it for a second week's run. Bert Lytell, who portrays the leading role, was for years a stock company idol in this city, and many of his former admirers came to see him in his first film appearance.

Changes in K-E-S-E Sales Force.

San Francisco, Cal.—H. W. Korper, who has been with the local K-E-S-E branch since the first of the year as outside salesman, has resigned and will leave for Chicago shortly to accept an important position.

Miss Irene Miller has been added to the traveling staff and is now on the road for K-E-S-E visiting exhibitors and appearing before women's clubs, educators and public bodies in the interests of the Conquest series.

Photoplayer Company Issues House Organ.

Considerable space is given in the initial number to the new organ recently installed in the T. & D. Tivoli opera house.

New Exchange Making Improvements.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Select Pictures Corporation, which has succeeded the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, has taken over the former quarters of this concern at 985 Market street and is installing a large film vault and making other improvements of a permanent nature. District Manager Ben S. Cohen is making a short visit to Seattle to be present when the branch at that point moves into its new building.

R. B. Quive Off On Vacation.

San Francisco, Cal.—R. B. Quive, manager of the local branch of the Greater Vitagraph, has left for Chicago on a short vacation trip, the first in several years, and will attend a family reunion. Before leaving he gave a trade showing of the new serial, "The Fighting Trail," and started an active campaign on this. Western Division Manager H. D. Naugle is in charge of the local office during the absence of Mr. Quive.

Notes Gathered at the Exchanges.

Portland, Ore.—Joe Merrick, popular in Portland territory as traveler for General a year or so ago, and until recently Seattle manager for Mutual, was a recent visitor in Portland en route to Los Angeles to take charge of the Mutual office there. The Portland boys are congratulating Mr. Merrick on his well earned promotions.

R. C. Montgomery, traveler for World Film, who has been quite a stranger in these parts, returned to Portland recently. His absence has caused a big and successful offensive movement for business throughout the remote sections of the territory.

The Paramount office is proud of showing three first run pictures in the big downtown theaters at the same time. The Liberty ran "Hashimura Togo," The Columbia Billie Burke in "Mysterious Miss Terry" and the Peoples' Petrova in "The Law of the Land."

Miss Joe Donnelley, who is managing Lamson's Film Exchange in Seattle, was in Portland recently with "The Barrier," which had a successful second run at the Star. The first run was at the People's in July. Miss Donnelley is reputed to be one of the cleverest "film women" in the business and has a host of friends in this territory.

S. L. Warner, of Warner Bros., who is promoting a co-operative film distribution plan among the exhibitors in the United States, was a recent visitor in Portland in the interests of his proposition.

With the Oregon Exhibitors.

Castle Rock, Wash.—Geo. Kramberger has sold the Dreamland theater to Fred Ragins.

North Bend, Ore.—Denny Hull has completed remodeling the Joy theater and has installed two new projectors supplied by Pete Sabo, of Portland.

Strand Drops Back to a Dime.

Portland, Ore.—The Strand, Portland's photoville theater, has again put its admission price down to a dime. A few months ago, after making extensive alterations in the theater, the admission was raised to fifteen cents, the price charged in regular photoplay theaters. The Strand shows a program of four acts of vaudeville and a first run photoplay.

Edwin F. James Back in Town.

Portland, Ore.—Edwin F. James, former owner of the Majestic and James' Broadway theaters, has returned to Portland after spending several months in Great Falls, Montana, in promotion work.

Exchanges Now in Portland Are Prosperous

Distributors Now in Oregon Territory Are Enjoying Fall Rush—New Exchanges See the Advantages of Portland's Location.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—"Our only regret," said C. M. Hill, manager of the new Portland Paramount office, "is that we did not establish a distributing agency in Portland sooner. We now have customers on our books who have never before been users of Paramount service. They objected to the long haul that was heretofore necessary when Oregon territory was served out of other cities than Portland. We are highly gratified with the business our new office is doing and with the enthusiasm with which exhibitors have welcomed our coming to Portland."

As proof of his assertions, Mr. Hill showed the World correspondent a stack of contracts a hand or more high, all signed since the opening of the new office.

Paramount is not the only exchange that is enjoying prosperity, however. W. W. Kofeldt, manager for Pathe, reports the month of August the best in the history of the exchange, topping every record for business.

Manager George E. Jackson, Portland Mutual manager, reports the fall business opening excellently with a record number of contracts for Mutual service being signed during the last two weeks in August.

The indications are that the exhibitors in the territory are waking up to the advantages of doing business with local exchanges and doing away with long hauls on films.

Jewel Productions Opens Office.

Portland, Ore.—Jewel Productions, Inc., has opened headquarters in Portland in the office of the Film Supply Company of Oregon. The office is in charge of Bert Latz, who has the title of Northwest manager. The Portland office will handle Jewel productions in Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana and as far east as the Dakotas. Mr. Latz has been with the Film Supply Company and the Universal people in this territory, having at one time been traveling representative out of Portland. He left the Universal office in Seattle to become manager for Jewel. John Meldrum succeeded Mr. Latz in Seattle as Universal manager.

Guy Matlock Makes a Pilgrimage.

Portland, Ore.—It isn't very often that Guy Matlock, manager of the Pendleton Amusement Company at Pendleton, Oregon, travels very far. He stays pretty close to his business in the Round-up city. But he came to Portland the other day to pay his respects to his fellow exhibitors and was seen on Film Row with George Bligh, he of Salem. Mr. Bligh is second vice-president of the Oregon Exhibitors' League and Mr. Matlock is fourth vice-president, so they undoubtedly had a perfect right to be in each other's company.

Mr. Matlock's company controls four theaters in Pendleton and he reports all of them prosperous. His purpose in being in Portland was to line up the big services.

Columbia Theater Fixes Up.

Portland, Oregon.—E. J. Myrick, supervisor of the Jensen & Von Herberg interests here, is making improvements in the Columbia theater that will make this house a strong bidder for popularity against the big Liberty, the other Jensen & Von Herberg theater in Portland. A split velvet curtain, the same style as is in use at the Liberty, new lighting system, decorations, carpets and draperies are being fitted into the theater. Mr. Myrick is personally supervising the improvements, the details of which are being attended to by Percy Collins of Seattle, the man who designed the interior of the Liberty.

The Liberty will take up the fashion show idea successfully used at the Columbia last winter and each Monday living fashion models will be exhibited.

New Mutual Manager at Portland.

Portland, Ore.—George E. Jackson, who was recently selected manager of the Portland office of the Mutual Film Corporation, entered the film industry in 1915 as salesman for Mutual at Minneapolis office. Mr. Jackson worked out of the Minneapolis and Fargo offices of Mutual for about a year and a half, when he was transferred to the Pacific Northwest territory. Prior to becoming a film salesman, he was traveller for the American Tobacco Company for five years.

George E. Jackson.

As travelling representative for Mutual out of Portland, Mr. Jackson has made a host of friends in the film fraternity who are glad to hear of his promotion to managership.

Alex Tagg Will Run Only the Big Cnes.

Astoria, Ore.—Alex Tagg, who owns the Jewel theater, Astoria, Ore., was a recent visitor in Portland, booking service, and has announced the new policy of his theater. Mr. Tagg believes there are now enough "big" pictures in the market to run this class exclusively and has made his bookings accordingly. He reports business good in Astoria.

C. Morton Cohen Back in Portland.

Portland, Ore.—S. Morton Cohen, always a real factor in the theatrical situation of the country, is back in Portland after a protracted stay in the East and in California. Whether he has any plans for New Portland enterprises is not divulged. Mr. Cohen controls the Photoville theater in Los Angeles and was the man who originated photoville at the Portland Strand several years ago.

Charles Schram Takes a New Hold.

Oregon City, Ore.—Charley Schram, the veteran theater man here, is planning a big season next year and is preparing for it by making many changes in his theater. New projection equipment has been installed and he is now throwing a much better picture than formerly. Other improvements along the lines of decorations and general building repairs have been started which, when completed, will put new "pep" into the old Grand.

Soldiers Admitted Free.

Portland, Ore.—For a week prior to the departure of Oregon troops to the American Lake cantonment, the Portland downtown theaters admitted soldiers in uniform free. The invitation was extended through the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon at the suggestion of the ladies' auxiliary of the Oregon military bodies. Although the exhibitors urged the soldiers to make full use of the free admission courtesy the boys were most considerate and did not abuse the privilege.

KALEM.

POLITICS IN PUMPKIN CENTER (Ham and Bud Comedy).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (A. E. Duncan); The Girl (Juanita Sponsler); The Father (John Steppling); Weary Willie (Henry Murdoch).

Election day in Pumpkin Center is over, and the same old gang is in again. Ham has been elected to every office, from mayor to fire insurance agent, and Bud is his assistant in every office. Ham's first official act is to make the town "bone dry." That does not prevent him from storing up a few cold bottles in his own house.

When Weary Willie meanders into town and finds these bottles in the mayor's wine cellar, he proceeds to empty them, and very soon shows the effects. He is arrested for breaking the prohibition law and brought up for trial before Judge Ham. The villagers clamor that the tramp show them where he got the "stuff." When Willie leads them to the mayor's home, it's all up with the mayor. Ham is bounced, and Bud is given the job.

Planning revenge, Ham makes out a fire insurance policy and tries to set fire to his house, but Bud, as the official fire department, proves too much for him, and Ham tears up the policy in despair. Just then his house catches fire by accident. Although Bud effects a thrilling rescue of the occupants, the house burns to the ground, and Ham looks for his policy that will enable him to collect the insurance. He is about to pick up the torn policy to put it together again, when a breeze carries it right into the fire, and Ham decides that politics in Pumpkin Center is a bad business.

In a Town where "Flivs" are still called Automobiles, enjoying the Comforts of Hard Labor, were Pa and Ma Basker. Ma's pride in her Geraniums was only equaled by his Interest in the factory on the River bank. They split Fifty-Fifty on their Affection for their Progeny, which totaled One of Each.

Though they were bursting with Rube Health, when Son succeeded in Hooking a contract which converted the Shop into a War-Baby it was hardly a Task to persuade the Old Folks to Knock Off and Live Up to the dignity of their Sudden Accumulations.

Seeing America first to them meant taking a Limited and stopping off where the Lights Dazzled the most. Cabarets, Dansants, A la Cartes and Golluf took the place of Church Socials, Spelling Bees, Chicken Suppers and Raising Vegetables in their Round of Pleasure.

For an excuse to Settle back in the old Grind, Pa Basker would have Split a large hunk of that Contract, but as it was he had to live up to his Income Tax.

THE RIGHT MAN (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 17).—The cast: Morgan Green (J. Warren Kerrigan); Frank Case (E. N. Wallack); Lillian Manley (Edith Johnson); Edward Manley (Harry Griffith); Fred Rose (Charles Cummings). Scenario by William Parker. Produced by Henry McRae.

Morgan Green, teller, and Frank Case, cashier, are both in love with Lillian, the daughter of the bank president, Edward Manley. She loves Morgan and promises to marry him, and while Manley is in favor of him, still he counsels them to wait until Morgan has a better position. Frank thinks there is a chance for him.

One day Frank, in revenge, tampers with a bundle of bank notes which are sent in for a factory payroll and leaves Morgan's knife beside the bundle. Later Morgan is accused of theft, and, while he denies it, the evidence is so strong that he is thought guilty. Through the pleadings of Lillian, who believes him innocent, Morgan is only dismissed from the bank, and he leaves for a ranch town nearby.

Left with a clear field, Frank ingratiates himself with Manley. When the bank commissioners deliver the ultimatum that unless the capital of the bank is increased it will have to close its doors, Manley accepts the proffered aid of Frank. He then persuades Lillian that, through a sense of obligation, she should accept him as a husband. She finally consents, though she still loves Morgan.

Fred Rose, a bank messenger in the firm, knew of Frank's act in connection with the stolen bank notes. Theratening him with exposure, Fred compels Case to give him a vacation. He goes with his invalid sister to the same town in which Morgan is staying. Soon after the latter rescues the little sister from a runaway at risk of his own life.

Fred feels that he must tell Morgan of Frank's act and does so. It is now about noon, and the marriage of Frank and Lillian is to take place in three hours. With much evading of constables and farmer deputies, they at last reach the Manley home just in time to stop the wedding. A few hours later a wedding takes place in which Lillian and Morgan are the principals.

A PRAIRIE CHICKEN (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 17).—The cast: Mrs. De Coin (Fay Holderness); Her Son (Al Forbes); Her Daughter (Kathleen Emerson); The Prairie Chicken (Merta Sterling); Count Notta Cent (Al Edminston). Directed by Vim Moore.

"Sending my daughter to you for visit. Arrives 3 p. m. today. Hank." Mrs. De Coin read the telegram and passed it to her daughter and her son.

About 3 o'clock there was a frightful disturbance in the driveway, and an auto appeared, upon the radiator of which was perched a striking figure, in wide-brimmed hat, chaps and flannel shirt, with a big gun in each hand. It was Brother Hank's daughter, who had shot up all the traffic cops in her progress from the station to her aunt's home. Mrs. De Coin and Kathleen were horrified, but Algernon, the son, found a strange attraction in the apparition.

They made her put on "civilized" clothes, but she insisted upon wearing her guns over them. She slept on the floor and insisted upon Al's giving her a ride on the tea wagon.

Count Notta Cent was arranging for the kidnapping of Kathleen, Mrs. De Coin's daughter, while she was joy riding. Mert, the young girl from the West, saw the affair from her room. She dropped from the balcony onto her horse and chased the machine. Catching the branch of a tree, she swung off it into the car, beat up the count and rescued the girl. The delighted mother could no longer withhold her blessing from the couple, Al and Mert, and it was planned to celebrate the engagement with a ball.

A barefoot dancer was engaged as entertainer. Mert, at first shocked, then decided to draw attention to herself by dancing with the butler, who was detailed to hold up her train. She landed the poor man in the fountain, and, tiring of her hoopskirts, rushed upstairs to put on her chaps. Mrs. De Coin, in the meantime, catches her servants robbing the safe. A chase follows the cry of "Stop thief!" all the way to the roof. The thief drops the jewels down a gutter pipe, and they fall into Mert's lap. She gives chase, too, and finally catches the man on the edge of a drawbridge just going up in the air. She roped him, pulls him down, restores the jewels to her aunt, and plunges the thief into the river, where he finds a watery grave.

HAWAIIAN NUTS (One Reel—Rel. Week of Sept. 17).—The cast: The Ukelele Nightingale (Gale Henry); Professor Jasbo (Milton Sims); Happy Unlucky (William Franey); The Blackhand Chief (Milburn Moranti). Written and adapted for the screen by R. A. Dillon. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

Bill is chucked out of the recruiting office and feels that there is no place for him in a disjointed universe. Wandering down the street, he sees a man approach another and slip him a wad of bills after making some strange passes in the air.

"Good enough to try, anyway!" says Bill, and, going up to the man, he waves his hands in imitation of the motions. The next thing Bill knows he is on his back in a den, with a lot of sinister ruffians bending over him. The chief asks him if he wants to join his blackhand band.

"I join any kind of a band but a Joiman band," says Bill, and he is initiated at once. Then comes the drawing of lots. Bill has no idea what it is for, but he doesn't want to be left out of anything. So, in a moment, he finds himself commissioned to take a ukelele filled with dynamite to the chief's inamorita. She is a lovely lady, with a passion for Professor Jasbo, who teaches the ukelele, and who, the chief fears, has stolen her heart away from him.

They are in the midst of a party when Bill arrives. A message from the chief lets him into the charmed circle at once, and he joins the group on the floor, having placed the dangerous instrument out of harm's way. There is a pause for refreshments, and in the scramble for the eats Bill mixes the instruments and brings back the loaded one to the chief instead of Jasbo's. The chief strikes a chord, and the whole gang goes up in smoke.

CIRCUS SARAH (One Reel—Rel. Week of Sept. 17).—The cast: Sarah (Gale Henry); Rudolph Ringtail (Milton Sims); Animal Trainer (Charles Haefli). Scenario by Tom Gibson. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Sarah, who lives in Cucumber Center, has a desire to become a circus queen. When the big show comes to town, Sarah takes all her savings and goes to the circus grounds. When she sees Rudolph Ringtail, the owner of the show, she faints right into his arms and murmurs "Yes" to his unspoken question. Rudolph had previously seen Sarah stuff a stout pocketbook into her stocking, so he does not mind. He calls a convenient minister, and the two are made one.

"And now, dearie, a little something to tip the minister," he prompts her. She hands out her bag. In it is a choice collection of powder puff, buttons, samples, a piece of gum, but no money. Rudolph all but faints when Sarah tells him that she spent all her money.

However, the show must go on, so he determines to make use of his bride. Elvira, the Bareback Queen, is sick, and Sarah has to take her place. Sarah, in powder-puff skirts and tights, is a riot, but the only trouble is that the crowd mistakes her for a new clown. Things look pretty bad, when a disgruntled employee hitches the elephant to the big top, and the animal pulls the whole show away by main force.

"At least, we have each other, darling," says Sarah but Rudolph goes into melancholy madness on the spot.

MARATHON MANIACS (One Reel—Rel. Week of Sept. 17).—The cast: Max (Max Asher); Whiskers (Dave Morris); Pearl (Gladys Tennyson). Produced by Craig Hutchinson.

Max and Whiskers both love Pearl, an athletically inclined young woman, who takes a keen interest in sports. There is to be a marathon race in which Max and Whiskers are the favored ones in the betting, and they are training faithfully for the race, but each one has decided to put something over on the other. They revert to tricks in the training quarters.

On the day of the race Max plants an automobile out on the course and hides it. Whiskers secures a fleet horse and hides the animal in a safe place. Max and Whiskers watch each other. They drop out of the race, and Max finds the hidden horse of Whiskers and puts a sharp burr under the saddle. Whiskers has found some nitroglycerine, which he puts in the radiator of the car of Max. They both ride for it and have harrowing experiences with the horse and the machine.

The Marathon runners are plodding along, and the judges are perched in a stand over the road. Pearl is following in her automobile. The race finishes with Max and Whiskers arriving at the tape at the same time, Max in the motor car and Whiskers on the horse. The stand of the judges is knocked down in the confusion, but Max loses as Whiskers feebly staggers under the wire—winner by a whisker.

WELCOME HOME (One Reel—Rel. Week of Sept. 17).—The cast: Eddie (Eddie Lyons); Lee (Lee Moran); Edith (Edith Roberts). Scenario by Fred Palmer. Produced by Roy Clements.

Eddie writes a letter to his wife, Edith, telling her that he will be home tomorrow at 10.30, and that he will see her at the station. He forgets to mail the letter. When he arrives at the station in his home town, he is surprised not to find his wife and consoles himself with the reflection that she wants to surprise him at home. So home he starts.

Eddie has two unpleasant encounters with the bum who tried to take his satchel at the station. The latter makes a getaway on a car, goes to a back door for a handout, finds that there is no one at home and that the back door is unlocked and goes in. It happens to be Eddie's home. Eddie arrives and goes in the front way. Lee hears him coming and hides. Eddie comes through the house, finds the back door unlocked, locks it and goes upstairs for a bath. Lee, finding door locked, starts out the front way, but has a desire to see what is upstairs. He sneaks up, finds Eddie is in the bath, changes his clothes for the ones Eddie left in the adjoining room to the bath room, and starts away, when Edith returns from shopping.

Lee hides, but finally gets away, only to be caught by an officer outside and taken to the jail hospital. Edith hears Eddie in the bath room, thinks it is a burglar, calls a cop, has Eddie arrested. Later both are in a hospital ward at the jail recovering from the clubbings they received, when Edith calls to find Eddie, whose grips she has found in the house. She is directed to Lee, who had Eddie's clothes and papers on him when arrested. The mistake is discovered and Eddie is finally welcomed home by Edith.

(Noble Johnson). Scenario by Karl Coolidge. Produced by Henry McRae.

Jim Hoyle, an independent tobacco grower, is reading to his wife an account of the fire of the company's warehouses, where a year's supply of tobacco was stored, when Bob Pritchard, his friend the sheriff, with his son Ted, rides into view. The two men continue the discussion of the raids of the Night Riders upon the company's property, while the two young people, Jim's daughter Sue and Bob's son Ted, wander away into the garden, where Ted asks the all-important question. They return to find their fathers quarreling bitterly, and to hear Jim say that the riders are right and that he is going to join them.

Bob is furious, calls his son, tells him to have nothing more to do with the Hoyles, and rides away. As summer approaches, the raiders increase their activities. Bob overhears two of them whispering; one says, "Felton Woods this afternoon at four." Bob determines to investigate.

Meantime, Ted rides near the Hoyle home and whistles for Sue, who quickly goes to him, her father being away. While the two young people are talking, Orrin Black, a neighboring grower, sees them and informs Jim. Jim is furious and raves at Sue, while Black stands trying to get her attention, but she ignores him.

Bob creeps near enough to the group of men, among whom are Jim and Black, to hear them say: "Tomorrow night at the entrance to Box Canyon." Bob gathers together his deputies, instructing them not to fire until the raiders have passed into the canyon, where the deputies can hold them there until morning.

That night, when the raiders are cornered in "The Box," Ted and Sue are with Mrs. Hoyle, who is taken ill. Ted rushes for a doctor, who sends a young fellow to find Jim at once. Ted comes upon Bob, who is covered by Jim. Jim hears Ted asking for him and the reason for so doing. Bob exchanges hats and coats with Jim and has him wear his badge, while Bob puts on the black mask. Ted is taken prisoner by some of the raiders. Black is told to lock him in a shack, and later, when the raiders decide to blow up the warehouse and make a dash for freedom, Black again offers to place the bomb, but instead of putting it near the warehouse, he puts it by the shack, and the explosion immediately occurs. Bob joins the deputies, and they rush to the shack, where they find a body and think it is Ted's.

Bob dashes to Jim's home with the news. Jim is amazed. He enters the bedroom and sees Sue and Ted seated by Mrs. Hoyle's bedside.

Bob is bewildered. Ted tells him that the dead man must be Black, who tried to get rid of him because of Sue, but in the fight Ted overpowered him and escaped.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE GRAY GHOST (Episode 12—Two Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 17).—The cast: Morn Light (Priscilla Dean); Hildreth (Emory Johnson); Gray Ghost (Harry Carter); Marco (Eddie Polo); Arabin (Howard Crampton); Cecelia (Gypsy Hart); Jerry Tryon (Lou Short).

"Give me the ring," said the Ghost, and Morn Light obeyed rim, when a bullet from Cecelia's revolver crashed past her head and buried itself in the wall of the house. Morn Light fled to her room, while the Ghost seized the half-crazed maid by the arm. She fought him angrily, and, snatching the ring from his hand, tried to break away. Then she pointed the revolver straight at him, but he smilingly said:

"Have you forgotten the only way to kill me?"

Hildreth had followed Morn Light to her room, and the sound of the shooting seemed to restore her senses. She told him that she remembered nothing of what had taken place, and he was more puzzled than ever.

Marco followed Cecelia, and, concealing himself, managed to overhear her telling the crooks her plan to kill Morn Light.

"I have a ring," she said, "the exact duplicate of Hildreth's, which is infected with a deadly poison so that the smallest scratch will cause death."

As Marco was hastening to his friends with this news, he was held up and almost overpowered by several desperate men. He fought them off, and, climbing up a water pipe, escaped by crossing a telephone wire hand over hand.

At the police commissioner's all was in readiness for the visit of the Ghost. His appearance was greeted by the commissioner, but he was immediately covered by the revolvers of Arabin and Tryon, who had concealed themselves, awaiting his promised call for the necklace.

"The safe is open for you," said the commissioner suavely, bowing low.

As the master criminal turned to it, the two men emerged from their hiding place and called to him to hold up his hands.

"Only the Gray Ghost himself can catch me!" he cried, pushing them aside as if they had been children. He then dived into the safe and shut the door. When they opened it, all trace of him had disappeared. Another mystery!

GOLD SEAL.

THE PULLMAN MYSTERY (Three Parts—Sept. 18).—The cast: Robert Cheney (Frederick Montague); Mrs. Cheney (Mrs. Witting); Kathleen (Molly Malone); Kenneth Post (T. D. Crittenden); Jean Hardy (Ray Hanford); Paul Dustin (Lawrence Peyton); Lucille Crallen (Josie Sedgwick); Drake Dunn (Hayward Mack). Scenario by Jack Cunningham. Produced by Charles Swickard.

Drake Dunn, who is employed in the factory of Robert Cheney, has been offered the position of superintendent of the factory of Crallen in Los Angeles. He calls his sweetheart, Kathleen, and asks her to go with him as his wife. She consents. Jean Hardy, a chemist, is also in love with Kathleen. He meets Paul Dustin, the secretary to Robert Cheney, and takes him to a club operated by the workmen of the factory. Jean tells Paul that the men are dissatisfied and will strike if their demands are not met. Paul promises to speak to his employer about the matter, and leaves for Mr. Cheney's residence. He is not at home when Paul arrives, so he sits down and begins to put some of his ideas of the justice of the workmen's demands into the form of a speech, writing it down on the typewriter. Cheney came in and read words accusing employers in general and himself in particular. Angry, he told Dustin that he was a traitor and threatened to call the police. He then lost his temper and attacked the young man, who tried his best to keep him off without doing him harm. Cheney was backed toward the door of the conservatory, when suddenly he relaxed in Paul's grasp, his body became limp, and with a groan he fell to the ground.

Mrs. Cheney, attracted by the noise, rushed in and accused Paul of murdering her husband. The police entered, but Paul managed to escape. In the drawing room of a Pullman on the train approaching the station was Kenneth Post, reading over a letter from his cousin, recommending him to the care of Thomas Crallen, head of the big factory in Los Angeles, to which Drake Dunn had just been appointed superintendent. Post was discouraged because of failing health. Taking out a revolver, Post placed it to his temple. A moment later Paul, reaching the train, fell against the door, which opened with him. He picked up the letter lying beside the body and read: "His doctors are trying to frighten him to death. Give him something to do to keep his mind off himself." The letter was addressed to Thomas Crallen. The temptation was too great for Paul. He removed the clothes from the body and threw the body out of the window as the train crossed a bridge.

Some weeks later Paul, as Kenneth Post, was established as a member of the Crallen company. Having met Crallen's daughter Lucille, Drake Dunn, already tiring of Kathleen, was more than half in love with her. Kathleen was neglected by Drake and had no friends. Jean Hardy had not been able to resist the temptation to follow her to Los Angeles, and she feared the consequences of his meeting her husband. Drake was becoming suspicious of Paul. For one thing, Miss Crallen was too fond of him to suit the superintendent. He happened to see a picture of the supposed slayer of Robert Cheney, whose unrecognized body had been found in the river. The picture was the image of the so-called "Kenneth Post." He, therefore, planned to introduce Hardy and to watch the two men. Their meeting confirmed his suspicions, and he went straight to Crallen with the story.

By this time Lucille was engaged to "Kenneth," and her father refused to believe the story without proof. Hardy, crazed by Kathleen's unhappiness, plans to kill Drake. Paul finds out his plans and follows Drake in the hope of warning him. He misses him and Hardy succeeds in breaking into Drake's house, where he fires, wounding Drake in the arm. Paul has followed with the police. Hardy exclaims: "You'll never get me!" and shoots himself. As he is dying, he confesses to the murder of Robert Cheney. He was in the conservatory and fired through the window into Cheney's back. This clears Dustin, who then confesses to having taken the name of Kenneth Post. He returns all the property found on the train, and Crallen accepts him as a son-in-law. Drake's love for Kathleen revives under her tender care of his wound.

THE LOST EXPRESS (Chapter II.—The Destroyed Documents—Two Parts—Sept. 24).—The mysterious disappearance of the express train in broad daylight throws the railway organization into a turmoil. Light engine searching crews start from both ends of the short line to locate "The Lost Express." They report no trace of it. The mystery grows. Meantime Valquez and his gang—the only persons who know what has become of the missing train—are in possession of General Thurston's documents and models. They discover that the principal blue print is missing.

Detective Murphy, chief of the railway secret service, holds a consultation with Helen. Murphy is elated when Helen tells him that one of the robbers has a harelip.

Valquez refuses to pay for the Thurston formula until it is complete. The thieves undertake to return to where they have hidden the train and find it. Detective Murphy pursues and is shot. Helen follows Murphy, rescues him in an unconscious state and takes him to a hospital.

Leaving the hospital, Helen sees "The Hare." She pursues him. He boards a moving train. Helen races her car to a bridge over the track. When the train passes, she drops on the roof. Crawling along the car top, Helen sees "The Baron" and "The Hare" sitting near a window in the smoker. Between them lies the all-important paper—the missing blueprint.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

THE GIRL WHO COULDN'T GROW UP (Pollard Picture Plays Co.—5 Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast: Peggy Brockman (Margarita Fischer); Herbert Brockman (John Stepling); Mrs. Brockman, her stepmother (Jean Hatheway); Lord George Raleigh (Jack Mower); Wiggens, his butler (Joseph Harris); Tia Ana, the Brockman cook (Lule Warrenton); Iris Stanley (Leota Lorraine); Bertha Stanley (Marjorie Blinn). Written and directed by Harry A. Pollard.

Peggy Brockman and her father live happily on their ranch until the father marries, and the stepmother and her two daughters begin to make life miserable for Peggy. Lord Raleigh, traveling in his yacht incognito, has stopped near the Brockman home for a few days' fishing and is discovered by the socially ambitious Mrs. Brockman and deluged with invitations. He commissions his valet to serve in his stead.

Peggy is forbidden to attend Mrs. Brockman's masked ball in the nobleman's house. She steals away to put a crimp in the party by disabling his shore boat. Through a mishap she finds herself on board the yacht with the real Lord Raleigh. Police, hunting a runaway girl, pursue them to the garden party, where they have sought refuge. Peggy is put in college for the prank and the nobleman enrolls also. One night she climbs into the boys' dormitory by mistake and finds herself in Lord Raleigh's room. He has, on an avowal of love from her, previously secured a marriage license. They escape the dean, but have been discovered and decide to get married to prevent scandal. On the way from the justice's house they are pursued and land in jail. Peggy's horrified family, dragging the bogus Lord Raleigh, arrive at the cell and to the consternation of Mrs. Brockman and her daughters, Lord Raleigh admits his identity and announces that Peggy is his bride.

REEL LIFE NO. 74 (Sept. 27).

The Soldier's Staff of Life.—The government has perfected a portable bread-maker for the army with one of which a baker's corps can supply 40,000 soldiers. These bread-makers were recently exhibited in some of the large cities, resulting in many enlistments.

The Correct Time.—As determined by the U. S. Naval Observatory: One of the branches of scientific research of the U. S. Naval Observatory, at Washington, D. C., is the determining of correct time. This is flashed over the wires of the Western Union every day at exact noon, when millions of timepieces are regulated.

Beans and Lady-Bugs.—Last year those infinitesimal insects, the aphides, destroyed thousands of dollars' worth of beans. This year, with so many soldiers to be fed, there must be no bean shortage, and so scientists have found an aphicide. They have discovered that these little insects are "pie" for the common lady-bug; and now, the lady-bugs are placed on the bean vines and left to do their best.

The Lamprey.—A blood-sucking fish. Unlike the lady-bug, the lamprey does its best to destroy the food supply. Many of the inland waters of the Northwest have been almost depleted of fish because of this eel-like suctorian, which lives on the blood of other fish.

Making Eyeglasses.—Many interesting scenes are shown of the testing of eyesight, and the grinding and mounting of scientific, toric lenses.

So Easy.—An animated drawing from "Life." The facility with which one can say "Charge it," until the end of the month arrives in the form of a demon with bills, is cleverly illustrated.

ARTCRAFT PICTURES CORP.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM (Five Parts—Sept. 3).—The cast: Rebecca Randall (Mary Pickford); Adam Ladd (Eugene O'Brien); Hannah Randall (Helen Jerome Eddy); Mr. Cobb (Charles Ogle); Emma Jane Perkins (Marjorie Daw); Jane Sawyer (Mayme Kelso); Mrs. Randall (Jane Wolff); Miranda Sawyer (Josephine Crowell); Rev. Jonathan Smellie (Jack MacDonald); Minnie Smellie (Violet Wilkey); Mr. Simpson (Frank Turner); Mrs. Simpson (Kate Toncray); Clara Belle Simpson (Emma Gerdes).

Rebecca Randall and her large family of brothers and sisters live at Sunnybrook Farm, which is principally remarkable for the size of the mortgage it carries. The task of taking care of all the children is too much for Mrs. Randall, so finally Rebecca is sent away to her two aunts, Miranda and Jane Sawyer, who are strict New England folk. She agrees to sell soap in aid of a fund to buy a banquet lamp for Rev. Smellie.

Rebecca meets young Adam Ladd, and, much to her astonishment, he purchases enough soap to pay for the banquet lamp. When Rebecca tells him about Mrs. Simpson and her lack of a wedding ring, Adam reaches into his pocket, brings forth his mother's wedding ring and gives it to Rebecca to present to Mrs. Simpson. Owing to his bounty, Rebecca thinks that Mr. Ladd is Mr. Aladdin, the hero of the wonderful lamp.

With the children of the village, Rebecca gets up a circus in which she is the bare-back rider, but is routed by Aunt Miranda just as she is doing her most daring stunt.

Rebecca is sent to school, but by her clever verse disgraces the aunt's family, so they decide to send her to boarding school. She returns a beautiful young girl. Adam's admiration for her has greatly increased, and the fondness for the child has grown into love for the young woman. One of the aunts passes away, and later Rebecca learns that the railroad has purchased Sunnybrook Farm.

Rebecca has the Simpson family taken care of and all the Randall children well provided for. When everyone else is happy, Adam Ladd reminds her that when a little girl she had told him she intended to marry him when she grew up.

BUTTERFLY PICTURES.

THE SPINDLE OF LIFE (Five Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast: Gladsome (Neva Gerber); Mrs. Harrison (Jessie Pratt); Jason (Ed. Brady); "Hooky" (Richard La Reno); James Bradshaw (Winter Hall); Vincent Bradshaw (Hayward Mack); "Alphabet" Carter (Ben Wilson). Story from the novel "Gladsome," by Sidney Robinson. Scenario by Karl Coolidge. Produced by George Cochrane.

Mrs. Harrison and her daughter, Gladsome, arrive at their palatial summer residence in Harborsport. Mrs. Harrison is a confirmed social climber, and her financial adviser, James Bradshaw, encourages her mania, as he hopes to trade his aristocratic but impoverished son for his client's wealthy daughter.

Mrs. Harrison's cherished idea of social distinction conflicts with her daughter's ways of living, so Gladsome, soon after arriving, makes for "Hooky" and the fishermen, with whom she has been on terms of intimacy since she was a girl in short dresses. Bradshaw and Vincent, his son, are on hand to greet the arrivals, but Gladsome is missing. They find her mingling with her fishermen friends, who have just given her a set of oilskins. The elder Bradshaw takes her away and insults the fisherman. A quarrel results, and Bradshaw forbids them to cross his property, which has saved them a long walk to their work night and morning.

In the city "Alphabet" Carter, a powerful person in the financial world, is advised by his doctor to cease work and take a vacation. He decides upon Harborsport, and arrives on the night that the fishermen have determined to take the right of way by force, Gladsome championing them against the Bradshaws. Gladsome is mixed up in the scrap, and when the police arrive she is carried off with the fishermen. In her oilskins the police have taken her for a boy. When her mother is informed of her daughter's arrest, she, Bradshaw and his son, race to the police station and rescue Gladsome. Some time later Gladsome meets Carter, and a mutual attraction springs up between them. This later ripens into love, and when Gladsome tells Carter that Bradshaw is planning to have her married to his son, Vincent, the money man suggests that she marry him. Gladsome is delighted. Carter is called to the city, where he discovers Bradshaw's operations with Mrs. Harrison's money and lays his plans to ruin the man in order to teach him a lesson and to save the Harrison fortune. Bradshaw, finding the formidable "Alphabet" Carter against him, tries to rush the marriage of his son to Gladsome to cover his loss of the Harrison money.

The little job of ruining the Bradshaws all completed, Carter returns to the beach. Gladsome meets him and they plan to get married that evening, for Bradshaw has announced the engagement dinner for that very night. The ceremony is held in "Hooky's" cottage. When TRIUMPH (Five Parts—Sept. 3).—The cast: Nell Baxter (Dorothy Phillips); Paul Neihoff (Lon Chaney); Dudley Weyman (William Stowell); David Montieth (Wm. J. Dyer); Lillian Du Pont (Clair Dubrey); Rupert Vincent (Clyde Benson); Ida Mayne (Helen Elder). Scenario written by Fred Myton. Directed by Joseph De Grasse.

Nell Baxter's friends and neighbors declared that fame and fortune awaited her behind the footlights. Stealing away from home, Nell made her way to the railroad station and there came upon a traveling theatrical company. To one of the men she confided her ambition.

It is late summer on Broadway when managers are selecting the players for their productions. An amateur from a small country town approaches the stage door of one of the big theaters and asks if there is any chance of her securing employment. It so happens that the ingenue of the company then rehearsing has sent word to the management that she has married and determined to leave the stage. The manager of the company sees Nell and decides that she shall have the part. There is a playwright who has tried without success to have this manager produce one of his plays. The leading lady, in love with the author, has tried her own wiles upon the manager but has failed to accomplish the coveted purpose.

Nell succeeds so well with the small role that has been assigned her that the manager, in pressing his attentions upon her, promises that he will advance her upon the stage as a return for her affections. She has met the impoverished playwright and has fallen in love with him, and, in the circumstances, it is she who is again chosen to urge the manager to produce the playwright's work. Aiming to advance himself further in the good graces of Nell, the manager agrees to produce the play and give the leading role to her.

Meanwhile, the leading lady, who has formerly basked in the good graces of the manager, becomes jealous of Nell and plans vengeance. When the author is in Nell's dressing room, rehearsing a love scene in his play that he wishes to be acted with preciseness, the jealous woman brings the manager to the dressing room door and discloses Nell and the playwright in affectionate embrace. Angered, the manager declares that the production shall then and there be abandoned.

The playwright, his constitution undermined by dissipation, feels the shock of disappointment. He goes to his apartment and sends for a doctor. The doctor gives him a stimulant, with the warning that an overdose would be fatal. When Nell realizes that her ambition to "triumph" upon the stage has been frustrated, she goes to the manager's apartments to plead that he shall reconsider.

The opening performance has been set for that night, and Nell pleads with the manager to let the show go on. He consents after setting his own price upon the girl's ambition. When he attempts to bind the bargain, the girl stabs and kills him. Then she descends to the apartments of the playwright and makes a confession of her crime. Before being killed the manager has telephoned to his stage director that the performance shall proceed, and now the young playwright begs the girl to go on with the play and settle for her crime afterwards. She leaves for the theater, the playwright calls up the police, confesses the crime of murder over the telephone, takes the overdose of stimulant that kills him and the two dead men are found exactly as the circumstances have been telephoned to the police. At the theater the climax of the play is approaching. Nell senses that something has gone wrong with the playwright and overhears the truth when two members of the company are discussing the tragedy.

The curtain is up; it is time for the big scene of the play and to make the premier a success for the dead author's sake, the girl heroically goes on and attains her longed-for triumph. But the thunders of applause fall upon deaf ears—the girl has stabbed herself as a climax of the "big scene" and dies while the bravos of the audience resound through the theater.

FOX FILMS CORP.

BETRAYED (Five Parts—Sept. 2).—The cast: Carmelita Carrito (Miriam Cooper); Carpi, her Father (James Marcus); Leopoldo Juares, outlaw (Hobart Bosworth); Pepo Esperanza, lover (Monte Blue); William Jerome, U. S. A. (Wheeler Oakman). Directed by R. A. Walsh.

Carmelita Carrito was in love. The lucky man was Pepo Esperanza, Mexican like herself, an inhabitant of the same little border village of San Lepo. In spite of her fat, crude father, Carmelita had the soul of an aristocrat. Somewhere in her make-up there reposed the spirit of a Carmen. For Carmelita was nothing if not a coquette. The fame of the great bandit, Leopold Juares, had traveled all over Mexico. When he made a raid on the larder of Carmelita's 'dobe home, therefore, it was natural that the girl should be somewhat impressed by his commanding personality.

The strange events of that day on which Leopold made his raid quite excited the girl. At night she sat by her window and looked lazily out at the Mexican moonlight. Gradually she fell asleep, and she dreamed. Leopoldo returned. She realized for the first time that she was in love with him. An American army officer, William Jerome, was at that very moment nearing her house in search of the man who had raided the territory of the United States.

Jerome came to Carmelita's home. Once more the fickle girl changed her mind and her heart. Now she was in love with the American. As the days passed, she grew to know the Gringo better and to love him more deeply. Finally she wrote him a note. Leopoldo, she said, would be beside her at a neighboring brook. Jerome could creep upon them and pick off his man with a single revolver shot. Then she would be his, body and soul.

Leopoldo intercepted the note, but allowed it to go to Jerome and arranged a counter scheme. When he met her at the brook, he craftily urged her to don his own coat. Then he placed his hat on her head. Jerome, seeing the party through the bushes, thought Carmelita was Leopoldo, and shot the girl he loved. Jerome was taken prisoner and shot. With fainting breath, the heartless Mexican girl whispered to her first lover, who had returned. He must get the Americans at once. Leaping swiftly upon his horse, Pepo rode off in the distance.

Then Carmelita awoke. She was just in time. American troopers, aided by Pepo himself, were closing in on her house. There the bandit, Leopoldo, had taken refuge. And Pepo himself captured Leopoldo and received the reward; and he and Carmelita lived happily ever after.

WHEN FALSE TONGUES SPEAK (Five Parts—Sept. 8).—The cast: Mary Page Walton (Virginia Pearson); Fred Walton, her husband (Carl Harbaugh); Platt Sinclair (Hardee Kirkland); Helen Lee (Claire Whitney); Eric Mann (Carl Eckstrom); Jimmy Hope (William E. Meehan). Directed by Carl Harbaugh.

Married life proves an empty dream for Mary Page Walton. She knew Fred Walton was no angel, but thought he would mend his ways. Mary closed her eyes to most of her husband's doings. At last, Platt Sinclair, her husband's lawyer, tells her she should start divorce proceedings.

Sinclair acts on Fred's suggestion. Fred is having an affair with Helen Lee. She thinks he—posing as a single man—loves her. Mary refuses to sue and, to escape the unhappiness of her home, organizes a settlement house in the slums. Eric Mann, a reporter, is assigned to cover Mrs. Walton's social work. His great interest in the work brings them much in each other's company. Sinclair returns to Mrs. Walton one evening to see if she has changed her mind. He finds Eric there interviewing the social worker. Sinclair rushes to Walton, whom he finds with Helen. Taking him aside, he tells him a tale of what he saw in his home. Sinclair's fine imagination adds much color to Eric's business call.

Walton, feeling hurt, tells Sinclair to start suit. When Eric learns of the case he angrily tells Sinclair he will have him disbarred. Sinclair decides to drop the suit. Meantime Mary is living at the settlement house. One night she returns to her home for some of her effects. Walton was giving a little "at home" for Helen. Jimmy Hope, a crook, was also in the house—on a professional call—but had been surprised on his way out and forced to hide behind a fire screen. Walton hides Helen in a closet. The wife hears a rustle and approaches to open the door. She grasps the knob and pulls. Helen, on the inside, pulls, too. Walton finally pushes Mary into the hall. Just then Sinclair is admitted.

Eric now comes up the walk, hears the rumpus inside and stops, uncertain whether to enter. The door opens. Eric leaps into the shadows. Mary hastily comes down the steps and hurries off. Helen now flees from the home. She is followed by Sinclair. As Eric is about to enter the open door, he sees the crook leap out of a window and disappear. The reporter rushes in and finds Walton dead on the floor. He summons the police and—is arrested.

The next morning finds Mary on a train going back to mother. Helen is sitting beside her, also going home. The morning papers arrive. Mary learns her husband has been murdered. She collapses, and Helen tries to calm her. In curiosity Helen opens the paper and finds a picture of the slain man. She recognizes Walton, whom she knew under another name. Then she collapses. Mary suspects Helen is the murderer and has her brought back for trial.

Meantime, Jimmy Hope has been arrested for a robbery. While Mary and Helen are at the police station, the district attorney and Sinclair enter. Sinclair at his own request, has been appointed special prosecutor for the case. He asks that Eric be brought out for a hearing. By mistake the turnkey brings in Hope.

On seeing Mrs. Walton, Helen and Sinclair, Hope gasps. Thinking he is to be accused of murder, he squawks. Jimmy, from behind the fire screen, had seen all the happenings of the mysterious night. He traces the movements of each person in the tragedy and names the person who killed Walton.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

AN ALABASTER BOX (Five Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: Lydia Orr (Alice Joyce); Harry Bolton (Marc MacDermott); Jim Dodge (Harry Ham); The Child Lydia (Aida Horton); Fanny Dodge (Patsy De Forest); Wesley Elliott (Frank Crane) Authors, Mary E. Wilkins Freeman and Florence Morse Kingsley. Director, Chester Withey.

Lydia Bolton is only a child when financial difficulties overtake her father. His fellow-townsmen do not give him support and he goes to the wall. Andrew Bolton goes to prison an embezzler, cursed by everyone. Lydia is taken in charge by an uncle and the old Bolton mansion, once a proud landmark, is left to neglect.

Time has not tempered the disposition of the community when Lydia Bolton comes back, her identity hidden in the name of Lydia Orr. She opens her purse first at a church festival, but her generosity is rewarded only by disparaging remarks and open hints of ulterior motives. She lives at the same boarding house as the young minister and tongues of scandal are at once loosed.

Then she purchases the old Bolton mansion, her childhood home, and offers to buy at unreasonably high prices all antique furniture in the town. There is a rush to get all the girl's money, but a few decent folks seek to protect her and at once the town is split in two hostile camps.

The minister has a sweetheart and she is jealous of Lydia, which adds to the complexity of her troubles. And in the midst of it all, Bolton, his prison term ended, steals back to town. Lydia and a few loyal friends seek to hide his identity, for a time, at least, but the senile old man eludes them and goes to the country store and proclaims himself.

All the pent-up hatred against him now is turned against the daughter and the townspeople utterly blind to all she has done for them and the town, rush to the old Bolton home to wreck it and lynch Bolton. The old man, aided by the minister and Lydia's sweetheart, are striving to protect the girl when Bolton falls dead. This tragedy disperses the mob and finally Lydia's enemies come to see her and her efforts in their true light.

The points of interest in this release include the old sugar mill, the colored police force of the island, and open-air church services, where blacks and whites worship together.

Another interesting section of the travelogue shows a fashionable garden party of the socially elect at the Colonial Hotel. The opening of a Royal Palm bud, one of the beautiful specimens of the flora with which the islands abound; natives shaking down cocoanuts from the trees, "Bath House Mary," a local celebrity, and native dances, to which Mr. Holmes applies the line, "On with the dance; let joy be unrefined," are other features in this issue.

"Gun Smoke Everywhere—

But not a whiff of TOBACCO SMOKE to cheer a fellow up!"

THE English "Tommies" have their pipes kept filled by the folks at home.

The French "Poilus" never want for a smoke—their friends are "on the job."

The "Anzacs" have all the tobacco they can use sent them by their loved ones.

And now the time has come for Americans to send little packages of happiness to our "Sammies" in the trenches and our "Jackies" with the fleet. These lads are defending our lives and fortunes. We must show them our appreciation.

Besides facing the foe, our boys must experience homesickness, loneliness, dreary hours in the trenches, uncomfortable days in torpedo-boat destroyers. Tobacco cheers them; home and friends loom up in the fragrant puffs. Help us to give the boys at the front the "smokes" they crave and need. Even if you object to tobacco personally, think of those whom it comforts and let your contribution come without delay.

25c Keeps a Fighting Man Happy for a Week—

$1 Sends a Month's Supply of Tobacco—Act!

Each quarter buys a package of tobacco and cigarettes worth 45 cents, enough to make one of your defenders happy for a week. One dollar makes him and his trench mates glad for a month. Those who can afford it should adopt a soldier and keep him supplied with tobacco for the duration of the war. One dollar a month does it. Small and large contributions solicited.

A War Souvenir for You

A feature of this fund is that in each package is enclosed a post card addressed to the donor. If it is possible for the soldier or sailor receiving the tobacco to mail you this post card receipt, it will be a war souvenir you will treasure forever.

Hurry Up With YOUR "Smokes"

Dive into your purse. Out comes a quarter, half dollar, a note. Mail it at once—currency, stamps, check or money order. The quicker it comes, the quicker our boys will have their smokes. A similar fund in England has sent over four million packages to soldiers and sailors. Here is one way to do your bit—mail the coupon!

This is a Volunteer Movement

The space for this advertisement is given free. The services of those who manage the fund are donated. Every cent collected goes into the purchase of tobacco comfort for our soldiers and sailors. Do your part!

WHAT THE SECRETARY OF WAR SAYS

"The War Department approves of their enterprise [that of those who take part in raising the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund"] and thanks them in behalf of many a homesick soldier and sailor who will be cheered not merely by the kindly gifts themselves, but still more by the spirit of cordial and homely sympathy which inspires them." NEWTON D. BAKER, Secretary of War.

THE ANGEL FACTORY (Astra Film Corp.—Five Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 16).—The cast: David Darrow (Antonio Moreno); Florence Lamont (Helene Chadwick); Her Mother (Laura West); Betty Montague (Margaret Greene); Tony Podessa (Armand Cortez); Marie Lacey (Suzanne Willa); Sailor Bill Benson (Francis J. Conlan). Directed by Laurence McGill.

In the tenement section of New York there stood a building which was called "The Angel Factory." It had been erected by David Darrow, who devoted all of his time trying to enlighten the people and make them see the bright side of life.

In his slum work David came in contact with Florence Lamont, a girl of the poor. His friendship with her brings with it the uncompromising hostility of a gang leader, Tony Podessa, who is in love with Florence. She shuns him. It also causes David's fiancee, a girl of society, to become jealous of Florence. Thinking, perhaps, that if she invites Florence to her home to meet her friends, she will shame Darrow, and then he will forget her. On the contrary, Florence acts demurely, and, to Betty's astonishment, she is greatly admired by the young men at the reception. Podessa learns of Florence going out with Darrow and decides that he has been fooled long enough. Unfortunately, that night Darrow stops at the factory. Florence bids him good night and goes upstairs. Podessa has followed them home and, seeing Darrow at the window, draws his revolver and is about to fire, when suddenly someone fires and kills him. Hearing the shot, Darrow runs to the body of Podessa. As he is bending over the body a detective grabs him by the arm and accuses him of the murder. Florence rushes to the scene and explains that she was the one that fired the shot. Showing them her revolver with one shot missing, they are convinced, but on summoning the broker where she purchased the revolver, they find that he filled the gun with blanks. About to leave, the detective picks up the revolver dropped by Podessa. Turning the revolver over in his hand, he sees Darrow's name. Immediately he releases Florence and on circumstantial evidence arrests Darrow.

Sailor Bill, whom Darrow had befriended and brought into the factory, disappeared after the murder. Florence remembered that he and Podessa had not been friendly lately and perhaps he was the one. Searching all over for Bill, Florence finally found him dying in an old seamen's lodge. She implores him to tell her if he killed Podessa. He refused to speak, but when Florence tells him that Darrow is held in prison accused of the crime, he begs to be taken to him at once. At the prison Bill acknowledges that he killed Podessa, and a few seconds after the confession he dies. Darrow's fiancee calls off the engagement after she reads of Darrow being accused of murder. This only brought great joy to him, because it released him from a promise made to his father. Florence learns of the broken engagement and consents to teach Darrow how to make a home.

WAR AND THE WOMAN (Thanhouser—Five Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 9).—The cast: John Braun (Tom Brooke); His Stepdaughter (Florence La Badie); John Barker (Wayne Arey); His Mother (Grace Henderson); Commander of the Invading Army (Arthur Bower); Lieut. Fredericks (Ernest C. Warde). Written by Philip Lonergan. Directed by Ernest C. Warde.

John Braun, an alien under suspicion, and his stepdaughter, Ruth, are accused by the secret service of giving information to one of America's enemies. Braun professes that he is innocent, and is dismissed. Up to the interview, Ruth knew nothing of Braun's actions, but on their way home he acknowledged that he was a spy, and that he wished to have her assist him, but she declined.

The revelation caused Ruth to change her opinion of Braun, and she decided to leave him. Unobserved, she walked to the rear platform of the train and jumped off. Ruth got up unhurt and started off across the country. She had not gone far when an aeroplane crashed to earth. Ruth saw the form of an American aviator entangled in the wreckage. While at the hospital, Ruth called to see the injured John Barker, a wealthy young American, and it was in this way that she met his mother, who considered that Ruth had rendered her a service she could never repay.

Ruth had the misfortune of losing her position through a detective who had traced her and informed her employer she was a spy. Her funds gone, she endeavored to find work, but was unsuccessful. She wanders out into the country and collapses on a railroad track. She was saved from death by a brakeman. John's mother learned that Ruth was ill, and had her brought to her home. After her recovery Ruth and John were married.

The war became serious, and John was called to duty. After his departure Ruth was notified that the enemy was approaching. Everyone fled and through a mishap Ruth was left behind. The troops arrived and took possession of the home. Among them was Ruth's father, who insisted that she give him information. She promised to aid them, with the one thought in mind, that she might obtain their plans, but she was discovered and made a maid in her own home.

John was granted a leave and came to see Ruth. By putting on an officer's uniform, he gained admittance. He saw Ruth and slipped her a note, telling her to meet him that night. That night at dinner one of the men was about to tear the American flag to pieces when Ruth snatched it from him and fled from the room. She ran down into the cellar. Thinking she went on the roof, they climbed out. Ruth had concealed some dynamite in the cellar. Lighting the fuse, she rushed to John. As she was about to climb into the machine, she gazed back, only to see the house blown into a million pieces.

THE FATAL RING (Episode No. 12.—"The Desperate Chance."—Two Parts—Sept. 23).—Pearl attempts to force the Violet Diamond from Carslake. Carslake's adherent attacks Pearl, and allows his master to escape from the car in which Pearl had cornered him. The master villain leaves over the roofs of the train and is pursued by Pearl. She overtakes him, and after a desperate fight on the car roof, she is overcome and thrown to the ground from the fast-moving train. She falls helpless across the tracks. Carslake gloats in triumph as the train on which he is riding takes the siding to allow the express the right of way.

Tom, following after Pearl in an automobile, sees her danger, but is unable to flag the fast-approaching train. In a race with death, he manages to throw the switch so that the express is shot on another track, and Pearl is saved.

Tom takes her to her home in the city, and later one of the Spider's men learns that Carslake is hiding in the home of a friend of his. Pearl, accompanied by the Spider, Tom and detectives, invades the house. After a terrific fight, Carslake reaches the roof of the house through a trapdoor. Pearl comes out on the roof after him just as Carslake has knocked out Tom, who preceded her. She sees Carslake run to the edge of the roof and start over to the next building on a narrow iron girder. Pearl pursues him, and Carslake turns at bay, when she is halfway across the iron girder. Deciding that this is a good chance to get rid of her, Carslake seizes her and is about to throw her to the earth several stories beneath, when the episode ends.

THE SEVEN PEARLS (Episode No. 2—The Bow String—Two Parts—Sept. 23).—The cast: Ilma (Mollie King); Harry Drake (Creighton Hale); Handsome Jack (Henry Gsell).

About to phone the police, Harry discovers the masked woman to be Ilma. Learning her story and realizing that it was she he had robbed, he pledges himself to win back the pearls. Outside the door a mysterious man is spying on Ilma and Drake. Suddenly he is attacked by Nemesis, a man of unscrupulous character. In the struggle Nemesis is overpowered. About to kill him, the spy sees a peculiar sign on a bracelet, which is on his arm and decides not to. Hearing a knock, Drake opens the door, much against Ilma's wishes. Ilma sees the spy. His arms are folded; she recoils. Drake attempts to protect her, but she bids him not to interfere. The spy takes Ilma by the arm, and they walk off, leaving Harry astounded.

Handsome Jack, one of the gang, whose specialty is the stealing of valuables, carries his pearl with him, as Harry learns. Jack wishes to gamble his pearl against the one Harry is supposed to have. Ilma likes the idea, and as she mysteriously found a pearl in her room, she gives it to Harry. Drake shakes dice with Jack and loses the pearl. To console him, Jack offers to let him in on a burglary job, but Harry scorns it. Ilma, who has been following Jack, manages to meet him through a flirtation, and decides on desperate means. That night Ilma follows Jack to a Riverside residence. Stealing into the house, she finds Jack dressed in armor. She holds him up. He agrees to give her the pearls. Turning a bit, Jack snatches the gun from Ilma's hand and is about to escape, when Harry enters. Drawing two swords, they fight like two knights of old. Harry recovers the pearls and gives them to Ilma. Jack escapes and Harry follows him. As Ilma is admiring the pearls, a curtain is thrown over her head, and the pearls are taken from her.

BY USING
SPEER HOLD-ARKS

Exhibitors should endeavor to gain the confidence of their patrons. Prove to them that the same intense bright light is used every day. No flickers or sputters and a perfect picture.

The demands of the public today are very severe but to satisfy them means success. It also means the adoption of the famous "Speer Hold-Arks" as the negative carbon.

NOTICE!

To Projection Machine Purchasers:

When buying a Projector, be sure you get 100 cents' worth for every dollar.

When you call on a theatre supply house and they tell you the MOTIOGRAPH is no good, there is a reason;

—either they are not the MOTIOGRAPH agents in their locality;

—or they are getting a LARGER COMMISSION on some other make of machine.

For your good money you want the BEST VALUE possible; insist on a MOTIOGRAPH.

(A recent conversation between purchaser and dealer)

PURCHASER—Good morning. I want to buy a MOTIOGRAPH.

DEALER—I can sell you one, but don't you want to buy a ———?

PURCHASER—No, everybody is talking about the superiority of the MOTIOGRAPH and I want one.

DEALER—Well, I can sell it but I won't guarantee it.

PURCHASER—Does not the factory guarantee it?

DEALER—Yes, but—. Well, I will order it direct from the factory; but, remember, there are so many of these machines being ordered now that the factory can't make prompt delivery, so you had better take this other make.

PURCHASER—No; everybody says they give a guarantee and good service. Tell them to rush the order, for you can't sell me any other make.

It is true, our orders are heavier than ever before, but with our big force working overtime we are able to make early deliveries.

Insist upon your next projector being a MOTIOGRAPH. If your dealer suggests some other make, write to the factory.

Remember the MOTIOGRAPH is fully guaranteed and is the biggest selling machine to-day.

Now Is the Time to Do It —and Ours Is the Only Way

War time conditions have resulted in the popularizing of American-made moving pictures in the Latin countries, in both Europe and on the Western Hemisphere.

When the war is over and competition becomes keen, American manufacturers will find the need of smooth, easy-running distributing organizations to keep the business they have secured.

Now is the time to build up these organizations—to seek out the channels of easy distribution.

CINE MUNDIAL

the Spanish edition of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, is the logical—and the only—medium through which the American manufacturer can be introduced to the Spanish-speaking public.

It covers its field like a blanket, and in Central and South America, where it has the largest circulation, it has already won the implicit confidence of its readers.

CINE MUNDIAL invites American manufacturers to use its advertising columns. It invites American manufacturers to take advantage of every aid which men especially trained in observing Latin-American film market conditions can give them, to the end that American-made moving pictures may be firmly established in the foreign markets.

Drop Us a Note and Let Us Tell You in Detail of the Opportunities You Are Overlooking and Just How We Can Help You Cash in on Them.

Simplex

Just Supposing, Now

That you care about the present only,
and buy a Projector on a price basis, leaving quality out of the question,
and let the future take care of itself;
reasoning that when the picture becomes unsteady
it will be good exercise for your patrons' eyes; that repair bills in the future don't bother you now;
that you don't care to give your Operator a Machine he can take pride in;
that you don't mind how high your power and light bills may be, nor how soon you may have to put in a REAL Projector to save your Theatre from failure.
Supposing all these things, then

Don't Buy a Simplex

For the Simplex is the Machine for men who realize that for a Permanently Profitable Theatre
they must insure Permanently Perfect Projection.
The Simplex is built by men who are not satisfied unless they sell
Permanent Satisfaction.
Simplex Distributors are that kind of men, too.

then people will come again and again.

The One Best Bet of the Week~

Neal Hart in "The Ninth Day"

THE night you show Neal Hart in "The Ninth Day" mix with your audiences in the lobby as they pass out, and you will learn a lot about this virile actor's drawing power. You'll learn that when it comes to crowding five reels into three the Universal Western pictures show how it should be done, and you'll find that your public's appreciation proves that they can distinguish the real thing from the fakerino—when it comes to Western pictures.

Because Neal Hart is genuine, and George Marshall, who, with Harvey Gates, wrote this big three-reel Gold Seal, and who also directed it is a producer of punches—plus. Neal is a private in the U. S. A., and in love with Janet Eastman, the storekeeper's daughter. Mexican Joe, who also desires her, has no apparent business, but always has coin. To get Neal as a rival out of his way he proposes a smuggling game across the border, and is to meet that shrewd youngster on patrol at night. Neal, suspicious, hides a friend near by. As the negotiations proceed, the friend sneezes and a smuggler shoots in the direction of the sound. Neal's enmity is thus revealed and Joe and his gang make him a prisoner in a deserted cabin. Neal, in the hut, overhears plans to blow up the post in nine days. How he escapes to warn the people, the wild riding and the fight that follows makes a tremendous climax that will arouse your audiences to a frenzy of excitement. This is a big three-reel picture that you cannot boost too strongly. Released week of October 8th. Book thru any Universal Exchange.

Or Book these Funny Comedies and Powerful Dramas!

OF COURSE you've got to have comedies if you want to get the money. No matter what kind of an entertainment you give you need comedy like the Nestor one-reel "Hot Applications," featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. Or perhaps you'd prefer a two-reeler. There's the L-KO "The Nurse of an Aching Heart," a screaming stunt laugh-getter. Be that as it may, you can't make a mistake with either of the Jokers—Wm. Franey and Gale Henry in "The Wart on the Wire," a burlesque detective drama, or Max Asher in "Rainstorms and Brainstorms," back of the scenes stuff—or, for the matter o' that, you'll like Ruth Stonehouse, who, in "A Walloping Time" (Victor one-reel), will give your patrons one. If you are showing the straight dramatic subjects better book that railroad thriller, Helen Gibson, in "Saving the Fast Mail" (Bison), with stunts to make your hair curl. For a marvelous juvenile-grown-up feature—great for a matinee special, book Lena Baskette in "A Prince for a Day" (two reels). All released week of October 8. What Exhibitors Say of Mutual's New Fall Features —"Big Stars Only"

By JOHN R. FREULER

THE WEEK OF SEPTEMBER 3rd marked the start of a new chapter in film history. That week the Mutual Film Corporation began the new season of 1917-1918 by releasing two amazing box-office attractions—Edna Goodrich in "Reputation" and Mary Miles Minter in "Charity Castle."

Letters have come to me from prominent exhibitors everywhere praising the high quality of these new productions. Manager F. L. Newman, of the Royal Theatre—one of Kansas City's finest houses—says of "Reputation": "I think it is as fine a production as I have ever seen. The lighting effects and photography are excellent. The story could not be better. The introduction of the dancers in the cabaret scene is wonderful, also the way Miss Goodrich had the opportunity to display beautiful gowns.

Manager Leo A. Landau, of the Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., writes regarding "Reputation": "In point of story, scenery, cast, settings, star, titles, in fact, in every particular, I would call it a 100 per cent production. No exhibitor can desire more than 'Reputation' gives."

These letters are conclusive proof of the box-office value of the new Mutual Pictures. Eight of these big star attractions in five or six reels are released by Mutual this month—two each week! The week of Sept. 10th: Ann Murdock in "Outcast"—first of Charles Frohman Successes in Motion Pictures, and Gail Kane in "The Bride's Silence." The week of Sept. 17th: Juliette Day in "The Rainbow Girl," and Margarita Fischer in "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up." The week of Sept. 24th: William Russell in "Sands of Sacrifice," and Julia Sanderson in "The Runaway"—second of the Charles Frohman Successes in Motion Pictures.

Those fortunate exhibitors who have secured exclusive territory for the showing of these new Mutual Pictures—"Big Stars Only"—for the coming 52 weeks are assured big box-office returns. If you haven't talked to your Mutual manager recently or reviewed some of these new attractions, you're resisting opportunity.

"Goldwyn Has Made Good"

IN every section of the United States "Polly of the Circus" has received the unqualified praise of the great exhibitors who are the mediums through which this and all other pictures reach the discerning American public.

From Managers and Exhibitors:

J. A. QUINN, RIALTO THEATRE, LOS ANGELES: "Polly of the Circus" played to capacity business at opening, notwithstanding Billy Sunday and Ringling Brothers' Circus as opposition. Enthusiastic praise from patrons and press. I have seen "Baby Mine" and your Maxine Elliott pictures and predict a phenomenal success for Goldwyn. Congratulations.

JOSEPH GROSSMAN, STANDARD THEATRE, CLEVELAND: Overwhelmed by crowds that attempted to enter theatre. All house records for years broken by "Polly." Audience pleased immensely. My congratulations.

L. V. CALVERT, NEW GARRICK THEATRE, MINNEAPOLIS: Opened to capacity business. "Polly" is a wonderful production and a huge box office attraction.

N. L. NATHANSON, ST. DENIS THEATRE, MONTREAL: "Polly of the Circus" broke all records at opening at the St. Denis. Received a tremendous ovation.

J. R. MUIR, DOMINION THEATRES, LTD., VANCOUVER: Played to capacity at "Polly of the Circus" opening. My patrons are delighted. Hearty congratulations for your achievement.

The Motion Picture Trade Press:

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: In "Polly of the Circus" we have a great picture. It grips and deeply stirs. . . . Mae Marsh shines her brightest. . . . "Polly of the Circus" will go strong in any house.

NEW YORK MORN. TELEGRAPH: Goldwyn's first production is an artistic triumph. "Polly of the Circus" sets a new standard for artistry on the screen.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus" again demonstrates her right to be termed the best actress of the shadow stage. . . . Such realistic effects as the picture brings forth have never been paralleled on the screen before. . . . "Polly" sets a high mark for Goldwyn.

The National Verdict Is:

NO LONGER an organization of promises, and at last a company of definite achievement, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation takes pleasure in quoting for the benefit of the trade and all lovers of good pictures, the important motion picture and amusement journals, the critics of the great daily newspapers and powerful exhibitors in several sections of the country about the first Goldwyn production, "Polly of the Circus."

FROM AMERICA'S GREAT DAILY PAPERS:

NEW YORK TRIBUNE: There is only one criticism of "Polly of the Circus." It is going to make us all dreadfully dissatisfied with the usual photoplay. Goldwyn's first production is a picture of wonderful charm and power.

NEW YORK SUN: "Polly of the Circus" is a good augury that the name of Goldwyn shall not perish from the earth.

NEW YORK WORLD: This first Goldwyn production is a rare combination of pictorial and story-telling effectiveness.

NEW YORK EVE. TELEGRAM: The artistic merit of "Polly of the Circus" is beyond question.

NEW YORK EVE. POST: This first Goldwyn picture should appeal to all who appreciate wholesome entertainment.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS: Goldwyn's first production is a triumph of the screen. . . . A continuous series of thrills.

PHILADELPHIA NORTH AMERICAN: Goldwyn has arrived in more senses than one. "Polly of the Circus" has a strong claim on the "ideal picture" distinction.

CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER: Goldwyn's great first release, "Polly of the Circus," is a picture you will see twice. It is an unusual play and presents Mae Marsh in a role that fits her like a glove.

CHICAGO EVE. POST: The whole production is a work of art, not merely a vehicle for the exploitation of a star.

NEW YORK AMERICAN: "Polly of the Circus" is a triumph for Goldwyn, for Margaret Mayo and lovely Mae Marsh.

NEW YORK EVE. SUN: This first Goldwyn picture gives promise of many good things to come.

NEW YORK HERALD: Here is a production of the highest order, and the work of Mae Marsh reveals all of her appealing powers.

NEW YORK TIMES: "Polly of the Circus" is a sincere effort to improve the motion picture art.

NEW YORK EVE. MAIL: You will thrill with every tenth or twelfth turn of the camera crank.

NEW YORK GLOBE: "Polly of the Circus" is leagues ahead of the average picture. Mae Marsh possesses all of her old-time appeal.

NEW YORK EVE. WORLD: As a Goldwyn picture, "Polly of the Circus" is even greater than it was as a great stage success.

PHILADELPHIA PUBLIC LEDGER: "Polly" is something of real and unusual beauty. It is a memorable production.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER: "Polly of the Circus" reaches the highest points strived for by previous producers.

PHILADELPHIA EVE. LEDGER: "Polly of the Circus" is a gem of cinema art. Progress is written over the whole film. It has a refinement of handling almost new to motion pictures.

CLEVELAND LEADER: The lighting and effects and thrills in "Polly of the Circus" must have given the people who achieved them supreme satisfaction as artistic work most creditably done. . . . Goldwyn sets a high standard for itself.

MINNEAPOLIS JOURNAL: Here is a magnificent production that will pack to capacity the motion picture theatres of the world.

BOSTON EVE. RECORD: Here at last is art in the movies. The outstanding features of "Polly of the Circus" are its unparalleled lighting effects, its wonderful night photography and its exquisite settings and backgrounds.

NEW ORLEANS TIMES-PICAYUNE: Brains win. "Polly of the Circus" is by far the greatest motion picture presentation that has ever been shown in the city of New Orleans. Mae Marsh is new and more appealing than ever before. Brains directed her. Brains adapted the story to the screen, and brains made it so clear and effective that there has never been a screen subject that approached closer to perfection than this one.

ALICE COON BROWN, OHIO STATE JOURNAL: "Polly of the Circus" is an exceptional film. If the other Goldwyn pictures are as well done as this one, all of us have a lot that is worth while to look forward to.

Maxine Elliott Releases Are Shifted

GOLDWYN will present Maxine Elliott for her screen debut in "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb instead of in "The Eternal Magdalene," as previously announced. "Fighting Odds" will be released everywhere October 7.

Despite enthusiastic indorsement of "The Eternal Magdalene" by the National Board of Review, censor boards in Pennsylvania and the city of Chicago raise certain objections to the production —objections with which, quite naturally, Goldwyn disagrees in entirety.

But, rather than cause our exhibitor customers inconvenience through late delivery of the scheduled picture, Goldwyn brings forward "Fighting Odds" and will thresh out the points at issue in the two localities.

"Fighting Odds" is a powerful emotional drama of Big Business and a wife's loyalty and devotion to her husband who is made the catspaw of unscrupulous financiers. This big play gives Miss Elliott the finest dramatic opportunity she has ever had, and millions of people will welcome her to the screen in this big role.

The same big campaign of exploitation being conducted throughout America for "The Eternal Magdalene" is now being duplicated for "Fighting Odds."

Saturday, Sept. 8th
By S. W. Weller

"THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" IS BRENON'S FINEST ACHIEVEMENT

—The production is superb. It is probably Mr. Brenon's finest technical achievement, not forgetting "A Daughter of the Gods." "The Fall of the Romanoffs" is big in every way.

Sept. 22nd
By Edward Weitzel

Among the many excellences to be found in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," Herbert Brenon's eight-part picture novel, based on the Russian Revolution, one attribute stands out in bold relief—the swift onrush of events. To Herbert Brenon belongs a large share of the credit for putting "The Fall of the Romanoffs" before the public in an able and impressive manner. —The cast could hardly be better.

EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW
Sept. 22nd
By T. O. Ettenhead

"THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" IS BRENON'S BEST

—The outstanding feature of the whole production is the feeling of reality, the feeling on the part of the onlooker that the events seen on the screen are a true and real depiction of the events as they occurred in actual life and history. Brenon has made his characters on the screen live and act as the real characters of this mighty historical drama lived and acted in life. Herbert Brenon deserves the utmost credit that can be accorded a producer for his work on this picture. It is the best thing that he has ever done.

By Peter Miller

In visualizing the causes responsible for the decline of the Russian monarchy and consequently its actual and downfall Herbert Brenon has attained the latter results as cinema historian of the latter. "The Fall of the Romanoffs" is obviously an expensive production. The dignity with which Mr. Brenon has surrounded his several royal characters works to the general good of the picture. Undoubtedly is dealt with a theme of world-wide appeal and crowded houses will almost assuredly result. And pictured [illegible] tion, for the spectacular and the thrilling is present in abundance.

to all those who have liked the work of FRITZ

ON AUGUST 29, 1917, Fritz made his last appearance before the camera in the closing scene of "The Narrow Trail," my first Thomas H. Ince production for Artcraft. Hereafter, he will live in retirement with all the comforts of horse life.

I have ridden Fritz constantly for more than two years, and he has served me so faithfully, and has been so steadfast and courageous whenever called upon to perform a hazardous feat, that I feel all who have been so kind to us in our work upon the screen will know and understand my motives. I love the old fellow dearly, and cannot, after all his loyalty, subject him further to a chance of injury.

I wish to tell all who like the little Pinto that he will be right with me wherever I may go—until the Boss Ranger comes along and summons one or both of us across the Big Divide.

With deepest gratitude from Fritz and myself.

William S. Hart

Please don't worry about me. I'm going to be with the boss just the same.

FRITZ.

The Perfection Policy—
Contract or Open Booking

THE inauguration of Perfection Pictures marks a new era of prosperity for the exhibitors of America. Fifty-two Perfection Pictures will be released during the coming year—one each week. Each will be a feature of distinct merit in five or six reels, made by the "Perfection Process"—an evolution in motion photography. Contracts are now being allotted either on the open-booking basis or on a basis of fifty-two pictures for the year.

¶ Perfection Pictures are released at a price that enables the exhibitor to make a good profit. They are backed up by the most gigantic campaign of National advertising ever launched in the motion picture industry. By the use of National magazines like Saturday Evening Post, newspapers all over the country and publicity aids of every conceivable variety, Perfection Pictures are being made known everywhere.

¶ Stories of the highest class—light, wholesome, thoroughly enjoyable dramas and comedy-dramas with an appeal for people of every class—are provided in Perfection Pictures. Authors whose names are found on the contents pages of America's leading magazines are contributing the stories for Perfection Pictures.

¶ A new evolution in motion photography—the Perfection Process—(the result of years of experiment by scientists and laboratory experts of note) raises Perfection Pictures to the top-notch photographically, while the supervision of all productions by experts in their respective lines insures costuming, stage settings, properties and accessories being accurate in every particular.

¶ With such assurance of high quality and a booking policy that is applicable to any demand, exhibitors will be eager to secure exclusive territory for the exhibition of Perfection Pictures. Territory is being allotted now. You are urged to communicate with your nearest Kleine exchange for full details.

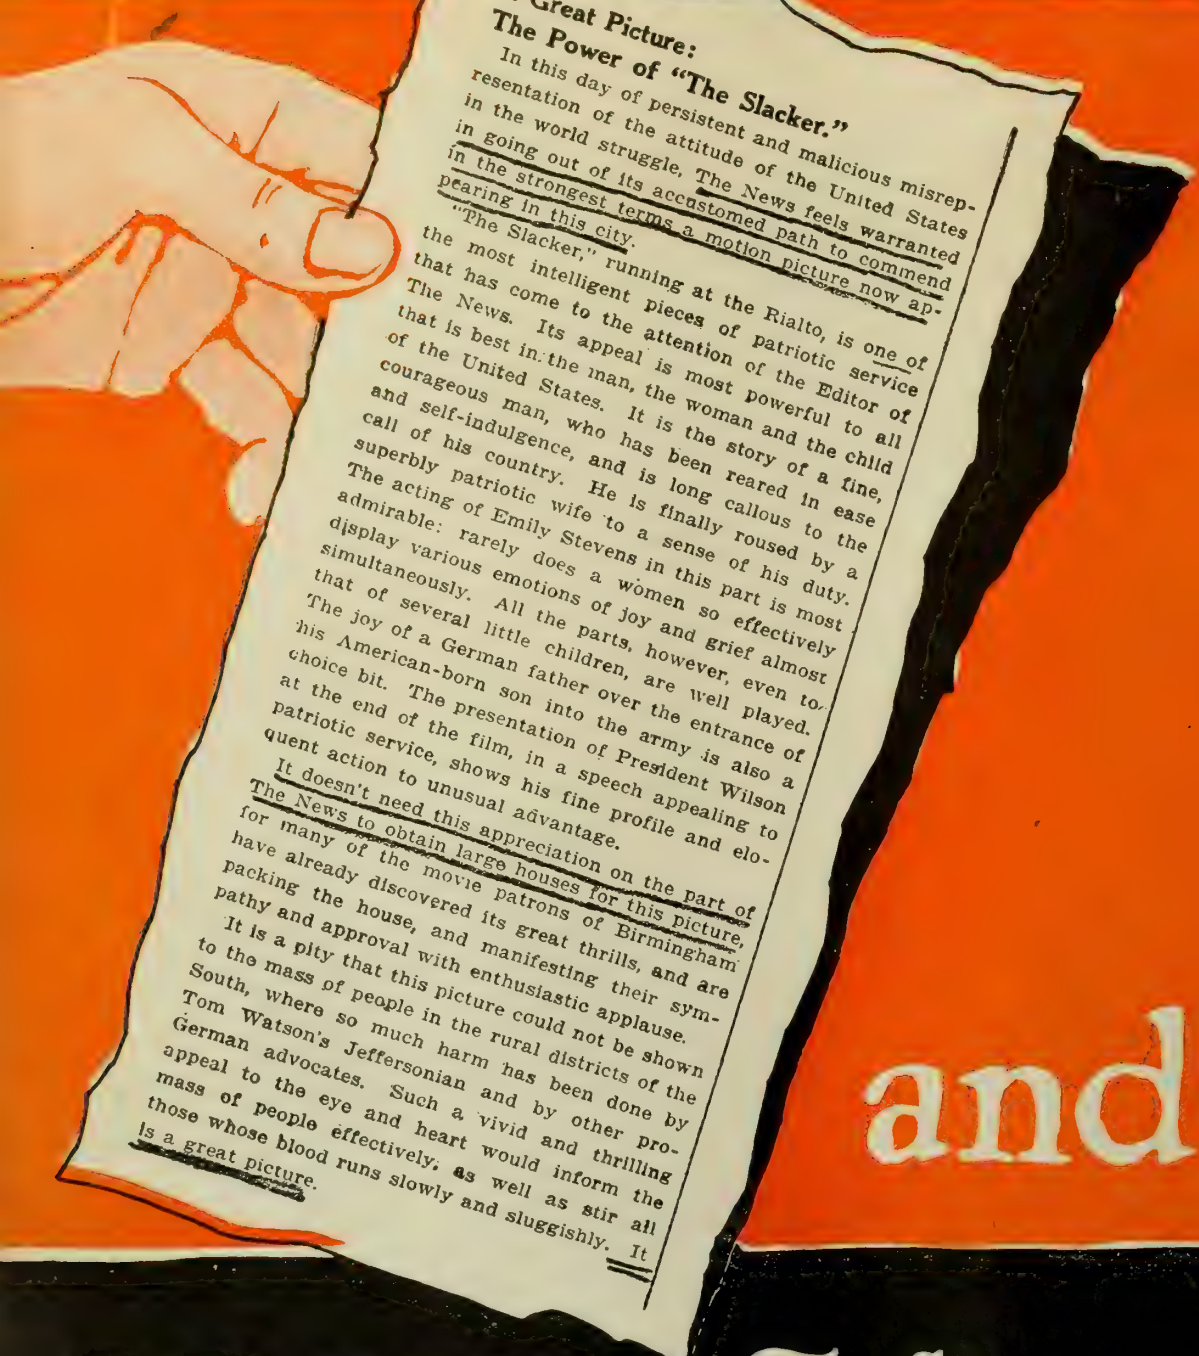
SEPTEMBER 24*th*

The Birmingham (Alabama) News published the following significant editorial:



A Great Picture:
The Power of "The Slacker."

In this day of persistent and malicious misrepresentation of the attitude of the United States in the world struggle, The News feels warranted in going out of its accustomed path to commend in the strongest terms a motion picture now appearing in this city.

"The Slacker," running at the Rialto, is one of the most intelligent pieces of patriotic service that has come to the attention of the Editor of The News. Its appeal is most powerful to all that is best in the man, the woman and the child of the United States. It is the story of a fine, courageous man, who has been reared in ease and self-indulgence, and is long callous to the call of his country. He is finally roused by a superbly patriotic wife to a sense of his duty. The acting of Emily Stevens in this part is most admirable: rarely does a women so effectively display various emotions of joy and grief almost simultaneously. All the parts, however, even to that of several little children, are well played. The joy of a German father over the entrance of his American-born son into the army is also a choice bit. The presentation of President Wilson at the end of the film, in a speech appealing to patriotic service, shows his fine profile and eloquent action to unusual advantage.

It doesn't need this appreciation on the part of The News to obtain large houses for this picture, for many of the movie patrons of Birmingham have already discovered its great thrills, and are packing the house, and manifesting their sympathy and approval with enthusiastic applause. It is a pity that this picture could not be shown to the mass of people in the rural districts of the South, where so much harm has been done by Tom Watson's Jeffersonian and by other pro-German advocates. Such a vivid and thrilling appeal to the eye and heart would inform the mass of people effectively, as well as stir all those whose blood runs slowly and sluggishly. It is a great picture.

IN this episode there is again a plot strong enough for a five-reeler or two of the kind many producers are grinding out these days. E. W. Hornung, who writes these Stingarees, possesses a fountain of inspiration, that, considering the certainty and steadiness of its flow, might be better called a "gusher." Once more it is necessary to say that in good, live outdoor action these Stingarees excel even in comparison with so-called "super features."

Facts and Comments

ENTER the screen novelist! The classification of the moving picture is moving forward slowly, but in the right direction. The custom of placing all screen fiction under the heading of photoplays has continued too long, and the correct designation of the contributions of the camera must result in a broader knowledge of screen playwriting among both picture dramatists and laymen. As pointed out in a recent article in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, many screen stories follow the novel in form and should be called picture novels. The producer of "The Fall of the Romanoffs," recognizing that his story contains all the elements of the historical novel, gives it its proper classification, thus blazing a much desired trail. The picture novel has now come into its own.

THE attention of our readers is once more directed to the lists of film exchanges throughout the country that we printed on pages 1674 to 1676 in last week's issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. As these lists also give the brands handled by each group of exchanges, they form handy references for theater managers in selecting programs or in securing any production they may desire. On account of the space required we will only be able to print the lists occasionally, consequently last week's paper should be filed for reference.

FROM Boston to Seattle and in between the note of optimism that pervades the correspondence of representatives of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is most encouraging. Every indication seems to point to a season of good business ahead for the exhibitor in all sections of the country. The increasing popularity and distribution of American films in many parts of the foreign market mean that the American producer is also getting a good share of the export business of the world. As we have said above, this is all most encouraging from a trade point of view providing it is not made the excuse for boosting prices all along the line.

ATTEMPTS to arbitrarily determine what is the best and most profitable length of feature to make are like similar attempts to fix a certain sort of program as being the most successful. Many subjects may be much better in eight or nine reels than in five, while many five-reel productions would really be too long in less than half their present footage. To the average theatergoer variety is ten times more acceptable than a continuous theme, just as the short story and the newspapers number hundreds of readers to one for the book of five or six hundred pages. Right here, we believe, is the kernel of the reason for the drawing power of many of our longer multiple reel subjects. There is sufficient variety in the development of the plot or action to make the audience forget that they are sitting through eight or more reels. Fixing a hard and fast rule as to length of feature or certain style of program would be a sure method of defeating the object in view, namely, the securing of the greatest possible amount of public interest and approval. This can only be done by variety, variety in length of subjects and in style of programs.

THERE are at least two brands of foolishness that we run into most every week. One is represented by those who would treat the exhibitors as infants to be led every step of the way and as men who can be made to believe any cock and bull story if properly presented. If this paper were to run short some week of the worth while news of the trade necessary to fill our columns and was to use up about five times as much paper to print all the matter we receive from the various publicity concerns in the industry, our readers would realize that there are many more in this foolish class than they ever dreamed of. The other foolish class are those who try to fry their own fish by telling the exhibitor that he is altogether independent of all other branches of the industry, that they all must come to him, etc., etc. The whole industry working together has a great virgin field that it has not yet reached and which affords scope for the best of united efforts, viz.: transforming into picture patrons the great big majority of our population which does not now frequent picture houses. We have what is now freely admitted to be a more direct and a much more interesting medium than books and newspapers, yet only used by possibly a fifth or at most a fourth of the American public and used much less frequently even by those than it might be.

Sane Business Acumen

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THERE are some very stupid assumptions about exhibitors and the public, and one of them is that writers must play down to a low order of intelligence. The founder of this paper was not of that opinion. He took it for granted that his readers knew just as much as he did; nothing too good for them would ever find its way into these columns, and whenever a writer had that opinion it was because he was behind the times. There are producers who have a nervous fit about getting over the heads of "the people," while those people are laughing tolerantly, when not in derision, at his efforts to put forth screen products in words of one syllable.

Another stupid assumption is that nothing good can come from dramas originated especially and only for the screen. The prevailing idea at this time is that we must "import" our stories from literature and from the stage. It is a drawback to have old art traditions hitched to this young art, and, keep this in mind, the future success of motion picture production lies in its opportunities, not in its drawbacks.

A very large number of our directors and actors have come to us from the stage, and they can greatly benefit from the training they have received when they do not impose on moving pictures the artistic codes and methods they have borrowed from the theater. It is almost time for us to provide our own materials, our own systems, our own principles and our own standards. We shall have a true moving picture art when we make it so in all the technics as well as in business organization. Every once in a while, when watching a new release from the viewpoint of a motion picture critic, I feel intuitively that an otherwise charming screen story is spoiled by theatrical grouping of characters, by stagey settings, and by the mannerisms of limelight and footlight actors.

Others feel the same way, to judge from the effect on large audiences. The impression made is that of artificiality, whereas, on the stage itself, supreme effort is made to dispense with everything which contributes to the unnatural because it tends to destroy the illusion. Stage affectations are far from useful in presenting to the mental eye alone our screen illusions of reality. It is to be seriously questioned if a producer, or an exhibitor either, for that matter, has really any shrewd insight into the demands of his patronage when he attempts to limit the splendid opportunities of this new art to the exactions of an older one.

Outside of producers and exhibitors of biased judgment, we are up against business organization and a distributive system which tends very strongly to be conservative. It is in the very nature of cautious business men to stand by the established order of things. A part of the game of holding on to money is to go slow about innovation and change. Good business organization is wisely preservative within its own field of action, and it is of value in production when it protects from unnecessary waste and loss, but it is not very well posted on the response of artistry to audience needs.

When a business organization fails to grasp the true relation between source of supply and consumer, as it usually does when there is an art intervening, it operates directly against its own survival. Inaugurated as a helping agency, it becomes a hindering one. The result has been to establish standards of stage drama and literature for those of the screen, to the injury of moving pictures and to the alienation of people who might easily love fine moving pictures for themselves. The new art is one of expression in its own language, by its own methods. To dress it up in the old clothes of some parent art is more or less fatal to its individual charm.

Many of the plans unfolded for business reorganization in the production and distribution of moving pictures are sound as far as they go, but they lack breadth of comprehension. They are based on addressing an audience which has not been carefully studied, which is different and far larger than that of the theater, and which has been erratically and imperfectly served up to the present time. For instance, our show is given in the theater of the many. That "many" is falsely judged to be one of limited intelligence, or generously uncritical False premises to begin with.

There is today no prejudice of importance among our people against moving pictures except that which the pictures themselves furnish. That is to say that existing prejudice is not against the art itself, but against its unsatisfactory examples. Our theaters can only succeed in a large way through immediate contact and close sympathy with our people. They must present what is in harmony with the whole thought of the nation, of what we are planning and thinking about, more of an advance agent of human minds and hearts than a reflection of what has already been presented.

What is to happen is of far deeper interest to all of us than what has happened. Most of us are glad to throw off the old chrysalis and spread our wings in some more perfect shapes for a new flight. Hence our intense fondness for what is new and original. Here is an audience demand rarely grasped by men who most sincerely believe that they possess sane business acumen. We lose sight of the charms and beauty of the life we are motoring through when our attention is entirely confined to driving at full speed. Swift movement may be a pleasure to the man at the wheel but his guests are not permitted to enjoy the change of scene and variety of experience which the ride is supposed to provide.

Is it sane business acumen to play down to the weaklings instead of to people as normal and intelligent as ourselves. Is it sane business acumen to "import" from other arts anything which puts a limitation on the opportunities of our own? Is it sane business acumen to restrict our scope and freedom of movement with the hampering methods of a boxed-in performance? Is it sane business acumen in the visualization of dramas not to consider the relation of the source of supply to the consumer? Is it sane business acumen to drive, drive, drive, at top speed in all departments, blind to the main object, that of entertainment?

Business organization fails entirely to grasp its opportunities when it disregards the main purpose for which it was created. The first and foremost object of any motion picture organization is to study the needs of our people as a whole and determine how they can be most delightfully satisfied. To grow and flourish we must strike our roots deep into the soil of American intelligence. This is not an easy matter. We cannot do it by borrowing right and left at random, and we must raise ourselves to higher levels of good taste, rather than try to drag it down.

We will all realize some day that this new art belongs to the people. They made it possible; they discovered it; they supported it, and they may yet take it into their own hands and make it deal objectively with the lives we are all living. We are not giving our best friends, the common people, the consideration they truly deserve.

Great Doings in Canada

By Sam Spedon

WE are mighty glad we went to the convention of the exhibitors of the maritime provinces of Canada, held at St. John, N. B. We heard a lot of things about the film business thereabout that make us believe it is indeed the Arcadia of the industry.

No Advance Deposits.

We were told there is only one distributing concern in that territory that asks for an advance deposit. One salesman told us he wouldn't ask for payment on delivery if it wasn't for an occasional cancellation on an agreement before the film was delivered.

For Instance.

"Once in a great while," the salesman said, "I travel one hundred and twenty-five miles at considerable expense, make a contract and when I returned to my office in Montreal I find a cancellation awaiting me. If it weren't for this rare instance I would trust any exhibitor with whom I do business. We have on the whole the finest and most upright class of exhibitors anywhere in the world."

Confidence.

There appears to be a bond of confidence between the distributors and exhibitors throughout the provinces. This was evidenced by the harmony and freedom of speech on questions relating to both, discussed in open convention.

For That Reason.

Everything at the convention and in connection therewith was carried out according to schedule, not a hitch in the whole program. The only discussion of any length was the question of affiliating with an American exhibitors' organization. This was discussed pro and con and it was decided, as conditions were different from those in the States, that the matter be laid on the table until the annual convention of 1918.

Board of Censors.

Even the censors in Canada work in perfect accord with the exhibitors. The final decision is left to the chairman of the board, and as he is a very fair-minded man, well-read and just, his decisions are always accepted as final. Pictures that are historically correct and scenes that are true to life, no matter how tragic in their picturization, are considered in accordance with facts and necessary to depict the truth and historic accuracy. Nothing but the vulgar, lewd and that which caters to the morbid and immoral is taboo.

Deserve the Best.

While at the showing of a feature picture exhibited at the Imperial theater in St. John, we overheard an exhibitor remark: "That's the best feature I have ever seen in Canada. Most of them with the exception of Pathe are so old and shop worn they give us a bad impression. If they showed them all in as good condition as this one it would make a big difference in our choice of features." This would indicate that the home offices of the exchanges do not give the Canadian exhibitors the consideration they deserve and do not know that they are dealing with some of the finest men in the exhibition field—men who deserve the best for audiences throughout the provinces, that very nearly reach the one hundred per cent. class.

Montreal Conditions.

We were informed by an exchangeman and exhibitor from Montreal that conditions there are somewhat different in that "locality than anywhere else in Canada." In the first place, they said, it is a cosmopolitan city and territory. The exhibitors comprise Greeks, "Canucks," French Canadians and those from the States. We have found it impossible to organize to any extent and the demand for pictures are necessarily varied. We have a fertile field and good business but a difficult one to cater to and a very hard one to deal with, because we have to present our productions to our customers in the way they can best understand and appreciate them. We are striving to bring all the exhibitors into our league and hope eventually to succeed."

Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia.

The delegates from these provinces were most enthusiastic over the condition of their business. They were full of "pep" and told us business was good, with bright prospects of bigger patronage this fall and winter. Some of them were enlarging and others were redecorating and improving their theaters. They were unanimous in testifying to the response they had received and were receiving from the public in its appreciation of giving it the best, also in its acknowledgement of the benefits of motion pictures, in educating, entertaining and promoting the welfare and happiness of the people.

Cheerfulness Prevails.

We went to Canada with some apprehension of war-cast gloom hanging over it. If it were there, no doubt it was, the people did not wear it on their sleeves. We were received with such good cheer and accorded such hospitality we were completely disarmed, made to feel so much at home, we felt as if we had known our hosts all our lives and were visiting our closest friends and neighbors. We want to go there some more and make a longer stay.

Allied Patriotism.

At the Saturday matinee and evening showing of an American war picture in Keith's Imperial theater the audiences were vociferous in their applause whenever the Stars and Stripes were in evidence. At the close of the picture when the orchestra played the American and British anthems everyone in the audience stood up in acclamation of their allied interest in the establishment of peace on earth and good will among men.

An Equitable Contract

By Sam Spedon.

AT a convention in the South a motion was made by a delegate to have the executive committee of the organization draw up an equitable contract between the distributors and exhibitors, the same to be presented to the board of directors for its approval. Now we hear that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is to frame an equitable contract between the producers and players. Quite a coincidence.

The first will be comparatively easy, because it is a purely business proposition based on cost of production and profits governed by local conditions. The second is an entirely different matter, based upon temperament and personal valuation against the estimate of that valuation by the producers. We recall the remark of the old fellow to a consequential young men who was applying for a position and extolled in self praise his many qualifications for the job. The old fellow said, "Young man, I would like to buy you at my estimate and sell you at your own."

An equitable contract between producers and players would only affect the individual players who are obliged to work by the job. Most of the stars have formed their own companies and are in reality individual producers. An equitable contract would not reach the source about which there is most complaint, the high cost of star features and advanced rental prices.

We mentioned the contract between distributors and exhibitors first, to remind the framers of the equitable contract between producers and players that they must not fail to consider the exhibitors in the drafting of it. The article we published in last week's issue of this publication entitled "Do Something" might assist.

The Music Tax Question

ALL exhibitors are interested in the music tax question, which has become a considerable issue because of the energy with which the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers are prosecuting violations of the copyright act which gives to composers of music the exclusive right to perform their works for profit in public places. Because of that interest we direct the attention of our readers to articles by Clarence E. Sinn and C. C. Pettijohn published this week in the Department of Music for the Picture.

Mr. Sinn calls attention to the advertised statements of certain publishers that exhibitors are at liberty to use music published by them because they are not members of the Composers and Authors Society, and warns the exhibitor that it is the author and composer who control the copyright and not the publisher, so that the statements in question are misleading and likely to get the exhibitor who heeds them into trouble.

Mr. Pettijohn in answering a puerile editorial in a trade publication alleged to be "of, for and by the motion picture exhibitor," makes all too plain the futility of any attempt to combat by process of law the position of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Mr. Pettijohn cites the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, upon which authority the American Society is acting. He also quotes the opinions of several well known lawyers who corroborate his own opinion, and Mr. Pettijohn is himself a lawyer of known ability.

All this leads to but one conclusion: That the tax imposed by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has the sanction of law, sustained by the highest tribunal of the land; that any attempt to combat the provisions of the Copyright Law as affecting the rights of the composers of music is defeated before it is commenced.

As a further conclusion it must be said for the information of exhibitors generally that any appeal for funds to fight the Music Tax law is without justification; that it is born of ignorance and will avail those who contribute the sum total of nothing. Without a great stretch of imagination the taking of three dollars, or any other amount for the purpose stated might well be characterized as "obtaining money under false pretenses."

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD does not hestitate to warn exhibitors to disregard all such appeals and advises all who have contributed to request that their moneys be returned to them.

We append a list of the members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers whose copyrighted productions are subject to the Music Tax:

Abrahams, Maurice Music Co.
Bond, Carrie Jacobs & Son
Broadway Music Corporation
Daly, Jos. M. Music Pub. Co.

Feist, Leo, Inc.
Forster, F. J. A.

Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., Inc.
Stern, Jos. W. & Co.
Von Tilzer, Harry Music Pub. Co.

There are many reputable publishers who deal in non-copyright music, so that exhibitors should have no trouble in getting all the music they require that is not subject to tax.

"Eternal Magdalene" Held Up

Controversy With Censors Leads Goldwyn to Substitute "Fighting Odds" as First Maxine Elliott Subject.

After all, Maxine Elliott's debut on the screen as a Goldwyn star will be in the big emotional drama "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb—and there's a reason. To get to the point quickly, "The Eternal Magdalene," previously announced as the first of Goldwyn's Maxine Elliott productions, has been challenged by the Pennsylvania board of censors and the Chicago censor board. Both bodies find points in the picture which they question and which Goldwyn pointedly denies constitute any violation of good taste. Nevertheless, as "The Eternal Magdalene" has been announced for release on October 7 and that date is close at hand, Goldwyn has determined to fully protect all of its contract customers among the exhibitors of the United States by substituting Miss Elliott's other picture in its stead.

This means that "The Eternal Magdalene" and the points at issue with the two censor organizations can be threshed out and adjusted without holding up any Goldwyn customers or disarranging their playing dates. Goldwyn insists that "The Eternal Magdalene" made, as it has been, into a great morality play by Arthur Hopkins, in no way tends to endanger public morality and in this contention finds itself sustained by a most enthusiastic indorsement of the picture in its entirety by the National Board of Review, which exercises the censorial function for America as a whole. The National Board of Review, it will be recalled, declared that "the world as an audience owed Goldwyn a vote of thanks for making this remarkable picture."

In "Fighting Odds" Miss Elliott obtains an introduction to picture audiences of the world under most favorable conditions. In this picture she is equally charming and beautiful in the role of the Magdalene, and she figures as the heroine of a powerful emotional drama by two of America's foremost dramatic authors, Mr. Megrue and Mr. Cobb. "Fighting Odds" is the story of big business and a wife's loyalty to a husband who is made a catspaw to a big financial leader. The scenes of this play are laid in Detroit and New York, and Henry Clive, enacting the role of the husband, is a big manufacturer of automobiles with a business code and a friendliness for labor that suggest the modern wage policies of Henry Ford. Insuring the widest exploitation for this lovely star's debut, Goldwyn is maintaining its special publicity men throughout the country to exploit this picture in advance. In its advertising announcement this week Goldwyn frankly explains the reason for this change in releases and the attitude of the two censor boards.

EDNA PURVIANCE'S ILLNESS DELAYS "THE ADVENTURER."

Charlie Chaplin has resumed work at the Lone Star studio, Hollywood, Cal., on the last scenes of his twelfth Mutual special, "The Adventurer," which was delayed, first by the illness of the famous comedian himself and more recently by an indisposition of Edna Purviance, Mr. Chaplin's leading woman.

Miss Purviance, who had been in the Good Samaritan hospital near Hollywood, since August 19, appeared at the studio looking little worse for her illness, which is declared to have been due to the strain of continuous rehearsal.

Mr. Chaplin's new play is considered by the world's highest priced comedian to be his best production under the epoch-making $670,000 a year contract with the Mutual Film Corporation.

Maritime Provinces Convention

Large and Enthusiastic Gathering of Canadian Exhibitors at St. John, N. B.

By Alice Fairweather.

THE convention of the Maritime Provinces Exhibitors' League at St. John was, as was stated by several of the distinguished guests, characterized by a spirit of fair-mindedness and good fellowship to a remarkable degree. The attendance comprises about seventy-five exhibitors and a large number of exchange men, with two general managers and several representatives from the Montreal and Toronto head offices.

N. V. Gastonguay,
New President Maritime Province Exhibitors.

The business sessions of the league began at 2 p. m. at the Knights of Pythias Hall, with President W. H. Golding in the chair. After the welcoming remarks the matter of the unfinished business from last year was taken up and a motion relating to the league's joining with the Motion Pictures Exhibitors' League of America was moved. It was decided that in the existing state of affairs in the American leagues it would be unwise to affiliate with any league in the United States, and the matter was left over until the next annual convention.

The Nominating Committee, W. C. McKay, St. John; F. G. Spencer, St. John; D. W. Dimock, Campbellton; R. G. McAdam, Halifax, and N. W. Mason, New Glasgow, was appointed. The retiring president, W. H. Golding, in his address after welcoming the visitors, stated that one of the most serious difficulties confronting motion picture men today in the Maritime Provinces is the prohibitive prices asked for films and the inequitable contracts under which they are sold. "There are evils in the cash deposit arrangements and the dictating of a box office policy, together with a seeming disregard for the safety of the individual showman and his theater by producing magnates in their wild gambling for stars and features," he said. "The decrease in the patronage of moving-picture houses, due to enlistments and bereavements, make the demand for fancy prices come at a most inopportune time, when business is at its lowest ebb in Canada. Smaller places cannot make a big profit by handling big features at Broadway prices." Mr. Golding ended on a high note of patriotism, reminding the exhibitors that the Empire is at war and that their aims must not be only to make money, but to assist their country in every way possible as well. He thanked all his coworkers, and said that he retired with good-will to all.

G. A. Margetts, Maritime Province representative of the Canadian Universal Film Company, spoke on the matter of damaged films, diverting of shipments and other difficulties between the exhibitor and exchanges.

The following were elected officers for the coming year: President, N. V. Gastonguay, Halifax; vice-president, F. G. Spencer, St. John; secretary, J. M. Franklin, Halifax; treasurer, George Metzler, Halifax; vice-president for Nova Scotia, N. W. Mason, New Glasgow, N. S.; W. H. Golding, St. John, for New Brunswick, and J. J. Gaudet, Summerside, for Prince Edward Island.

D. A. McKay of New Waterford, N. S., spoke against the percentage system of playing film attractions. He introduced a resolution favoring a flat rental, but it was not passed.

W. H. Golding,
Retiring President.

C. F. Givan, of Sussex, advocated the publishing of a monthly paper giving league news and candid reviews of the films. He offered to publish this free of charge for the first three months. It was felt by those present that the existing trade papers covered the ground pretty thoroughly and that we had the Canadian Motion Picture Digest for the local news.

The question of a standardized contract was brought forward by R. H. McAdam, of Halifax, and was thoroughly discussed. It It is felt that the contracts at present are far too onesided and that there are many clauses which might make them fairer to the exhibitor. A contract drafted by Mr. McAdam was left with the executive, who will discuss it with an exchange committee.

A resolution was passed that the board of censorship in the Maritime Provinces establish a physical censorship of films and refuse to allow any to be shown which they considered not to be in a fit condition. It was also recommended that the license of any operator habitually careless and destructive be canceled.

Merrick Nutting, in a bright speech full of common sense, spoke on the evils of under and over advertising and the necessity of taking trade papers to learn about the right pictures to buy; also the need to study one's clientele.

A resolution recommending the appointment of a legislation committee was moved by W. C. McKay, St. John. This committee will have from five to seven members, who will have power to study all legislation regarding matters of importance to the league that may come up in municipal, federal or provincial bodies.

The New Brunswick Telephone Company placed its wires at the disposal of the Maritime Province delegates, and the St. John Street Railway placed all cars at the disposal of the visitors.

N. V. Gastonguay, on taking the chair, made a happy address, paying warm tribute to the retiring officers, the energetic W. H. Golding and S. C. Hurley, the indefatigable secretary, and hoping that Halifax would show as good, if not a better, record next year.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Maritime Provinces.

S. C. Hurley,
Retiring Secretary.

Secretary S. C. Hurley, in his report, said that forty of the eighty theaters in the Maritime Provinces are members of the league (many of these theaters are owned by one man). More than fifty visitors had registered at the league's office in the city. 360 letters had been sent out by the secretary. He expressed the thanks of the league to the trade papers, the Moving Picture World, the Canadian Motion Picture Digest and the daily press, mentioning especially the work of Miss Alice Fairweather of the St. John Standard. Thanks were due also Miss Kathleen Magee, who had assisted greatly with the secretarial work.

Treasurer G. J. B. Metzler, in his report, showed that the league had a credit balance of $221.49, and was in a healthy state financially. Mr. Metzler received a vate of thanks for his excellent report.

The evening's session program contained splendid addresses from Miss Rose Tapley, F. H. Richardson, Sam Spedon, C. C. Pettijohn and W. Stephen Bush, who spoke on "Organization," with the text that "it is the exhibitor who is the most important factor in the industry," and he must be first considered.

Miss Tapley spoke from the standpoint of the producer, and urged the necessity of supporting those companies who make the clean, high type of pictures. She spoke of truthful advertising, and, in closing, paid a graceful tribute to the Maritime Provisional Exhibitors' League, saying that in all her travels she had never known a stronger organization or met fairer, more reasonable men than those engaged in the industry here. She urged the exhibitor to state his grievances to the producer, and if it were a just grievance the matter would be righted, for the producer and the exhibitor, too, must stand shoulder to shoulder. Miss Tapley received an ovation, and her address was greatly appreciated.

F. H. Richardson, the projection expert of the Moving Picture World, spoke upon that subject in a very interesting way. He made a most humorous speech, which was greatly enjoyed.

Another excellent and clever address was given by Sam Spedon of the Moving Picture World, who spoke on some old times in the studios and the value of that strength which comes from unity.

Miss Belle Bruce, whose attractive personality made quite an impression, made a pretty little speech, thanking the league for the warmth of her reception.

Sunday W. H. Donaldson, of the Billboard, made a short speech upon the advisability of joining an American league.

C. C. Pettijohn made a fine address on the future of the motion picture and the need of the elimination of the filth stuff. He gave good advice in a very capable speech, and was listened to with deep attention.

Sunday's excursion up the St. John River was a delightful success. Many pictures were taken by professionals and amateurs, and all voted it a very fine affair. Lunch was served on board and a stop of an hour, made at Brown's Flats, one of the beauty spots of the famous St. John River. A meeting was held on board at which speeches were made by F. H. Richardson, Alfred McGinley, Editor of the St. John Standard (and an ex-censor); J. M. Franklin, R. D. McAdam, C. F. Givan of Sussex, A. E. Wall of the Nova Scotia Board of Censors, and Miss Alice Fairweather, motion picture editor of the St. John Standard, and others.

Sunday evening's meeting, to which admittance was by invitation, was well attended by an interested audience to listen to speeches by Miss Tapley, Miss Belle Bruce, W. Stephen Bush, C. C. Pettijohn, Sam Spedon and F. H. Richardson. Walter H. Golding, manager of the Imperial Theater, presided, and the Imperial Orchestra furnished music. Entertainment was provided for the New York guests after the evening's program.

Monday Miss Tapley and Miss Bruce were the guests of honor at a luncheon given by Miss Alice Fairweather of the St. John Standard, to which were invited the president and officers of the Women's Canadian Club, officers of the Local Council of Women and of the St. John Art Club. This was a very delightful affair, given at the Sign of the Lantern Tea Room.

The afternoon was given up to automobile trips about the suburbs of St. John. A very animated picture was taken by Mr. Warcanteen of the Universal.

Miss Tapley and Miss Bruce spoke at the Imperial Theater on Monday evening to very large audiences. They spoke at the Lyric and Unique Theaters Tuesday evening. Miss Tapley made an address before the members of the Women's Canadian Club on Tuesday afternoon after the show. She gave her talk illustrated, and after the address an informal reception was held on the stage.

CANADIAN EXHIBITORS JOIN AMERICAN ASSOCIATION.

Although the members of the Maritime Provinces Exhibitors' League decided to put over till next year action on the question of affiliating with an American organization the latest reports indicate that there has been a change of sentiment on the part of the Canadians. Remaining after the close of the convention, General Manager Charles C. Pettijohn, of the American Exhibitors' Association, made a personal canvass of the exhibitors of St. John, N. B., with the result on Tuesday evening he was able to announce that the leading exhibitors of that city, W. H. Golding, F. G. Spencer and Fred Winter of Moncton, had joined the American Exhibitors' Association. It was further announced that S. C. Hurley had been appointed president for the Maritime Provinces and that twenty-five other exhibitors had signed.

Second Annual Convention at St. John, N. B., September 8 and 9,

It is explained by Mr. Pettijohn that the appointment of Mr. Hurley is in the nature of a provisional president, subject to the action of the general convention of the Association at Detroit, Mich., next year.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS MAY REORGANIZE.

Unless the proposed new wage scale of the operators, just offered, results in the exhibitors of Cleveland, Ohio, getting together for a fight, there will probably be a reorganization of the local league and an affiliation with the American Exhibitors' Association.

Ever since the split at the Chicago convention, not more than a handful of exhibitors have gathered for the weekly meetings and, in fact, most of the times the meetings were not held.

President Slimm and other influential Cleveland league exhibitors have joined the American Exhibitors' Association and it would not be surprising to hear of a reorganization meeting called shortly.

War Tax Bill Passes Senate

Picture Theaters Charging Less Than Twenty-five Cents Exempted—Joker in the Sliding Scale.

By C. L. Linz.

THOSE of the moving picture theaters having a sliding scale of prices, raising admissions above their regular prices when showing the large features, will, after November 1, be subjected to a tax equivalent to fifty per cent. of the amount in excess of their regular admissions, under the provisions of the general revenue bill passed by the Senate on September 10, while all other moving picture theaters making a charge for admission of twenty-five cents or less will be exempted from the so-called "War Tax on Admissions" as contained in the bill.

This measure was passed by the House of Representatives on May 23. That body provided for a tax equivalent to one cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person making such payment, and a tax of five cents for each admission of each person, except in the case of a bona fide employee and children under twelve years of age and municipal officers on official business.

The five-cent tax contained in the second section of the above paragraph was rejected by the Senate Finance Committee, and later by the Senate itself, and an amendment was adopted which, in the case of moving picture shows, limited the application of the tax to those shows making a charge of more than twenty-five cents for a single admission.

The proposed tax on houses having a sliding scale of prices was aimed primarily at the legitimate theaters, but the motion picture houses must have a care to see to it that they do not run afoul of the new law. It behooves the exhibitors to carefully read the following provisions of the bill as they stand adopted by the Senate:

Sec. 700. That from and after the first day of November, nineteen hundred and seventeen, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid (a) a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person making such payment: PROVIDED, That the tax on admission of children where an admission charge for such children is made shall in every case be 1 cent; and (b) a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof paid for admission to any public performance for profit at any cabaret or other similar entertainment to which the charge for admission is wholly or in part included in the price paid for refreshment, service, or merchandise; the amount paid for such admission to be computed under rules prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, such tax to be paid by the person paying for such refreshment, service, or merchandise; and, in addition to the above, (c) upon tickets of admission to theatres, operas, and other places of amusement, sold at news stands, hotels, and places other than the ticket offices of such theatres, operas, or other places of amusement, at not to exceed 50 cents in excess of the sum of the established price therefor at such ticket offices plus the amount of any tax imposed under clause (a) of this section, a tax equivalent to five per cent of the amount of such excess, and if sold for more than 50 cents in excess of the sum of such established price plus the amount of any tax imposed under clause (a) of this section, a tax equivalent to thirty per cent of the whole amount of such excess, such taxes to be paid by the person, corporation, partnership, or association selling such tickets; and, in addition to the above, (d) a tax equivalent to fifty per centum of the amount for which the proprietors, managers, or employees of any opera house, theatre, or other place of amusement sell or dispose of tickets or cards of admission in excess of the regular or established price or charge therefor, such tax to be paid by the person, corporation, partnership, or association selling such tickets. In the case of persons having the permanent use of boxes or seats in an opera house or any place of amusement or a lease for the use of such box or seat in such opera house or place of amusement there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to ten per centum of the amount for which a similar box or seat is sold for performance or exhibition at which the box or seat is used or reserved by or for the lessee or holder. These taxes shall not be imposed in the case of a place the maximum charge for admission to which is five cents, or in the case of moving picture shows and outdoor general amusement parks, main gates, shows and rides therein, the maximum charge for admission to which is twenty-five cents.

No tax shall be levied under this title in respect to any admission all the proceeds of which inure exclusively to the benefit of religious, educational, or charitable institutions, societies, or organizations, or admission to agricultural fairs, nor in respect to admissions to bona fide Chautauquas and Lyceum courses which are contracted for and guaranteed by local companies, associations, or individuals.

The term "admission" as used in this title includes seats and tables, reserved or otherwise, and other similar accommodations, and the charges made therefor.

Sec. 701. That every person, corporation, partnership, or association receiving any payments for such admission shall collect the amount of the tax imposed by Section 700 from the person making such payments, and shall make returns and payments of the amounts so collected, at the same time and in the same manner as provided in Section 503 of this Act.

Every person, corporation, partnership, or association, liable to the tax imposed by subdivision (c) or (d) of Section 700, shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the tax imposed by such subdivisions to the Collector of Internal Revenue for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation prescribe.

TWO NEW UNIVERSALITES.

Verna Mersereau and Jack Mower, two young players holding forth unusual promise, were added to the acting forces at Universal City last week. Miss Mersereau, despite the similarity of names, is not a sister of Violet Mersereau, nor is she in any way related to the golden-haired star of Bluebird productions. She was associated with the Lubin Company for a while and later with the David Horsley Company. The new Miss Mersereau is an attractive brunette and her initial work with Director George Marshall, to whose company Miss Mersereau has been assigned by Production Manager Henry McRae to enact a heavy role, has created an excellent impression.

Jack Mower, who will appear opposite Donna Drew in the company directed by Jack Wells, will be favorably remembered as the hero of "Jackie of the Navy," playing opposite Marguerite Fischer. He also had the lead with Lillian Walker in "The Lust of the Ages." Mower is a product of the natural school of acting, and has a distinct and pleasing personality.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

The Copyright Proprietor.

EXTRACT from the copyright law relating to public rendition of musical works: Section 25.

That if any person shall infringe the copyright in any work protected under the copyright laws of the United States such person shall be liable:

(a.) To an injunction restraining such infringement;
(b.) To pay the copyright proprietors such damages as the copyright proprietor may have suffered, due to the infringement, as well as all the profits which the infringer shall have made from such infringement, etc., etc.

This law is intended to protect the producers of original musical compositions. The primal producer is, of course, the composer. He is the sole proprietor until he disposes of his property, and then the buyer becomes sole proprietor. The copyright law is designed to protect him (the proprietor) in "the monopoly that the law intends him to have." As to the publisher's rights, there is still some controversy, though I am informed that the recent court decision is plain on this point. Here are two different points of view:

G. Schirmer (Inc.) is sending the following notice to music dealers:

Gentlemen:—We write to advise that the copyright numbers of Friml and Herbert published by our firm are allowed to be played in public without the payment of a fee. We are not a member of the Society demanding fees for the performance of copyright works by small orchestras in restaurants and places of amusement.
G. SCHIRMER (Inc.) Wholesale Department.

Here is an extract from an open letter to G. Schirmer (Inc.) signed by Victor Herbert, Harry B. Smith and others:

G. Schirmer (Inc.)—Gentlemen:—The announcement in your circular letter and advertisements that your copyright musical publications may be publicly performed in hotels, cabarets, restaurants and other resorts is absolutely misleading insofar as it relates to any of our respective compositions published by you, as you do not own or control the performing rights of any of our works nor the right to authorize the playing or singing thereof by anyone. As a music publisher, your rights in our works are strictly limited to their publication in sheet music form and to their reproduction in music records and rolls. You have no right to grant to theatrical managers, hotel, cabaret or other amusement proprietors public performance rights in our works. We propose to prosecute proprietors of restaurants and other places of entertainment using any of our works published by you, unless such persons secure from the American Society of C. A. & P. a license to publicly perform the same.

In response to letters sent to various publishers, Mr. Glen MacDonough, Secretary for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, wrote me a courteous letter, saying, among other things:

The house of Schirmer publishes works by Victor Herbert, but Schirmer does not own the performing rights. Victor Herbert, being a member of the Society, benefits from his performing rights, while his publisher has no interest. The same applies to other publishers in America who issue foreign works. The foreign composer, being a member of the Society by treaty, the American publisher (non-member of the Society) having no interest, nor a right to give permission to perform.

All this leads up to a question which may or may not come to an issue. For example, many American publishers issue standard music from the pens of the old masters. These are usually called re-prints, and a large part of them were printed in this country before a treaty was made with European countries regarding copyright protection. Publishers on this side of the water could publish any musical composition which had made a success in Europe without paying royalties unless the composition was also copyrighted in this country—which was seldom the case at that time. The American publishers simply "appropriated" the foreign composers' music, and copyrighted it under their own names. Look over the old catalogs of almost any American publisher. You will find compositions by Grieg, Offenbach, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Gounod, Wagner, Balfe, Verdi—a host of names representing the world's best music—all of them copyrighted by American publishers. You can buy the Suppe overtures copyrighted by Carl Fischer, copyrighted by Oliver Ditson, copyrighted by half a dozen American publishers; all holding (or claiming) copyright proprietorship over the same identical pieces. In what does their copyright proprietorship consist? On what do they base their claim for protection? Possibly on the "arrangement" of numbers—the orchestration. The composers of most of the old music pased away long before the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers was thought of. But their works are included in the catalogs of some of the publishers who are members of the Society. I don't believe it is their intention to try to collect a fee for the public performance of such works, but if they should do so, it will be interesting.

Carl Fischer publishes about everything of merit from the old composers (as well as the modern) and Carl Fischer is not a member of the Society. If you want to play safe you can select hundreds of numbers from the Fischer catalog, but be careful that the composer is an old one. Be sure he has been "de-composing" long enough.

The Federation of Musicians.

Local No. 10 (Chicago) of the American Federation of Musicians some time ago discussed the advisability of taking some action on the music tax question. Several plans were considered—some of which found their way into print—but no permanent action was taken. A letter from Joseph N. Weber (President of the national body) was sent to the various locals, a copy of which is here appended:

Ordered that all members be and they are hereby prohibited from playing all copyrighted musical compositions, whether from printed or written copies, or from memory, in any case where charges may be made by the composer or the American Association of Composers, Authors and Publishers, unless the members are directed by their employer to play such compositions.

This leaves it up to the musicians to supply themselves with music which does not come under the restrictions imposed by the society until such time as the employer decides to pay the tax, or otherwise. The Federation of Musicians is not contemplating any further action in the matter at present.

The Carl Fischer Music Publishing Company.

A letter from the above house contains this:

We wish to advise you that we are not members of either the American Society of Composers and Authors or of the French Society, and that there are no limitations on the performing rights of any of the compositions published and copyrighted by us. We have in our catalog, however, four works the copyright of which is not in our name, to wit:—
Dubussy, "Arbesquest" (I and II).
Puccini, "La Boheme" (Fantasie).
Leoncavallo.
Pagliacci (Selections).
and as we are somewhat in doubt as to our performing rights in these numbers, we would not advise you publicly perform them unless you have been licensed by the copyright proprietors or the Society of C. A. and P. to do so.

Mr. Fischer also calls attention to the Witmark catalog taken over by his house some time ago. He says:

Not only are M. Witmark & Sons the owners of the copyrights of the orchestra and band compositions which we issue in their behalf, but they are also members of the American Society of C. A. and P. It is therefore necessary for a leader who contemplates using any of the Witmark prints to write direct to Witmark as to their stand with regard to that particular composition.

Suggested Music.

Here are a few old standards issued by Carl Fischer:
Grand Opera Album (selections from Standard Operas; arranged by Charles J. Roberts.
Album of Overtures (standard).
Album of Strauss Waltzes.
Album of Waldteufel Waltzes.

The Sam Fox Publishing Company, Cleveland, Ohio, also issues some very clever little concert numbers which are worth your while. Mr. Fox is not a member of the society, and I am told he asserts that he has no intention of joining. I am informed that none of his composers are members. (Sam Fox Library Orchestra Folios.)

Correspondents wishing answers to their letters will kindly send postage stamps. Two cents may not mean much to you, but in the aggregate they amount to a great deal to me.

Music Copyright Question

General Manager of American Exhibitors' Association Shows Futility of Opposing Existing Law on Subject.

By C. C. Pettijohn.

THE "running and not fighting" editorial in the Exhibitors' Trade Review last week is thoroughly in keeping with its policy to misrepresent and mislead exhibitors. The American Exhibitors' Association has no official organ, but we do appreciate the support of the numerous papers who believe we are right. This Association did not intend to say or do anything that might in the least discourage any man or set of men engaged in any fight for the exhibitor. We are compelled, however, after the publication of this intentionally misleading article to make this statement:

The organization of music composers and publishers, as the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, comprising most of the well-known composers and publishers of America, England, Italy and Austria, was established for the purpose of issuing licenses to public resorts to play the copyrighted music of its membership. This society is operating under Section 1, Sub. Div. e of the Copyright Act, which secures to a musical author the exclusive right to perform the copyrighted musical composition publicly for profit.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Victor Herbert, the composer, against the Shanley Company, the cabaret restaurant on Broadway and 43d street, decided that the playing of copyrighted music in the dining room of a restaurant for the entertainment of guests during meal time by an orchestra was an infringement of the composer's copyright, the court holding that whether or not an admission fee is charged for entering the place of entertainment makes no difference.

The court said in January, 1917:

"If the rights under the copyright are infringed only by a performance where money is taken at the door they are imperfectly protected. Performances not different in kind from those of the defendants could be given that might compete with and even destroy the success of the monopoly that the law intends the plaintiffs to have. It is enough to say that there is no need to construe the statute so narrowly. The defendant's performances are not elymosynary. They are part of a total for which the public pays, and the fact that the price of the whole is attributed to a particular item which those present are expected to order is not important. It is true that the music is not the sole object, but neither is the food, which probably could be got cheaper elsewhere. The object is a repast in surroundings that to people having limited powers of conversation or disliking the rival noise give a luxurious pleasure not to be had from eating a silent meal. If the music did not play it would be given up. If it pays, it pays out of the public's pocket. Whether it pays or not, the purpose of employing it is profit, and that is enough."

The question as to whether this decision applies to motion-picture theaters was submitted by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., to A. L. Jacobs, a well-known theatrical lawyer, for his opinion. After a very careful consideration, Mr. Jacobs reached the conclusion that the decision in the Shanley case applies with equal force to motion-picture theaters.

The Brooklyn League of Motion Picture Exhibitors, we are reliably informed, submitted the same question to Edmund Wise, another well-known copyright specialist, practicing in New York City, and he expressed it as his opinion that it is a violation of the copyright laws to play in any motion-picture theater copyrighted music without the consent of the copyright owners.

The question was then tested in the case of Raymond Hubbell against Royal Pastime Amusement Company before Judge Julius M. Mayer of the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, involving the playing of "Poor Butterfly" in the Regent Theater, a motion-picture house in the Borough of Manhattan, New York City. Judge Mayer in that case sustained the complaint of the composer against the picture house.

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Herbert vs. Shanley proceeds upon the theory that the owner of a musical copyright enjoys two distinct rights: First, the right to publish and sell the composition and various arrangements thereof for different instruments; second, to publicly perform it for profit. I believe Congress intended to accord to the creator of the composition a monopoly for twenty-eight years.

The musical entertainment is an integral part of some motion-picture attractions, and in a great many cases the musical program is a distinctive feature of the house.

In the American Society we find such names as Victor Herbert, John Philip Sousa, Raymond Hubbell, Irving Berlin, Jerome D. Kern, Ray Goetz, Ernest Ball, Gus Edwards, Rudolf Frimi, Sylvio Hein, Edgar Leslie, Theodore Morse, Jack Norworth, A. Baldwin Sloane, Puccini, Mascagni, Leoncavallo, and hundreds of others. These men being artists are not difficult to approach or to negotiate with. If we do not blink at the facts and fairly recognize that these composers are daily conceiving and creating melodies which appeal to our public and which we need in our theaters for its entertainment, then why should we not meet these men in a spirit of fairness and concede to them that they have created something we want in our business. Considering the matter in that light, and relying upon the expression of their representatives as to their willingness to meet us half way, would it not be best to meet in conference and adjust our differences?

The American Society has been very active in enforcing the rights of its members, and has proceeded under both the civil and criminal provisions of the law.

Under Section 28 of the Copyright Act it is a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or for a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, to wilfully and for profit infringe any copyright or to aid or abet such infringement.

More than one hundred civil actions have been brought for the recovery of penalties, provided for by Section 25 of the Copyright Act, against exhibitors. The law provides that the damages recoverable for the infringement of a copyright shall not be less than $250 nor more than $5,000, upon the basis of $10 for every infringing performance in a case of a popular number, and in the case of an operatic composition, $100 for the first and $50 for every subsequent infringing performance. Costs will be allowed in all cases against the infringer, and a counsel fee may be awarded in the discretion of the court.

It has been the policy of this Government to give monopolies to authors and inventors upon the theory that by giving to them a monopoly of their works the progress of science and the useful arts will be promoted. Since phonograph records and rolls were introduced into the market commercially Congress has amended the copyright laws by compelling the manufacturers to pay a royalty to the composers. The tendency has been toward a more complete protection of authors and composers.

No honest lawyer should advise a client to engage in litigation he knows cannot be successful.

Mr. Brandt of Broklyn, the executive secretary of the M. P. E. L., is now under arrest for copyright violation, and Mr. Ochs, the president of the M. P. E. L., is collecting the $3 per exhibitor. Draw your own conclusions.

The American Exhibitors' Association is willing to meet the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers on behalf of motion-picture exhibitors. We have many differences. We will meet you in an open session. You hear us and we will hear you respectfuliy and conceding that we both have rights.

BRILANT SELLS "THE ALIBI" TO BRADY.

Arthur M. Brilant, author of "The Alibi," a powerful society drama, has sold the screen rights to his play to the World Film Corporation through William A. Brady, director-general. Alice Brady will play the leading role. At the same time Mr. Brilant is carrying on negotiations with a big firm of legitimate producers for the presentation of "The Alibi" as a three act play on Broadway shortly. Mr. Brilant is at present busy finishing a serial contracted for by a well known firm, and will shortly begin work on a ten reel feature for a state righting organization.

Producers' Employment Bureau

Separate Corporations to Be Organized for the Purpose of Engaging Players—To Support Agencies.

AT A MEETING of the Producers' Branch Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held on Saturday, September 8, the report of a special committee, which was appointed at a previous meeting to investigate the possibility of establishing a service bureau, was received and adopted.

Gabriel L. Hess, secretary of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, as chairman submitted the report on behalf of the committee, the other members of which are R. H. Cochrane of the Universal Film Mfg. Company and Joseph W. Engel of Metro Pictures Corporation.

After a very thorough survey of the situation, covering a period of three months, the committee recommended the incorporation of a small company to be known as the Service Bureau of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc., which will serve as an employment agency for the engaging of artists and players whenever the service of an agency is required, and all members of the Producers' Branch Committee have agreed to use this bureau in engaging their artists and studio employes. Application has been made for a license as an employment agency, and this department will be under the supervision of the license bureau of the City of New York as well as of the State Department of Labor.

Negotiations have been practically concluded for the services of an expert in this line to manage the bureau, and leases have been prepared for spacious quarters in a centrally located building which will be convenient for everyone desirous of enlisting the bureau's aid.

It is proposed that a uniform contract shall be adopted by the service bureau in employing artists and other help required in any branch of the industry, definite forms to be prepared for long term contracts as well as daily and weekly service.

The service bureau will be amply financed by the producer members and the net profits over and above the expense of operation are to be paid into the treasury of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

There are many benefits to be derived through the establishing of an efficiently conducted service bureau, and it is contended that this new department of the National Association will greatly strengthen the industry and make cooperation much more easy. As evidence of the desire of many actors and actresses to negotiate for employment directly through the Producers' Committee of the National Association, it was stated that many applications have been received at the general offices during the past month, which will be turned over to the manager of the Service Bureau.

N. A. M. P. I. MEETING CALLED.

Will Vote on Proposition to Increase Membership in Executive Committee.

A special meeting of the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be held at the headquarters, in the Times Building, Thursday morning (September 20), at eleven o'clock, when an amendment to the by-laws is to be voted upon, providing for an increase in the membership of the Executive Committee from nine to twelve members. The Board of Directors has recommended this action, but ratification by the entire membership is necessary before the present committee can be enlarged.

Immediately following the members' meeting the Board of Directors will convene for the September quarterly meeting, which is the first to be held under the amended by-laws. The important subjects which are on the calendar for consideration at this meeting include reports of the committees on Expositions, the All-Star Picture and the Service Bureau. The establishing of a Film Theft Bureau is to be considered, also plans for proceeding with the organization of Advisory Committees in important film centers. President Brady will review the activities of the various sub-committees of the War Corporation Committee, which are acting in conjunction with the federal departments. Matters pertaining to the legislative work this fall will receive attention by the directors, and a report regarding the possibility of an affiliation with the Pacific Coast Producers' Assocation will be presented.

President Brady will also file his nominations for membership on the Executive Committee for approval by the Directors.

Levine Representing Western Circuit

H. Z. LEVINE, widely known director of publicity and advertising, has established an agency that will negotiate purchases for several Southern and Middle Western independent distributors as well as handle the sales and exploitation campaigns for big special productions to be released in October. The headquarters will be at Suite 514, Candler Building, 220 West 42d street. Mr. Levine, who will personally direct the activities of the new agency, has had practical experience in every branch of the industry and has been associated in one capacity or another with some of the leading companies. He has occupied the position of director of publicity both here and abroad, and personally directed on the ground intensive campaigns for serial attractions in England, Scotland, France and Germany. He has conducted elaborate sales campaigns in this country and has crossed the continent several times in the interest of superfeatures. He has been purchasing agent, film editor, and in the early days of the business did everything around a film plant except turn a crank. Mr. Levine was associated with the Blaches, Universal in Europe, Fox and Triangle. Prior to his film affiliations he was on the Brooklyn Eagle.

Harold Z. Levine.

"We are in the market for a few pictures of quality," said Mr. Levine in discussing his new venture. "My clients want the best, and those who have nothing but junk to offer are persona non grata. We also want it made clear that we are not going to work boths ends against the middle. We are paid by our clients for our experience and good judgment and will not exact commissions for sales effected."

Abrams on Four Months' Tour

President of Paramount to Visit Exhibitors in All Towns Over Twenty Thousand—Prime Purpose to Establish Personal Contact.

WHAT is by far the most extended tour of the country and the widest survey of distributing and exhibiting conditions ever undertaken by a motion picture executive was inaugurated Monday, September 10, when Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, began a four-month trip to exhibitors all over the country in behalf of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures. Mr. Abrams' tour has been so arranged as to permit him to visit exhibitors in all towns of over twenty thousand population.

The prime purpose of the trip is to establish a point of personal contact between Mr. Abrams and exhibitors in all parts of the country, looking toward a better mutual understanding, a more sympathetic and logical appreciation, on the parts of the distributing and exhibiting elements of the trade for the problems of each other and a greater degree of service and a higher standard of cooperation by Paramount and Artcraft toward their clients. It is understood officially that Mr. Abrams will devote the greater part of his conferences with exhibitors to the solution of their local problems and the seeking of business fundamentals upon which can be based an advanced and more advantageous code of relationship that will in the future be applied to the industry in a national way, with the betterment of the exhibitors' collective interests and the strengthening of their investments always as the desired consummation.

B. P. Schulberg, general manager of Paramount, will accompany Mr. Abrams on his trip, and will compile a statistical chart graphically illustrating the results and information which the conferences will disclose, to be utilized as a basis for the constructive work that will follow immediately upon the termination of the trip.

"Polly" Gets Great Reception

First Goldwyn Production Released in Eighty Cities on Same Date Makes Great Impression on Record-Breaking Audiences.

GOLDWYN'S picturization of Margaret Mayo's great play, "Polly of the Circus," with Mae Marsh as the star, has gone over big. The first release of this new producing concern, now nearly a year old, got a rousing welcome in New York, Philadelphia and more than eighty other cities throughout the United States, where the picture was shown simultaneously.

While the owners of the Strand Theater, New York, looked for big business at the opening night's showing of the first Goldwyn release, they were not quite prepared for the rush. "Polly of the Circus" broke all recent Strand attendance records and kept the theater packed inside and with a lobby filled to overflowing throughout its first day at the greatest of metropolitan picture theaters.

Harold Edel, manager of the Strand, made elaborate preparations for the first showing of "Polly." For weeks the lobby of his theater had been dressed with attractive paintings, done by great artists to announce the production to the audiences. On the stage for the presentation he had ordered a distinctive drop, which show a circus lot and the big tent with the main entrance.

Out of this entrance stepped the ringmaster of "Polly of the Circus," George S. Trimble. He wore his ringmaster costume and high hat, and, removing his hat, he announced the beginning of the production in the florid language of the circus ring, ending by expressing the Strand management's appreciation of Goldwyn Pictures, which henceforth will be shown first in New York at this theater.

Signor Ariana and Carl Edouarde, the musical conductors of the Strand, had labored for weeks in preparing a musical accompaniment for the production and the orchestra was enlarged to forty-five pieces, or full symphonic strength, to make the presentation of "Polly of the Circus" memorable. As at previous invitation showings, the big scenes of the picture evoked audible enthusiasm from the audience. The exciting horse race scene brought the spectators out of their chairs.

Throwing every resource at his command behind Goldwyn Pictures Stanley V. Mastbaum, the Philadelphia exhibitor and theater magnate, made the opening presentation of "Polly of the Circus" at his Stanley Theater a memorable piece of showmanship from every angle. Mr. Mastbaum's organization had conducted a brilliant newspaper advertising campaign in all of the Quaker City dailies within the prior week in sole behalf of "Polly of the Circus,," and Goldwyn Pictures have been launched with greater force and received greater acclaim than almost any pictures ever before exhibited in the Philadelphia territory.

The triumph of Mae Marsh and the great film was marked in every section of the country. All existing house records, in money and attendance, were broken at the Standard Theater, Cleveland, and Manager Joseph Grossman was so ethusiastic over his opening that he telephoned Goldwyn at midnight on his opening night to congratulate Samuel Goldfish and his associates on the successful launching of the big producing company.

At the St. Denis Theater, Montreal, just taken over by N. L. Nathanson and his associates, all previous money records for a day were eclipsed, and the newspapers of the Dominion's big city are lavish in their praise of the Goldwyn standard of production.

In Columbus, Ohio, the Messrs. Dusenbury, owners of the Grand Theater, who are to play "Polly of the Circus" at a later date because of previously booked pictures, could not wait for a public verdict, but held a special showing of the production for newspaper publishers, the Ohio Board of Censors and members of the Governor's staff. The newspapers, without waiting for the public showing of the production, gave it laudatory notices.

Both in newspaper reviews and exhibitor telegrams a note is emphasized that Goldwyn productions are even better than its press agent promises in that everything that has been promised in quality of production has been exceeded in the production itself.

LEGISLATION ON ADVANCE DEPOSITS.

We heard in New York, from one who knows, that already a bill has been framed to be introduced in the next legislature obliging distributors who ask an advance deposit to place the deposit in a trust company and pay the exhibitors six per cent. on their deposits.

Lasky Returns to Coast

After Six Weeks in New York Vice-President of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Goes to Western Studios.

FOR the purpose of holding many vital conferences on producing matters Mr. De Mille and the heads of the Famous Players-Lasky studios, as well as with Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, who are now producing for Paramount, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left this week for California. It is his plan to spend six weeks at each side of the continent attending to the activities of the many producing organizations. Prior to his departure for the Coast, Mr. Lasky stated that he was more than satisfied with the progress of work at the Eastern studios, where stars of Paramount and Artcraft are all busily engaged on forthcoming productions. Marguerite Clark is doing a "Bab" story—third of the Mary Roberts Rinehart "Sub-deb" tales, published in the Saturday Evening Post; Pauline Frederick is at work on "Mrs. Dane's Defense." Ann Pennington is finishing "The Antics of Ann"; Lina Cavalieri has started work on "The Eternal Temptress," and Billie Burke has finished "Arms and the Girl." These are all to be Paramount releases. For Artcraft, Elsie Ferguson is to do Agnes and Egerton Castle's "Rose of the World."

In the west Coast studios Geraldine Farrar is working on "The Devil's Stone" for Artcraft. William S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks are busy on new productions; George Beban is at work on a new one, and "Tom Sawyer" is being filmed, with Jack Pickford in the title part. These two latter are Paramount attractions of the near future. Vivian Martin will do "Mary Gusta" for Paramount, and Sessue Hayakawa is filming "The Secret Game."

Mary Pickford is working on "The Little Princess" for Artcraft. This is from the story by Francis Hodgson Burnett. Julian Eltinge is at work on "The Clever Mrs. Carfax" for Paramount, and Wallace Reid will do "Nan of Music Mountain" for the same company.

Mr. Lasky declares that things are running with the greatest smoothness in all departments of production.

ANDERSON BACK FROM THE COAST.

Carl Anderson returned from the Hollywood studios of the Paralta organization last Sunday (the 9th inst)., accompanying S. A. Lynch, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, on his journay from the West Coast.

Mr. Anderson expressed himself as very much pleased over the organization of the Paralta studios, as it has been developed since May last. In that brief time one of the ablest technical staffs in the country has been brought together, accommodations for five producing units have been provided and four big star feature productions have been completed.

In addition to this, two big stages have been built, 50 by 200 feet, one open-air and the other enclosed; a great property building has been constructed, and other departments for the making of special properties have been added to the original Clune studio plant, which Paralta leased.

AUBREY M. KENNEDY, MANAGER OF PRODUCTION

Aubrey M. Kennedy, since the middle of last winter manager of Goldwyn's studios in West Fort Lee, N. J., has been appointed to the newly created position of manager of productions, which gives him opportunity to accelerate Goldwyn's progress in the efficient production of the company's annual output of twenty-six big pictures.

As a result of Mr. Kennedy's elevation the position of business manager has been created at the studios and into this office steps H. J. Flint, a newcomer in the Goldwyn ranks, who takes over the executive and plant detail duties formerly performed by Mr. Kennedy.

Hard work and faithful attention to the task of helping Goldwyn make good its advance promises of ten or more finished productions before the date of its initial release of "Polly of the Circus" caused the Goldwyn executives to reward Mr. Kennedy with a larger field for his efforts.

Brady Comes Back at Beck

Faith Is Still Unshaken in His First Proposition—Says It Is a Cinch.

WITHOUT the faintest intention of precipitating a controversy," said William A. Brady, director general of World-Pictures Brady-Made, "I remain unshaken in my belief that the most successful and enduring motion pictures are those which reach the screen by way of the speaking theater. I observe that a previous declaration along these lines has brought out an expression of opinion very much to the contrary, supported by the names of a number of motion pictures which owe nothing to the oral stage.

"To begin with, some of the plays quoted in the list to which I refer were never conspicuously successful, and not one of them ever had the vogue of, let us say, 'The Birth of a Nation,' which came to the screen from the theater, and to the theater from a printed novel.

"Then let us glance for a moment at the record of World Pictures derived from the stage and very successful without exception. These include 'After Dark,' 'Alias Jimmy Valentine,' 'As in a Looking Glass,' 'As Ye Sow,' 'The Ballet Girl,' 'The Boss,' 'The Builder of Bridges,' 'A Butterfly on the Wheel,' 'The City,' 'Col. Carter of Cartersville,' 'The Cotton King,' 'The Cub,' 'The Dollar Mark,' 'The Face in the Moonlight,' 'The Family Cupboard,' 'A Gentleman from Mississippi,' 'The Man of the Hour,' 'The Man Who Found Himself,' 'Mother,' 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch,' 'Old Dutch,' 'Over Night,' 'The Pit,' 'The Rack,' 'The Social Highwayman,' 'Blue Grass,' 'The Master of the House,' 'La Vie De Boheme,' 'Husband and Wife,' 'Forget-Me-Not,' 'Bought and Paid For' and a few others.

"Without singling out any one or more of these plays, but bunching the whole lot, I can securely defy anyone to name a similar number of dramas writen exclusively for the screen and produced by any one management, registering anything like the drawing power of this collection.

"It seems to me to be a perfectly plain, obvious proposition that if you go before the public with a picture version of a play that has already been seen and liked by a great number of people, you have got your patronage started before the doors are opened. If this is not the fact, then there is absolutely nothing in publicity or advertising, no use in building up the confidence of the people in the article you are about to offer.

"I will go further and say that when your photoplay is made from a successful stage drama, which in due course was dramatized from an immensely circulated novel, the value is increased immeasurably. This is the situation with our forthcoming picture, 'The Burglar,' starring Carlyle Blackwell and featuring Madge Evans and Evelyn Greeley.

"As previously stated, our photodrama was produced from the stage play of the same name by Augustus Thomas, which in its time was seen and applauded by pretty much all the theater patrons of the entire country. Mr. Thomas wrote his drama closely following Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's story, 'Editha's Burglar,' which was read all over the world, having been translated into no less than six languages.

"Will anyone seriously contend that any number of origial scenarios, prepared for the screen direct, have a chance to make as great and enduring a success as is practically sure to be registered by 'The Burglar'? It is absolutely open-and-shut that on the one side of this proposition we find an outside chance, and on the other a cinch."

GREENE RETURNS FROM ARGENTINA.

Edward Greene, who left New York in November, 1916, to supervise the film department of the North American Film Service in Buenos Aires, arrived on September 4th to act as assistant buyer to L. R. Thomas.

Mr. Greene says that prevailing conditions in Argentina today are similar to those of New York—overcrowded and overdone. Projection is good in most of the theaters.

North American Films Service are the representatives in Argentina, Chile and Uruguay for Metro, World, Universal and many other well-known brands.

INCE USES OLD BIOGRAPH STUDIO.

The old Biograph studio in Los Angeles, a cinema pioneer of Southern California, after a long period of disuse, has been taken over temporarily by Thomas H. Ince, and is now being used for the filming of photo-dramas which he will release through Artcraft and Paramount.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of September 16 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Countess Charming" at The Rialto.

JULIAN ELTINGE in "The Countess Charming," written by Gelett Burgess and Carolyn Wells, headed the program at The Rialto the week of Sept. 16. For his first appearance as a Paramount star Mr. Eltinge was provided with a dual role, alternating a young business man and a Russian countess. The effect of these successive impersonations is completely mystifying to the other people in the story. Florence Vidor, Edythe Chapman, Tully Marshall, Mabel Van Buren and other clever players assist the star. Donald Crisp directed the picture.

The Animated Magazine, a scenic of the Canadian Rockies and a comedy were also on the bill. The soloists were Count Lorrie Grimaldi and Gloria Gale.

"Double-Crossed" at The Strand.

The principal photo-dramatic feature at The Strand was "Double-Crossed," a Paramount picture, starring Pauline Frederick. A devoted young wife learns of a youthful slip on the part of her husband. What happened when she found out his crime and how a new and deeper understanding was brought about between them is told in the picture. In the supporting cast are Crawford Kent, Riley Hatch, Clarence Handyside, Harris Gordon and Joseph Smiley. The picture was produced under the direction of Robert G. Vignola. Victor Moore was seen in his latest comedy, "In Bed—In Bad." A chapter of Raymond L. Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature," "Mounting Butterflies," and the Strand Topical Review were also on the program. Henry De Cayx and Norma de Mendoza were the soloists.

"The Man Without a Country" at the Broadway.

The second week of the engagement of the Jewel feature, "The Man Without a Country," at the Broadway, shows that the public interest in the picturization of the Edward Everett Hale patriotic classic is on the increase.

"RUNAWAY ROMANY" NOVELIZED FOR NEWSPAPERS.

The novelization of "Runaway Romany," Marion Davies' motion picture play, has been finished by her and forty metropolitan newspapers have agreed to print it simultaneously on September 16.

Among these are the Minneapolis Tribune, Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, Syracuse Post-Standard, Memphis Commercial Appeal, Louisville Courier Journal, St. Louis Republic, Columbus Dispatch, Buffalo Times, Toledo Blade, Worcester Telegram, Philadelphia Record, Boston Herald, Newark Star-Eagle, Milwaukee Sentinel, Des Moines Register and Leader, Dayton News, Detroit Journal and Providence Tribune.

Miss Davies has begun work on her second moving picture and has signed a contract with the Ardsley Art Film Corporation for two additional pictures.

KERRIGAN OUT OF HOSPITAL.

J. Warren Kerrigan has left the Cottage hospital at Santa Barbara, Cal., where he was taken when his right leg was broken below the knee by the fall of his horse four weeks ago. He remained at the hospital three weeks. The physicians then decided that he had progressed so favorably that it would be safe for him to return to Los Angeles.

Walking by the aid of crutches, and resting his leg on supports on the train, he made the journey without mishap. He was met at Los Angeles station by Robert T. Kane, vice-president of the Paralta Plays, Inc., and Robert Brunton, manager of the Paralta studios at Hollywood, and a number of his company. Mr. Kerrigan will remain at the home of his mother in Hollywood until he is sufficiently recovered to resume his work before the camera. His physicians state he will be able to walk without a crutch in two or three weeks.

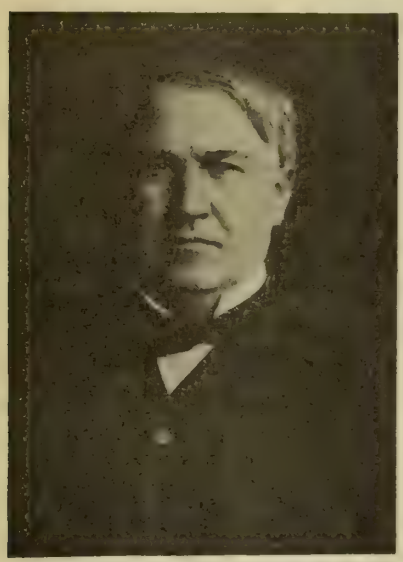
"THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" AT THE BROADWAY.

Herbert Brenon's latest production, "The Fall of the Romanoff's is to be shown at the Broadway Theater, New York City, where it will have a two weeks' running, beginning Sunday afternoon, September 23. The engagement will be a limited one owing to the fact that it is impossible at this time of the season to get a theater and that the bookings for the Broadway Theater have been made in advance.

Perfection Pictures Announces Plans

High-Class Stories by Known Authors Will Be Produced—New Process of Manufacture Utilized—Ample Advertising Aids Proposed

AN ANNOUNCEMENT of extraordinary interest in the film world comes in a statement which heralds the release of a new brand of feature pictures, to be presented one each week, beginning in September, under the brand name of Perfection Pictures, and which are to be backed up by one of the largest national advertising campaigns ever attempted in behalf of any motion picture project.



Thomas A. Edison.

Perfection Pictures will represent the master efforts of three of America's pioneer producers, George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company; Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and George Kleine. They will be examples of a new high standard in cinema art—light dramas and comedy dramas of the cheerful vein, so much in demand at the present time. They will be released through the George Kleine System of exchanges, one each week for the first year, either on the open booking plan or on a contract for the full fifty-two pictures.

Perfection Pictures will be particularly notable for their stories and the quality of their photography. The stories will be furnished by many of America's greatest authors, while all Perfection Pictures will be made by the Perfection process—a new and wonderful invention for the development of films, which promises an evolution in the film industry. By reason of this process, which has taken four years to perfect, Perfection Pictures will excel any other pictures in the matter of clearness, brilliancy and ease of viewing.

The exact details of the Perfection process are, of course, a trade secret. An indication of the care which has been taken in developing it, however, is the fact that a huge machine weighing fifteen tons and costing $100,000 has been perfected by the world's foremost laboratory experts and is being used exclusively in the manufacture of Perfection Pictures. This wonderful film processing device ranks among the mechanical marvels of the world, paralleling the great printing presses of the present day in its importance. The results obtained by its use will be instantly perceptible on the screen. An invention of still greater magnitude, that will revolutionize motion photography, is also to be announced soon in connection with Perfection Pictures.

Among the attractions already made or in course of production are stories by such noted authors as Clarence Budington Kelland, Peter B. Kyne and Kennett Harris, all of Saturday Evening Post fame; George Ade, and many others. It is said that many months have been spent in searching the literary market for stories of the type desired for Perfection Pictures, and that eight productions—each in five or six reels—are finished and approximately ten more are now in work.

George K. Spoor.

Perfection Pictures are being made in the studios of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and George Kleine. Enough super de luxe attractions are completed or in process of production to insure a regular release of Perfection Pictures at the rate of one a week for a period of a year, beginning in September. That the utmost in the way of stories, stage settings, costumes and properties may be expected in Perfection Pictures is assured by the fact that appropriations of several million dollars have been made for productions alone during the first year.

This is exclusive of a fund of $300,000, which has been set aside as an advertising appropriation for the first year. Full pages are to be used each month in the Saturday Evening Post, the first full-page announcement appearing in the issue of Saturday, September 22. In addition, large space will be used in other national magazines and in newspapers throughout the country.

George Kleine.

Under the brand of Perfection Pictures exhibitors will find a new type of photoplay entertainment — light, pleasing comedy-dramas and dramas from the pens of the world's greatest authors and playwrights — film stories created in the minds of such literary celebrities as Clarence Budington Kelland, Peter B. Kyne and Kennett Harris, who are all regular Saturday Evening Post contributors; George Ade, Henry Irving Dodge, Robert Rudd Whiting, George Barr McCutcheon, Samuel Merwin, James W. Adams, Lucien Hubbard, and many others. The best works of contemporary fiction—stories of genuine literary merit—will be found in Perfection Pictures.

In announcing Perfection Pictures, George Kleine, one of filmdom's best known manufacturers, and the head of the George Kleine System, said: "Many months have been spent in planning Perfection Pictures. It is our intention to present the highest standard in motion pictures in Perfection Pictures—stories of exceptional literary merit—the works of the foremost literary celebrities of the day. Already more than eight big feature subjects are completed and ready for release. Ten more are in course of production. A new Perfection Picture—five or six reels in length—will be issued each week, beginning in September, through the George Kleine System of exchanges.

"Our belief in the value of Perfection Pictures is indicated by the fact that we are backing it up with the greatest campaign of national advertising ever launched in behalf of a motion-picture project. Starting September 22 full-page advertisements in such leading magazines as the Saturday Evening Post will be used every month. Theater patrons will be told of Perfection Pictures through big advertisements which will appear in newspapers throughout the country. Perfection Pictures will be sold for the exhibitor to his patrons. This campaign of national advertising will of course mean added value for the box office. It will mean that when an exhibitor announces Perfection Pictures are being presented at his theater he immediately 'cashes in' on the confidence established in Perfection

Pictures through this tremendous national advertising campaign.

"Each theater playing Perfection Pictures will be further assisted through a line of advertising helps of superior value. Posters in all sizes will be done in five and six colors by master poster artists. Lobby photos of a new and attractive style will be available. Press sheets, cuts, slides, advertising helps of every imaginable sort, will still further augment the exhibitor's appeal to his patrons.

"I want to emphasize the fact that contracts for Perfection Pictures will be issued with the greatest care. Only exhibitors of the highest standing—those who can qualify for the ability to present Perfection Pictures properly—will be granted Perfection Picture contracts. To such exhibitors ample protection will be given for exclusive territory free from competition. Perfection Pictures will be booked on open booking—any picture, any time—or on a contract for fifty-two Perfection Pictures a year. Perfection Pictures are the kind of attractions any theater can play for runs of from three days to a solid week. The high type of stories presented assure capacity business not for one night only, but for many nights. Perfection Pictures are their own best advertisements. They are the kind that theater patrons enjoy themselves to the utmost and then recommend to their friends.

"Territory will be allotted quickly. Exhibitors seeking protection on the showing of Perfection Pictures in their vicinity will find it advisable to visit the nearest exchange of the George Kleine System without delay and make their reservations. The demand is certain to be tremendous, and exclusive franchises for the showing of Perfection Pictures will be issued as rapidly as exhibitors can qualify and at prices which are certain to allow each franchise holder to make big profits for himself."

President George K. Spoor, of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, refers to the new type of story that will be found in Perfection Pictures. "In these war times," he said, "the public is seeking to counteract the tragedy and sorrow of the great world by viewing the light and cheerful type of story on the screen and in its reading matter. Essanay has been striving along this line for Perfection Pictures. Light comedy-drama, pictures which cheer rather than depress; stories that present normal life, with all the little touches of humor that creep into our daily lives, will be found in the Perfection Pictures made at the Essanay studios.

"We have carefully combed the literary market of the entire world for stories of the kind referred to. That we have been successful in our quest is indicated by the fact that we have contracted for, and in many cases have already begun production on, the works of such acknowledged humorists and cheerful fiction writers as George Ade, Henry Irving Dodge, Clarence Budington Kelland, Robert Rudd Whiting, George Barr McCutcheon, Samuel Merwin, and many others."

Speaking as the representative of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., L. C. MacChesney said of the Perfection Pictures to be contributed by the Edison laboratories: "Every exhibitor knows the vast resources of the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., studios. Edison has always been a big factor in the motion-picture industry. The product of the Edison studios has always ranked high from the standpoint of entertainment, technical perfection and story value.

"Authors whose names are found on the contents pages of America's foremost magazines are providing the manuscripts for the Perfection Pictures being made by Thomas A. Edison, Inc. 'The Awakening of Ruth,' our first Perfection Picture, was written by Lucien Hubbard. Peter B. Kyne, a regular contributor to the Saturday Evening Post and periodicals of that grade, provided the manuscript for another Edison-made Perfection Picture. 'The Apple-Tree Girl,' another Perfection Picture from the Editor studios appears in the pages of the Ladies' Home Journal. All of these stories have been read by hundreds of thousands. Now in Perfection Pictures, the exhibitor is afforded an opportunity of attracting all these readers to his theater to see the stories enacted on the screen."

As stated above, many productions are already completed, and a dozen or more are in course of production. All the exchanges of the George Kleine System are prepared to screen prints of the earlier releases of Perfection Pictures, and reservations can be made now by exhibitors seeking exclusive franchises for the showing of the new brand of films in their respective territories.

Jewel Carmen Comes to Broadway

TO COME East, leaving California's sunny shores as flat as you found them, and to arrive in New York to find yourself appearing at a big Broadway theater, is by way of being a unique experience. The only thing necessary to complete the experience being to discover that you have made a hit in that same big Broadway playhouse. That's what Jewel Carmen found when she arrived in New York from the William Fox California studios. Miss Carmen, as you may know, is the personable young woman now appearing on the screen at the Globe, opposite William Farnum in the Fox picture, "The Conqueror." And Miss Carmen has scored a sizable personal hit, for her Eliza Allen, beloved of Sam Houston, "The Conqueror"—otherwise Mr. Farnum—is one of the most interesting and deftly done screen heroines of the season.

Jewel Carmen.

Miss Carmen has been in motion pictures about four years, but she has earned the greater part of the generous following which is hers since her initial appearance in Fox films some twelve months ago. Immediately upon joining the Fox forces Miss Carmen's blonde beauty arrested the eagle eyes of those who do the casting, and she was forthwith assigned the role of Lady Manette, also opposite Mr. Farnum, in that excellent picturization of "A Tale of Two Cities." She also played opposite Mr. Farnum in "American Methods," and again in "When a Man Sees Red," a screen adaptation of Larry Evan's Saturday Evening Post story, "The Painted Lady," which will be an early Fox release.

She was born in Danville, Kentucky, educated in Portland, Oregon, has done most of her picture work in Los Angeles, and says she likes New York immensely. There is every indication that New York is prepared to like Jewel.

HARRY HILLIARD LEAVES FOX.

Harry Hilliard, leading man of the Fox Film Corporation, has severed his connection with that company. His contract still has a year to run. Two years ago Mr. Hilliard left the legitimate stage after a successful season with Florence Reed in "The Yellow Ticket" to join the Fox Company.

His first picture was with Vivian Martin, "Merely Mary Ann," and established him as a favorite with motion-picture audiences.

Following his work with Miss Martin he played with Miss Suratt in "The New York Peacock," and later co-starred with June Caprice in "Caprice of the Mountains," "Patsy" and several other pictures.

In supporting Miss Theda Bara he attained his greatest success, playing with her in "Gold and the Woman," "Her Greatest Love," and "Heart and Soul." His Romeo to Miss Bara's Juliet in the Fox production of the Shakespearian tragedy served to gain for him many new admirers

Mr. Hilliard is at present considering several offers, both from theatrical and motion-picture producers.

EARLE FOX ENGAGED BY TRIANGLE.

Earle Fox, one of the most popular of male players in pictures, has been engaged for the leading role opposite Winifred Allen in a Triangle production, "From Two to Six," now being made under the supervision of Allan Dwan at the Yonkers studio. A novel feature of the play, which is the work of the well known magazine writer, Arthur Stringer, is that the entire production takes place in a single afternoon, as the title indicates.

Metro-Yorke Company in New Quarters

Busy Week for President Fred J. Balshofer Getting His People Settled in New York.

FUTURE Metro-Yorke wonderplays starring Harold Lockwood will be made at the Metro Super-Feature studio at 645 West 43rd stret, New York. This was decided by Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation, soon after his arrival from California a week ago. Mr. Balshofer has abandoned his California headquarters and hereafter will direct all his activities from New York.

The past week has been a very busy one indeed for Mr. Balshofer. In addition to making the foregoing noted arrangements for a studio, Mr. Balshofer has established business headquarters in the Metro offices. These are in charge of Wiley Gibson, as business manager, who came from California with Mr. Balshofer and Mr. Lockwood along with Richard V. Spencer, scenario writer; Lester Cuneo, the Yorke "heavy"; William Clifford, character actor; John Schronberg, violinist; and Antonio Guadio, cameraman. He also made an addition to his staff in the person of Harry H. Poppe whose duties will be to look after the publicity for the Yorke company's activities.

Between getting settled the matter of future homes for his acting and business organizations, Mr. Balshofer has found time to superintend some changes he desires made at the studio; to make some additional scenes requiring a New York background for "Paradise Garden," the last picture he made on the Coast; to cut the negative of that subject; and to confer with his associates in the preparation of his next production.

Alterations are being made at the studio to suit the demands of Mr. Balshofer's next picture, the name of which he is not yet ready to announce. It is to be made from a story by a well-known author and Mr. Balshofer expects with it to equal, if not excel, his current effort, "Paradise Garden," which he regards as one of his biggest productions.

"Paradise Garden" is a seven reel picture adapted by Mr. Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer from the romantic novel of the same name by George Gibbs, author of a number of popular books. It will be released October first as a Metro wonderplay de luxe. Harold Lockwood is the star.

BARKER JOINS PARALTA PERMANENTLY.

Reginald Barker has become permanently connected with the Paralta Plays organization, and will be sole director of Bessie Barriscale's photo dramas. During the past two months he has been directing her production of Harold MacGrath's secret service war romance, "Madam Who," on which he is now putting the finishing touches.

Since last November up to within a few days Mr. Barker's permanent plans for the future were very much in doubt. The early expiration of his contract with another company became known and from that moment this young producing genius was made a target for record-breaking offers from almost every organization in the moving-picture industry. Recognizing value, each concern strove desperately to capture him, many sending agents from New York to the Pacific Coast to personally negotiate a deal. Mr. Barker gracefully declined all offers pending a careful consideration of each proposition.

Seven weeks ago, on the expiration of his contract, Mr. Barker became director of Miss Barriscale in the production of Harold MacGrath's "Madam Who," not because it was the most lucrative of the many opportunities offered him, but because it gave him a chance to carry out some of the more pretentious ideas he had long entertained.

During the recent visit of Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, to the Pacific Coast, a consultation was held between him and Mr. Barker and Robert T. Kane, vice-president of Paralta Plays, which resulted in agreements under which Mr. Barker will continue permanently as Miss Barriscale's director.

J. FRANK BROCKLISS SAILS FOR LONDON.

J. Frank Brockliss was the guest of honor at a theater party given at the Eltinge Theater, New York, on Thursday night, September 6. In the party were the executives of the King-Bee Films Corporation. Preceding the theater entertainment a very enjoyable informal dinner was arranged by Louis Burstein, president of the King-Bee Company. Among the guests were Nat. H. Spitzer, L. L. Hiller, Jacob Wilke, Arvid Gilstrom, Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., and S. Garrett. Mr. Brockliss, who represents the King-Bee Billy West Comedies abroad, sailed for London on Saturday, September 8.

JOE AND SAM DE GRASSE AT LAST GET TOGETHER.

Director Joseph De Grasse, of the Bluebird studios, has been staging photoplays for more than six years, and his brother, Sam, has been acting in front of the camera for a like period, but in all that time they had never been able to get together on a picture until Brother Joseph filmed his latest Bluebird production, "Anything Once," in which Franklyn Farnum will be starred, as the October 8 release.

Samuel and Joseph De Grasse.

They have made a continuous effort for years to work together and came very near to putting it over on several occasions. Something, however, always happened to upset their plans.

Joe was overjoyed and so was Sam when it was decided that the latter was to play a role in "Anything Once," but both kept their fingers crossed and knocked wood every once in a while until the production was actually under way. Although the occasion has been referred to as "the De Grasse" reunion, there is still George Felix to be accounted for before the assembly of De Grasses would be complete. Felix is one De Grasse who has stuck to the stage more than he has to pictures. He has long been identified with vaudeville with the team of Felix and Barry and with Barry Girls, taking occasional flyers into screen comedies.

To Bluebird, however, the importance of "Anything Once," in association with the directorial activities of Joe De Grasse comes in the announcement of Franklyn Farnum as a lone star, with Mr. De Grasse his director.

It was Joe De Grasse who introduced Louise Lovely to Bluebirds, early in the series, and it was this same skillful and experienced director who brought out Dorothy Phillips last fall and directed her until lately Ida May Park (who in private life is Mrs. Joe De Grasse) became screen manager for Miss Phillips and Joe De Grasse became Franklyn Farnum's director.

FINGER PRINTS TO CORRECT CARELESS WORK.

George A. Rush, manager of Herbert Brenon's studio at Hudson Heights, N. J., has just applied the finger-print system to the development of negative film. Everybody "in the know" of the screen world realizes the difficulty encountered by studio managers through injury to negative films during development. Despite rules and official precautions, upon development a negative will be found to have gathered a number of finger marks. This is largely due to the lack of care of the developers. Employees have realized that there was no way to trace their carelessness.

Usually these finger prints caused slight harm, but occasionally they marred a big scene, making the cutting of the damaged part necessary. This, of course, hurt the finished product, since a re-take of the scene is then impossible. Mr. Rush has been studying the finger-print evil for some time. Recently he hit upon the idea of applying the police finger-print system to the trouble. Under the direction of Lieutenant John Simons, of the North Bergen, N. J., police department, Mr. Rush has taken finger prints of the various employees of the Brenon developing department. Judging from results attained with the negative of "The Fall of the Romanoffs" Mr. Rush has solved the problem. The developed negative failed to have a single finger print mark.

Triangle to Produce Plays Abroad

Will Shortly Dispatch Companies to the Orient for Filming Productions Suitable for Market There.

BECAUSE of the imperativve demand for pictures from the Orient and South America, Triangle will send companies of players and directors to India and China for the purpose of filming plays that will appeal to these foreign patrons and bring a new type of production to Americans. Later, a company will go to Buenos Ayres to produce plays of distinctly South American atmosphere.

"We are supplying not merely America and the European continent, but literally all the world," said H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, in connection with the statement of the extensive producing activities now being planned by Triangle.

"Virtually all the cinema producers in this country are today sending a tremendous number of films to the Orient," continued Mr. Davis. "The celluloid is proving a potent tie of friendship and understanding between the Mongolian and the Caucasian. Film shadows, bringing modern ideas and democratic principles, are doing more than could armed forces to bring reform to China and to make it an integral part of the world instead of a sort of pariah among nations.

"There are more than six hundred motion picture theaters in China alone. The number in Japan is just as great. Virtually no film is made in either country. European manufacturers are at a standstill because of the war. Thus the United States is supplying the market.

"In the city of Shanghai there are five motion picture theaters with an average of 700 seats. Their admission prices range from twenty-five to sixty cents, according to location. Canton is another big buyer of films. Six theaters are now running there with combined seating capacity for 4,200 people. Another theater, now near completion, will accommodate 1,100 patrons. The Chinaman pays well for his entertainment, but he likes a long show. One five-reel drama is not enough for him. An evening must offer him at least three hours of diversion; so the program usually consists of two long films and a couple of short comedies.

"The foreign trade has taught us that the whole world is pretty much akin. Climate and the color of a man's skin doesn't alter his primal feelings. What pleases American usually pleases India and South America. Romance, adventure, tragedy and comedy are everywhere. Our foreign exhibitors invariably demand the dramas which were successes here.

"We have learned, however, to leave the Oriental features out of our home-made plays. India, for instance, has about 500 castes. These are distinguished sometimes by the folding of a turban, again by the color of a cloak. The problem is too involved for our American directors. We will therefore send companies with American stars and directors to India and China for regular stock work. Later we will invade South America. Our directors, working in the actual locale of the picture, can acquire accurate details. In this way we will satisfy our foreign market and at the same time give America an introduction to Oriental life and manners.

"This move of Triangle is merely in stride with the progress of the motion picture industry. It is only a decade since the days when thrills, accidents, collisions and marathon chases were the vogue. We no longer strive for miraculous 'stunts' except for comedy purposes. We have also been eliminating from our pictures all reference to creeds of religion. It is our purpose to entertain, not to preach. Yet we cannot escape the role of pedagogue entirely.

"I was amused recently at the complaint of a furniture dealer in one of the small towns of Northern California. He had an excellent stock. I commented upon it as I stopped for a purchase. His reply was rather surly.

"'Yes,' said he, 'but there's no money in the business any more. The movies have put us out. Used to be when my stock got low I just wrote for a carload of tables and chairs and bedroom sets. But that don't do for our farmers any more. No, sir; when they get married and go to housekeeping 'round here they come to me and want a set of furniture like they saw in some picture show down at the theater. The farmer's daughter, instead of just asking for a parlor set, wants Looey the Fourteenth!'

"This statement of the furniture dealer is just another proof that provincialism is being eliminated and a universal standard of life adopted. Motion pictures are completing the work started by the railroad, the telegraph, the cable, and the telephone."

Rhea Mitchell Joins Paralta

THE recent visit of Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., to the Paralta studios at Hollywood, Cal., resulted in the conclusion of negotiations which had been going on for some time between Rhea Mitchell and this company in reference to her starring under the Paralta banner.

Contracts were duly signed, and Miss Mitchell will very shortly make her debut as an independent star at the head of her own company in a modern morality play by Hayden Talbot. Miss Mitchell's productions will be released by Paralta through the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

Miss Mitchell and her company will be acocrded the same accomodations at the Paralta studios in Hollywood that are enjoyed by Bessie Barriscale, J. Warren Kerrigan and the Henry B. Walthall organizations. Miss Mitchell and company will have the benefit of the same general staff, headed by Robert Brunton, production manager; R. Holmes Paul, art director, and Robert T. Kane, vice-president of Paralta, as general supervising manager.

Rhea Mitchell

Miss Mitchell is 21 years of age, and has been connected with the stage and screen since her fifteenth year. She was born in Portland, Oregon. At the age of fifteen her family moved to Spokane, where she made her first appearance on the stage, playing the ingenue role in "The Blue Mouse," produced by the Baker Stock Company.

In the fall of 1913 Miss Mitchell made her first appearance on the screen. She joined the New York Motion Picture Corporation as a leading woman. Her first part was in a two-reel production called "A New England Idyll," which was directed by Reginald Barker. She continued with the New York Motion Picture Corporation until 1915, when she joined the American Film Company at Santa Barbara. Miss Mitchell's last appearance was in a special production called "Whither Thou Goest," in which she made a striking personal hit as co-star with Orrin Johnson.

Miss Mitchell will be seen in eight Paralta star feature films each year.

NEW PATHE BRANCH MANAGERS.

Though still a young man, E. O. Child, just appointed manager of Pathe's San Francisco office, has been in the theatrical business for considerably more than fifteen years, since during that length of time he managed companies and was then assistant to the general manager of the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association in Chicago, the Western connection of the U. B. O.

He was manager of the Orpheum Theater, San Francisco, and the Orpheum Theater, Salt Lake City, Utah. He was then with the General Film Company and Essanay and was branch manager for V. L. S. E. in Pittsburgh, then San Francisco representative of McClure Superpictures, which connection he left to join Pathe. Big things are expected of Mr. Child in his new position, and it looks as if he is going to live up to all expectations.

N. I. Filkins, who has been a salesman in Pathe's Buffalo office for the last two or three years, has been appointed manager of that office, succeeding J. W. Fuller, who has been appointed assistant manager of Pathe's office in St. Louis.

L. E. Kennedy becomes manager of Pathe's Los Angeles branch. Mr. Kennedy was for some time connected with that office in the capacity of salesman and he has a reputation of being one of the best, if not the best, film salesman in the Los Angeles territory.

An African Film City

A Big Studio at Killarney Commences Picture Production in Johannesburg.

Well inside the municipal boundary of Johannesburg, says the Johannesburg Sunday Times, a new hive of activity is coming to life. When completed, it will be a city in miniature. Everybody and everything connected with it will be dedicated to making films—for the pleasure and profit of South Africa and other countries.

Pictures of all kinds will be produced in the city, and it will contain handsome stone buildings and native kraals, an artificial river, a lake, and even a zoo. And not only will pictures be produced, but the films themselves will be manufactured here from raw materials.

The founders of the city are the African Films Production, Ltd., and they could hardly have chosen a healthier or more delightful site, and the future residents could not wish for more charming surroundings of kopjes and veld. Altogether the city will cover an area of 26 acres.

The building which now adorns the veld, and which occupies a space of 172 feet by 114 feet, is entirely of stone. There is an air of stability and permanence about it which indicates that an important industry has come to stay.

Contained in it are offices for the chairman, the general manager, the secretary, for the scenario editor and writers, for poster artists and the editor of the African Mirror, and six offices for the producers. There are dressing and bath rooms and a dining room and green room for the actors, a reading room and library, a mess room where workmen will get their luncheons free, and a kitchen.

Then there are store rooms, a carpenters' shop, places where girls will be employed in the making of props and a studio for the scenic painters, who just now, with the aid of carpenters, are building Windsor Castle for a great Zulu war picture. Downstairs in the basement the technical work is being done, and there are spacious rooms for cutting negatives, developing, washing, drying, perforating and assembling the films, mixing chemicals, printing and so forth. Here also are the electric motors, a heating chamber and a miniature theater.

Not far from the building is an open-air stage, 90 feet by 60 feet, and adjoining this the foundations have been laid for another large edifice which will contain a warehouse for the scenery and props of the special picture under production, and quarters (including a kitchen) for the use of the natives. Another stage for indoor work of the above dimensions is also being constructed, this being enclosed with glass.

There will be an educational film house with a camera playing all day, where the movements of a fly, a fish, a lizard, or the unfolding of a flower may be recorded.

Splendid stables are to be built—the finest in South Africa—also a garage for motor vehicles, and a wagon house for vehicles ranging from a Kruger coach to a 'ricksha. Native villages are to find their place here, from the Zulu mushroom huts to the mud contraptions of the Hottentots, even Bushmen's caves not being forgotten.

What is perhaps the most interesting feature of all is the manufacture of the film base, the film itself as apart from the picture. Only in California are the films made today, because they have to be dried in the open air and a dry climate is essential for the operation. Firms have tried to start the industry in England and France, but their efforts have resulted in failure. With its dry atmosphere, the Transvaal is regarded by experts as a particularly good place for the purpose.

Not only will the films for bioscope pictures be manufactured here, but also it is intended to meet the South African demands of professional and amateur photographers, and after that to build up an export trade.

Thus the Film City of Johannesburg, when in full running order, will cover enterprises which should offer occupations to hundreds of people, and will play no insignificant part in industrial life. The scheme includes residences for those engaged in the work of all branches of film production.

TO ENLARGE COMPANY.

W. A. King, representing Barker Bros., Los Angeles, Cal., manufacturers of the K B Motion Picture Camera and Projector, is in New York arranging for the formation of a new organization for the manufacture of the camera and projector in the east. A new office will be opened shortly in the Times Square section, where it is also desired to locate the factory.

Louise Glaum Visits New York

LOUISE GLAUM, Triangle's siren star, arrived in New York this week from Los Angeles for a vacation of ten days before commencing work on a series of spectacular productions at the Triangle Culver City studio.

This is Miss Glaum's first trip to New York since she commenced her picture work four years ago in Los Angeles. She has been with Triangle since its inception, appearing in no less than twenty features. Her latest role was that of the vanity woman in "Idolaters," released the first of this month. With the exception of short rest periods between productions the star has had no time for anything but her work during the past two years.

Louise Glaum.

"I am a stranger to the gay white way," remarked Miss Glaum, "although I am supposed to know all about it after frequenting innumerable of its cafes—in my pictures.

"I came to rest, which shows just how little I know of New York. I am making a tour of the shops to secure gowns for my coming plays, which will be quite different from any of the recent ones. I had not seen my last play, 'Idolaters,' until it was shown for me in the Triangle projection room the other morning. I was terribly shocked by myself."

Miss Glaum's intention to visit the city was kept secret at her request, as she did not wish to make personal appearances, but rather to enjoy a genuine outing.

PATHE CLUB HAS AN END-OF-THE-SUMMER OUTING.

One hundred and five strong, the Pathe Club went by a specially chartered steamer on Sunday, September 9, to Glenwood Landing, Long Island, for an all day outing. Athletic contests for handsome prizes afforded much amusement to every one, and the many persons who were seen limping the next day afforded proof not only of the many entrants in these contests, but also of the whole hearted way in which they participated.

Dinner was had at Karatsonyi's Hotel. After dinner those persons who were still able after the violent exercises of the morning took part in a ball game, the distinguishing feature of which was a "Skinny Shaner" score.

Members of the club from the Twenty-third Street Exchange, the studio in Jersey City, and the factory at Bound Brook were present in force. A pleasant feature of the outing lay in the fact that the many young women employed in the clerical and stenographic departments of the Pathe Exchange were invited along as guests of the club and accepted the invitation to a girl. Among the associate members of the club who were present were Tom Wiley of the Novelty Slide Co., Fred Ruttenberg of the Wyanoke, and Harold Davis of the Chronicle Press.

President of the club, J. A. Berst, and Mrs. Berst were present and took a hearty interest in all the various amusements of the day.

P. A. Parsons was chairman of the committee on arrangements; J. W. Kyle, the secretary of the club; L. E. Franconi and M. W. Davidson, all appointed by President Berst for special duties, worked hard to make the outing a success.

BILLY REED DROPS IN.

Billy Reed, veteran operator for many years with the old Vitagraph organization, but now the star operator at Stanley Mastbaum's Colonial Theater, Atlantic City, N. J., paid a call at the Moving Picture World office on Friday, September 14, while on his way back to the job. Billy has been spending his well earned vacation in Boston, his home town, where he says he met up with many of the old-timers.

Some Good Stunts in Equipment

Devices Exhibited at the Safety and Sanitation Exposition Which Are of Interest to the Up-to-Date Exhibitor.

By E. T. Keyser.

THE American Museum of Safety and the National Safety Council held a joint Safety and Sanitation Exposition at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, from September 10 to 15, inclusive, and the picture theater proprietor who did not attend passed up a mighty good opportunity to become acquainted with several devices which would save him money, trouble and cuss words, if installed in his house.

Just to help out the non-resident of the metropolis who could not attend and simultaneously to rub the lost bet into the Gothamite who wouldn't the following description of what particularly appealed to the World man is written.

Of course, our old friend, Nick Powers, was there with both feet, or, rather, in two places, the projection room and the exposition floor, but, as he is getting his elsewhere, we will pass him by here with the mere mention that he constituted one of the bright lights of the affair.

As an illustration of the heavy blow which they are prepared to hand out to bad atmospheric conditions in picture theaters and elsewhere, the Typhoon Fan Company, of 1544 Broadway, New York, had three six-foot ventilating fans installed at the head of the entrance staircase and another of equal size in their booth. The beauty of a Typhoon fan lies in the fact that it will pull a crowd of admission paying people into a house on a hot night with the same celerity that it expels the hot foul air.

Speaking of atmospheric conditions, the Powers Regulator Company, of New York, Boston, Chicago and Toronto, showed a device which would permit the theater manager to settle the temperature at which he desires to keep his auditorium and rest assured that the auditorium, whether full, half full or empty will stay at that temperature without further worry on his part or effort on the part of the attendants.

Anyone who has ever skidded down a slippery flight of steps or anyone who has been confronted with the possibility of paying damages to the skidder would have appreciated the safety offered both parties by the stair treads exhibited by the American Mason Safety Tread Company, of Lowell, Mass. These treads, which may be applied to new or old stairs, are so constructed that they are non-slippable down to the last bit of their life and are built to be self-draining and do not permit foreign substances, which may be thrown upon them, to diminish their safety.

As a fire preventive, the automatic alarm shown by the Aero Fire Alarm Co., of 6 Church street, New York, holds much of interest to both exhibitors and producers. The device consists of one or more detectors which ring a gong when a fire starts and indicate on an annunciator just where the blaze is located. The detectors may be distributed in the auditorium, the operating room and anywhere else desired and will allow the watchman or attendants to get on the job of extinguishment without loss of time in locating an incipient blaze.

As a means of utilizing the first few minutes of the conflagration's career to put an effective quietus upon it, the Pyrene Manufacturing Company, of 52 Vanderbilt avenue, and the Fire Gun Manufacturing Company, 17 Battery place, both of New York, and the Fyr-Fyter Company, of Dayton, Ohio, displayed assortments of hand fire extinguishers calculated to kill a fire while it was borning.

The danger of shock or burn by an open switch was what caused the Detroit Fuse & Manufacturing Company, of Detroit, to produce the Square "D" steel enclosed switch which protects both operator and equipment and which is provided with a safety lock-off which prevents closing the circuit while repairs are being made.

The Metropolitan Electric Manufacturing Company, of Long Island City, New York, also exhibited a line of the Naro-Safety Panel boards which are safe from shock or sparking and in which each circuit is removable and replaceable without interfering with other circuits, thereby endearing themselves to the heart of the house manager who desires something safe, simple and compact with a capital C.

NEW LOIS WEBER PICTURE.

"The Price of a Good Time" is the title of the new Lois Weber feature to be released in the near future. It is said to be superproduction, marked by unusual color effects and night scenes said never to have been surpassed on the screen.

Earl Brunswick

TO HAVE appeared with Richard Mansfield is the enviable distinction that Earl Brunswick lays claim to, having supported Mansfield in "Old Heidelberg" and in "Ivan, the Terrible." He has had a thorough training in legitimate dramatic productions and has traveled over practically all of the states, as well as through Canada, Mexico and Cuba. For a time he was also associated with a brother in vaudeville and is especially well known throughout the Southern States. He is a native of Mount Vernon and early deserted a promising mercantile career for the stage. Among his first appearances in films was as lead in the film production, "Dear Old Girl." He recently played in the Goldwyn feature, "Baby Mine" and has just appeared under Director W. Christy Cabanne in the new Metro war picture, "Draft No. 258." In this latter production he plays the juvenile heavy in which he takes the part of a Socialist. Like many other graduates from the speaking stage, Mr. Brunswick has become an enthusiast in regard to the artistic possibilities of the moving picture.

"THE MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY" AT THE BROADWAY.

The premiere of the Thanhouser version of Edward Everett Hale's patriotic masterpiece, "The Man Without a Country," was made the occasion of a gala evening at the Broadway theater, Sunday, when Jewel Productions, Inc., presented the feature with Florence LaBadie and H. E. Herbert in the stellar roles.

The flag-draped boxes were filled with government and city officials, together with men of the Army and Navy, including. Brig. Gen. Eli D. Hoyle and his staff, Capt. Charles A. Adams, U. S. N., and men of the U. S. S. "Recruit" and a large detachment of boy scouts. The patriotic fervor of the occasion was heightened by the patriotic verse of James L. Heron, secretary of the Canadian Club, one of a series of speakers furnished by the Mayor's Committee of National Defense to contribute speakers each evening at the Broadway during the two weeks' New York run of the timely feature. Etta Weiman gave vocal numbers.

Lloyd Lonergan wrote the present day version after the Hale classic and Ernest C. Warde, who did "The Vicar of Wakefield" and other highly successful cinema adaptations, is the director.

Jewel Productions, Inc., two weeks ago acquired the picture from the Thanhouser Film Corporation and will offer it for distribution as the fourth of a standard series which they will offer to the trade, the first being "Come Through"; the second, "Pay Me," with Dorothy Phillips, and the third, "Sirens of the Sea."

Bryant Washburn Exonerated

Essanay Player's Claims for Exemption from Draft Proved to Be Justified.

BRYANT WASHBURN has at last been exonerated from any suspicion of an ignoble motive in his claim for exemption from the national army, judging from the affidavits disclosed by Thomas J. Dawson, chairman of the exemption board of District 55. Washburn's case has been given considerable notoriety since the day he was called before the board to answer his call in the draft. After being pronounced physically fit by the examiners, he registered a claim for exemption on the grounds of having dependents, and was subsequently granted a certificate of release by the local board. This action of the local authorities was met with severe criticism by certain government officials and an investigation was begun by agents of the Department of Justice.

Reports all unfavorable to Washburn were circulated regarding his financial standing and the ability of his wife to support herself without his aid. By the recent disclosure, however, of the affidavits submitted in the case it was made clear that Mrs. Washburn, due to physical disability, is absolutely dependent upon her husband and that the family's present circumstances will not permit him to enter the army service.

The affidavits were furnished by Mrs. Mabel Washburn, his wife; her mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Chidester; Dr. Joseph Zeisler, George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, and R. O. Proctor, Chicago manager of Art Dramas and now acting as a government agent. The affidavit made by Dr. Spoor denied the rumor that Mrs. Washburn, formerly an actress, had a contract with his company. The other affidavits corroborated the statement made by Mr. Washburn in his exemption claim.

Thomas J. Dawson, chairman of the exemption board, who has supported Washburn in the matter, made the following statement in tribute to him:

"Washburn had the right the same as any other American to claim exemption and on the evidence he was entitled to it.

"It was unfair to the board and unfair to him and humiliated us all before the public. Washburn is in every way a man. When he appeared before the board he helped us in every way possible to go into his life, financial and otherwise. He should not be martyred because he is an actor."

Mr. Washburn will continue with Essanay. "The Fibbers," a five-reel comedy in which he plays the lead, was completed last week and is to be released through the George Kleine System, October 15.

Dempsey Tells of War Experiences.

Frank Dempsey, formerly traveling representative for K-E-S-E, who returned to this country from France a few weeks ago, tells an interesting story of his experiences during six months of service in the American Ambulance Corps.

Mr. Dempsey sailed for France on February 4, reached Paris February 14, and left for the front February 24. His first real taste of war was in the battle of Mt. Cornillet, where Section 13, of which he was a member, received the army citation, the first to be given to an American section for bravery. Section 13 also received six Croix de Guerres (medals for bravery).

In the battle of Mt. Cornillet, Mr. Dempsey witnessed the destruction of a tunnel in which 1,300 Bosch soldiers were caught digging their way underneath the French lines. He also witnessed the bombardment of hospitals by German planes, and did service in the battle at Rheims.

Mr. Dempsey reports that the French government is circulating one and two-reel comedy pictures in some places for the amusement of the poorer classes. It is not an uncommon sight at night to see a picture projected from the side of a house with the aid of a white sheet and a calcium light outfit. In Paris the larger houses are doing good business at one franc admission. Very few houses are open after 9.30 p. m.

Mr. Dempsey sailed from Bordeaux August 11, and reached New York August 22. He intends to again enter the picture business in Chicago, where he will remain until called for service in this country.

Clune Has New Production.

The W. H. Clune production, "The Eyes of the World," based on the novel of that name, written by Harold Bell Wright, will have its premiere in Chicago, Friday, September 21, at the Auditorium theater. The Chicago showing follows the exploitation of the picture for several months in the states west of Denver, where Mr. Clune's representatives say it played to excellent business wherever shown. Chicago is the first city east of Denver to witness the presentation of the latest Clune production. An extensive advertising campaign is now being conducted under the supervision of Spencer E. Rogers, Mr. Clune's personal representative, who will also have charge of all the details of the presentation of the subject during its engagement at the Auditorium. Numerous departures from present exhibiting methods are promised by him. An elaborate setting specially built for the occasion will occupy the Auditorium stage, and a large symphony orchestra will furnish the musical accompaniment.

Chicago Brevities.

James S. McQuade, our good friend and side-kick, is off on his holiday. He left Saturday, September 8, taking a train eastward, and will be in and around New York until Saturday, September 22.

Success of an effort now being made by local film men to have Major Funkhouser ousted from the censor board would permit undue privation in some instances. The Fox film, "The Spy," which was denied a permit by the major, and which is now being shown in a "Loop" theater under an injunction issued by the United States courts, is doing such good business that it has been secured for an indefinite run, despite the fact that eleven other prints have been booked by Chicago houses for the week of September 16.

The local office of the Fox Film Corporation has closed a contract with Ascher Bros. for the rental of "The Honor System," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "The Conquerer," "When a Man Sees Red," "Camille" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" for a minimum run for two days of each subject in all houses of the Ascher circuit. The contract is said to represent one of the largest rental figures ever paid in this territory.

He has signed a contract with the Selig Polyscope Co. to produce "Brown of Harvard," and will try to finish the production before he is called. "There is no reason," said Mr. Beaumont, "why a moving picture actor should be spared any more than anyone else. FIRE RAZES NEW ORLEANS EXCHANGE.

Fire destroyed virtually all of the merchandise and office fixings of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, 914 Graver street, New Orleans, on Wednesday afternoon, September 5. The fire started through defective wiring. Flames first broke out in the ceiling and ate their way through the exchange. None of the many films stored in the vault were injured by fire. About twenty reels were destroyed by water. Half of the firm's paper department also was burned. No one was hurt.

By rapid, cool and efficient work on the part of the Consolidated's employes every exhibitor got his show on time from the exchange. As soon as the rooms had cooled sufficiently a cable was strung from the power plant to the exchange. A temporary office a few doors away had been opened within an hour after the fire started.

Plans already have been made for remodeling the old quarters, which will be ready in about three weeks.

Billy Sunday Visits Motion Picture Studios

Appreciates the Wonderful Growth of the Industry and the Great Educational Value of the Pictures.

BILLY SUNDAY has been visiting the motion picture studios this week.

On Wednesday Mr. Sunday, his son and business manager, George Sunday, and his secretary, Bob Matthews, visited the Lasky studios in Hollywood, where he returned the call of Mary Pickford, who attended the services in his tabernacle on Tuesday night.

The great evangelist is anxious to correct a false impression which has been gained by the public concerning his attitude with respect to the motion picture industry. Like everything else, there is good and bad in this business, he said.

"I want to be as quick to praise as I am to condemn," he said, "and in discussing an institution like the motion picture industry, which means so much to Southern California, I desire above all other things to be perfectly fair.

"The moving pictures can be made a powerful influence for clean living. By the same token they can work incalculable harm unless high standards are adhered to. Motion pictures are rightly included among the greatest educational factors we have today. Until now I never really appreciated the wonderful growth of the industry."

Mr. Sunday will visit Universal City on Tuesday next week and great preparations have been made there for his reception. It is rumored that the famous evangelist recently turned down an offer of $500,000 to appear in a series of pictures.

Triangle Studios Busy

Start Fall Producing Campaign—Ten Companies Working at Culver City.

WITH ten directors and companies hard at work in almost every section of California, the Triangle Film Corporation studios at Culver City, California, have started fall producing.

Westerns, comedy dramas, melodramas and various other dramatic combinations of love and human interest are marshaled in the onslaught for the fickle public's favor, involving the efforts of fifteen scenario writers and scores of lesser film luminaries who are all doing their bit.

The first offering in a series of "vampires in real life" is being filmed under the direction of Walter Edwards. Miss Belle Bennett plays the feature role, supported by Lee Hill and Texas Guinan. The temporary title of the new story is "Fuel of Life." Maude Reeves White is the authoress and Grant Wallace picturized the story.

Exclusive Studio Quarters Built for Fox Kiddies.

What will soon be an institution that will doubtless be copied far and wide wherever the welfare of the young is kept clearly in mind is the new children's rest room at the William Fox studio in Los Angeles. This rest room Mr. Fox regards as one of the important features of the new buildings that are being erected exclusively for the little people who create the Fox Kiddie Features.

The care that is given to the children while they are working at the William Fox studio is of the very highest and most scientific order. They have their individual dressing and retiring room, play rooms and school and gymnasium and baths and swimming pool, and not the least important, their rest room. Beside it is a play room, where the children have numberless toys and games. But the rest room is one to which they may retire and remain in comparative quiet when they feel so disposed. They are allowed to bring some of their simpler toys into it, as it has been shown that children are inclined to be more calm when some of them are in sight, but here they must not romp or disturb each other.

Each child has a place to sleep that is apart from the rest room. The latter is a place for them to loll about and talk while waiting for the announcement of the day's work and where they can go to between times without actually falling into slumber. Periods for the latter in their private rooms are carefully prescribed and adhered to.

Douglas Fairbanks and Billy Sunday to Stage Benefit Ball Game.

A monster benefit for the soldiers at Linda Vista and other military camps in the south will be staged at Washington Park on Monday afternoon, September 24, when Billy Sunday and Douglas Fairbanks meet at the head of their rival ball clubs.

Douglas Fairbanks, who is in New York, wired Billy Sunday a challenge Thursday, this week, and the great evangelist lost no time in wiring back his acceptance. The game will be staged on the twenty-fourth, so as to give the rival managers time to get in great shape for the battle.

A monster program will be arranged for that day and there will be several special stunts arranged by the committee to be put on before the ball game.

The money taken at the gate will go toward purchasing sporting goods for the soldier and sailor boys who are ready to do their bit for the Stars and Stripes. It is the ambition of both Billy Sunday and Douglas Fairbanks to pack the park on that day and turn over to the boys enough footballs, baseballs, bats, gloves and other sporting goods to keep them busy during their idle moments.

Billy Sunday was formerly a member of the Chicago Cubs and one of the greatest outfielders in the game. On that day he will play his old position, center field, and endeavor to show some of the present day crop of gardeners how the old American game should be played.

Triangle-Keystone Comedians Entertain Departing Draft Contingent.

Triangle-Keystone comedians furnished the merriment for Los Angeles' farewell to the first contingent of the Liberty Army on September 1. Five automobiles decorated with flags and Triangle-Keystone pennants, and filled with Keystone beauties and comedians in make-up formed a conspicuous part of the long street parade.

At Exposition Park in Los Angeles, where the Home Defenders' League tendered a barbecue to the departing soldiers, Robert Milliken and his troupe entertained with comedy hokum and the famous Keystone beauty squad was the object of thousands of admiring eyes.

The comedians who took part were: Bob Millikin, Andy Anderson, George Hall, Ward Caulfield, Clarence Kenecke, George Gray, M. Bianci, George Allen, Earl Rodney, Johnny Hayes and little Joey Jacobs. The girls included Rose Carter, Rae Godfrey, Claire Anderson, Caroline Rankin, Miss Hart, Beatrice Lovejoy, Blanche Payson, Marie Manley, Myrtle Reeves, Myrtle Lind, Alatia Marton, Dale Fuller, Maude Wayne, Peggy Pearce, Ruth Langston and several others.

Los Angeles Brevities.

B. F. Rolfe, general manager of the Metro Pictures Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles on Wednesday, September 5. We have not had an opportunity to see Mr. Rolfe, but we are informed that Metro intends to operate seven companies here and bring out several of their most prominent stars and directors. Among those mentioned as scheduled for the coast are Viola Dana, the Barrymores, Emmy Whelen and Mabel Taliafero. The Yorke-Metro studios are temporarily closed, Fred Balshofer and Harold Lockwood having gone to New York, where they will remain for several months. Studio location for the new Metro companies has not as yet been announced.

It is also reported that Pathe intends to produce on a large scale in California and send nine companies to Los Angeles. It is reported that the Pathe interests have leased the Kalem studios in Glendale and will soon bring out a number of their most prominent stars, including Pearl White, Gladys Hulette, Ruth Roland and many others. C. R. Seeley, Pathe's business manager, arrived in the city this week, but we have not been able to get hold of him in time for this News Letter.

Director General J. P. McGowan of the Signal Corporation this week finished the eighth chapter of the "Lost Express," which will be released under the installment title of "The Looters."

Ella Hall, petite cinema star, became the bride of Emory Johnson, also a popular film artist, at Hollywood, California, on the afternoon of September 6.

The wedding took place at the residence of Rev. E. P. Ryland and only the members of the two families, in addition to the bridesmaid and best man, were present, Miss Elsie Choen being the former and Harry Carter acting as best man.

The young couple started on a honeymoon trip by auto to San Francisco. They will remain there for ten days, returning to the south by way of the Yosemite Valley.

The bride is well known on account of her splendid Bluebird characterizations, and Johnson also has made an excellent reputation as an actor, his latest work of importance being in the thirty-two-reel Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," in which he plays one of the leading roles. Johnson finished his final scene in the serial at Universal City at 2 p. m. and at 3 p. m. he was married.

For the first time in its history, the California State Fair Association has set aside a day in honor of a motion picture star, Friday, September 14, having been named "Helen Holmes Day." The dainty and daring Signal actress will start the two engines that are scheduled to make a head on collision for the benefit of fair patrons.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who arrived recently from New York for a month's stay, left Universal City a few days ago on an automobile trip which will last a week. During his seven days' absence from the film capital the Big U chief will motor to Santa Barbara, San Bernardino, Riverside, Pomona, Pasadena, San Diego and other cities of the southland, visiting the exhibitors in the various places and obtaining first-hand information as to photoplay conditions and the wants of the theater people. Mr. Laemmle will remain several days at Coronado before returning to Universal City.

Director Joseph De Grasse of the Bluebird studios is filming a five-reel drama entitled "The Winged Mystery," written by O. D. Stuart and prepared for the screen by William Parker. Franklyn Farnum is the featured player and has a dual role. Rosemary Theby plays opposite Farnum and the other important parts are in the hands of Claire DuBrey and Sam De Grasse.

* * *

A one-reel comedy, "The Smuggler's Last Smuggle," is being filmed at Universal City by the Joker Company under the direction of Allen Curtis. William Franey and Gale Henry play the leading roles.

* * *

Having just completed "One Shot Ross," a Western "thriller" that centers about a two-gun bad man, Roy Stewart, cowboy star, again has started work at the Hartville ranch studio on another production of pioneer days which has been temporarily titled, "Guardian of El Dorado." Cliff Smith, who assisted William S. Hart in all of his Triangle productions, is directing Stewart. Jack Cunningham, scenario editor of the Culver City studio, is the author of the piece and the story was prepared for the screen by Alvin H. Neitz.

Eighteen actors and actresses play more or less important roles in "The Stainless Barrier," recently begun under the direction of Thomas Heffron, most prominent among them being Jack Livingston, J. Barney Sherry, Mary McIvor, Irene Hunt and Jessie Hallett. Jack Cunningham picturized the story, which was written by Louis Schneider.

* * *

Charles Gunn, formerly Olive Thomas' leading man in "An Even Break," and one of the most popular Triangle players for more than a year, is to be featured in a piece just begun by Ferris Hartmann. Laura Sears assumes the leading feminine role and Mildred Delfino, who but recently recovered from serious injuries received while she was supporting Margery Wilson in "Wild Sumac," will also play an important part. George du Bois Proctor, one of Triangle's most successful 'script artists, prepared the screen version of the story, which was written by Mildred Considine.

Director Lynn Reynolds departed this week for Santa Barbara, where he will produce a society drama featuring Fritzi Ridgeway and George Hernandez. The name of this piece has not yet been announced. Reynolds is the author as well as the director.

George Arling is back on the Triangle-Keystone staff and is doing a picture with Ray Griffith, Myrtle Lind and Martin Kinney under the direction of Reggie Morris.

Mr. Arling will be welcomed back by Keystone fans and will be remembered for his former work with the late Fred Mace. Mr. Arling's most recent work was with Fox.

Joseph (Baldy) Belmont is also back on the Triangle-Keystone "lot," and is waiting for a story. He will probably be directed by William Beaudine, who will start with Triangle-Keystone next week. This will bring the total of companies now engaged in making Triangle-Keystone comedies up to seven, and it is likely that one or two additional companies will be added later.

* * *

Triangle-Keystone's song writer-director, Harry Williams, is at work on his first comedy since resuming work with Triangle-Keystone. His cast included Eddie Gribbon, Rose Carter, Marie Manley, Mal St. Clair and Blanche Payson.

* * *

The first Lois Weber production, "Did You Ever Have a Good Time?" which will be released in the near future on a State's rights basis, will be marked by some noteworthy beautiful color effects. This part of the work has been done by Mr. Jack Bloom, the inventor and sole owner of the color process, first used and made famous in "Intolerance." Mr. Bloom is now affiliated with Miss Weber and will have entire charge of the tinting and coloring of her pictures.

* * *

Lois Weber's screen version of "K," Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel, is rapidly nearing completion, and Miss Weber is highly pleased with the excellent work done by the cast. True Boardman, in the title role of "K," Albert Roscoe as Dr. Max, and Mildred Harris as Sidney, all have had exceptional opportunities to display their artistry to the best advantage. In preparing the scenario, Miss Weber made every effort to follow the action of the novel as nearly as possible.

A new Lehrman comedy has been completed for William Fox that is believed to be the best that the famous director has ever put upon the screen. It brings out a new chapter in the development of moving picture humor.

"The distinctive feature of this new comedy," said Mr. Lehrman when the final touches were given, "is that it presents a comedy that is interesting and clever from the standpoint of the story. It has hundreds of funny incidents that are new and will inevitably cause the wildest sort of laughter, but without them a decidedly good and absorbing story has been told."

Jack Jevne has been added to the scenario staff at the Triangle-Keystone studios. Mr. Jevne is one of the best comedy writers in the business and has had considerable experience on the stage as a juvenile lead. He is also a short story writer of considerable note.

* * *

Triangle-Keystone Director Reggie Morris has been shooting scenes this week in a big cafe set for a forthcoming Triangle-Keystone comedy featuring Ray Griffith, Alatia Barton, Martin Kinney and Myrtle Lind. Between scenes Bob Millikin and Fritz Schade, who were both vaudeville artists before joining Keystone, put on an "act" for the benefit of the fifty or more people working in the scene.

* * *

The final scenes in the sixteenth and last episode of the Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," were made this week by Director Stuart Paton. The principal roles throughout the serial were played by Priscilla Dean, Eddie Polo, Harry Carter and Emory Johnson. Paton and Karl Coolidge collaborated in writing the scenario from the book entitled "Loot" by Arthur Somers Roche.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

WHEN I saw "To the Death" I could not but feel that if Mrs. L. Case Russell, the author, had been present when it was directed she would not have allowed one "fool" thing to go forth. This was the scene when the villain (in cave man fashion) seized the heroine and took her outdoors, thence to a hotel, with his armful, but where did he drop her long enough to make a change in dress and to don an up-to-date hat? There was one big murmur all around me over this inconsistency. The plot seemed a good one with one or two new ideas in it, and was well cast and photographed, but Petrova is as icy as ever.

* * *

"Tides of Fate" had good sea stuff and served to show us Alexandria Carlisle in her first picture seen here. She made a hit and was a picture even in a hobble skirt and other long gowns. When I criticised this, someone said: "Well, the play is set back five years in the first reels." William A. Sheer in a thankless part was splendid all through.

* * *

"The Varmint" is a sure winner anywhere, and how Jack Pickford has developed! The college scenes are intensely interesting, so full of red blood and realism. Don't know when I've enjoyed Theodore Roberts so well.

"Mme. Bo-Peep," a Triangle winner, was liked, and pictured Western scenes galore, notably a sheep ranch. Seena Owen is some rider.

Burton Holmes has taken us through the Yellowstone and we have thus saved a lot of cash.

* * *

A recent winner here is "Sudden Jim," with Charles Ray, whom we all dote on. Reviewers have dealt well with this offering—a clever adaptation of a good story read by millions. We get a strong lesson here in self-reliance and the will power to make good.

"The Squaw Man's Son" was a good vehicle for "Wally" Reid, but too melodramatic and lacked plausibility for a Paramount picture. However, the acting was excellent and I was glad to see Dorothy Davenport playing in company with her "hubby," though she was some vampire. Here, too, we had Donald Bowles, so long in stock on the Pacific Coast. His mother is one of New England's best beloved women, the Rev. Ada Bowles, long past eighty, residing in old Gloucester, where for generations her family reared their own. She takes pride in the success of her boy.

Why do not all first class theaters put on the "Do Children Count" series? What excuse is there for denying your public a right to see something more than worth while? I heard a fool reason the other day when at the General Film Exchange. An exhibitor said he did not like the title, as it might seem to his public that it was suggestive. Isn't that the limit, and from the lips of an apparenly decent clean-minded man? How easy to tell his public on a slide something to the contrary. The very title is of itself an advertisement, for intelligent persons know well that children do count everywhere, and these pictures point it out dramatically. Adults and kiddies alike are enjoying the series, which are a credit to Essanay and to the theaters showing them.

Perhaps I had a day off, but I did not care for "Mary Jane's Pa," although I sat it through twice to get the merits. It was clean and a good small-town play, and Eulalie Jensen was capital, but somehow I could not make Marc MacDermott fit into the part. The house liked it, and that's enough for the box office. Give me such plays at this season as "Slumberland," featuring the Triangle kiddies and Thelma Salter, a dainty girl, ably supported by young Stone.

* * *

Jean Sothern is a favorite for all who like youth and talent, combined with the added asset—beauty. "A Mute Appeal" was novel in theme and well worked out, with the inevitable happy ending the fans so like. Donald Cameron fitted into the part. In this play there were stunning outdoor scenes in the South and its wildwoods, while the mutes were perfect in their delineations. Good Art Dramas picture.

* * *

We have had a treat in the music offered of late in some of the theaters. At the Fenway young Del Castillo of Cambridge has given rare organ music in the absence of the house orchestra. He is of Spanish descent and inherits his musical ability from his mother, a musician of note. At the Exeter we have had Mary White-Mullen as soloist, much to our delight, as she has a powerful voice, and as a man said last night, "She is a beauty, no mistake." Martel, at the Park, too, is an organist worth hearing. At this house we get some big voices like Mary Desmond of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Mme. Calvert and such. It is refreshing, too, to again hear the old songs, marches, etc., now that the copyright ban is on, and if the players but knew it we like them far better than some of the modern music, so why not save the tax and dig up old-timers?

* * *

Like all Triangles, "Borrowed Plumage" had original features, and Bessie Barriscale made good as the versatile heroine. There was good soldier stuff and where is there another actress to so fit the role of queen of the kitchen as the dame in this picture? She is not listed in the cast, but should be, for it was a big hit in facial expression. I like especially the delicate manner in depicting John Paul Jones and his defense when branded a pirate, which he never was at any time.

* * *

Well, I liked "The Amazons," which ought to be good for a "repeat" any time for its novelty and splendid settings. For a Paramount it had Keystone features rather surprising, such as climbing to the roof and sliding down a rope to reach the gymnasium for a rendezvous, but it was plausible and had no slapstick features. The spectacle of seeing dainty Marguerite Clark do a trapeze stunt, and dropping on tree boughs from a window, a la Fairbanks, was some fun and a big hit with the house. Norton and Menjou had "silly ass" parts and made the most of it, but William Hinckley was unusually good, first as the English aviator and later as the lover. A perfectly safe picture to put on in any theater, for the personality of Miss Clark is so compelling.

Don't know when we have enjoyed a better picture in lighter vein than "Little Miss of Fortune," with Marian Swayne, who has ever made good. True, there were some inconsistencies, but who cares, since the idea works out so well. Especially noticeable was the character work of the old lady—"Granny" of the poorhouse. It was pathetic and artistic. The small town indoor scenes were funny, picturing the antics of an audience at an amateur show. I anticipate another rural play in "The Little Samaritan" for Miss Swayne, who is recalled with pleasure on the speaking stage.

No better comedy has ever been put on the screen than "Baby Mine," which you have all seen. So much has been said of this that further comments are like twice-told tales. Goldwyn has set a great pace, which speaks well for our future enjoyment, since other producers must look to their laurels.

* * *

"Redemption" went strong here, but was not rightly exploited in the press, which dwelt too much on the Thaw end and failed to say that this is a play featuring mother love and sacrifice, also the redemption of the "man in the case."

* * *

"The Last of the Carnabys" is strong, and little Hulette repeats her work in "The Shine Girl," one of the gems of last year. I do wish directors would not give us prolonged deathbed scenes as in this case, as it detracts from our pleasure and remains an impression hard to efface. Glad to see William Parke's boy making good as an actor and under the direction of his capable father, a local favorite.

Howell Hansel has given us a treat in "The Long Trail," with Lou-Tellegen and Mary Fuller, whom I had not seen for some time. It is nearly all outdoor, with snow, dog sleds, and other cool accessories. "Nice on a hot night to see, old man," said one next to me.

We are glad to learn that Charlie Miller is to direct Norma Talmadge the coming two years. Mrs. Miller writes me from California that they have a son at Harvard; that she is to motor to New York this week and will visit the Hub soon.

War and Exports

By F. G. Ortega

Businesslike Methods Will Be Necessary in the Immediate Future, if American Producers Are to Hold the Foreign Trade After European Competition Is Resumed

THE war will not last forever. The statement may sound foolish, but most of our producers and distributors seem to be doing business under the impression that these are normal times.

As the single mention of peace is originating more fights among civilians than any one word in the dictionary, nothing would have been more gratifying than to make our few remarks on export without trespassing on this dangerous ground.

But the subject cannot be avoided. Even at the risk that the whole assumption should be labelled by our London friends as a pro-Hun scheme, we will have to admit that the war cannot last forever.

Will it last ten years? Will it last five, two, one year more? How long will it last?

Some people think, that the Pope, horrified by some new atrocity, had an impromptu talk with his secretary and decided then and there to write to his friends in belligerent countries. This is the way in which many respectable citizens are explaining the peace note. In fact, a worthy bishop of one of the Protestant churches puts his veto on the whole proceeding, announcing in an article written for the New York Journal that he could not see how the Pope, a private individual without diplomatic representation, might influence the powers. It is wonderful that such a thing could be said by a man of distinction in a country like this where everybody reads two or three newspapers a day.

The truth of the matter is, and it has been officially admitted, that His Holiness had been consulting with every belligerent and neutral country for months before sending the note, that the rulers knew it by heart before it was delivered and published, and that, if it does not mark the actual beginning of the end, it at least reveals a general desire to discuss peace terms.

A buyer from one of the South American Republics stated in the office of the Cine-Mundial, our international organ, that it would not take the European producers six months to recover the Latin-American markets after the war is over. "If a radical change is not established at once," he said, "the American manufacturers will lose our markets quicker than they captured them. Why, these gentlemen seem to be copying the methods of the German politicians. I asked the president of a well-known film company how much he would take for the exclusive rights for Brazil on one of his pictures, and what do you think he did? He brought out a map. We did not do any business, but I had the pleasure of telling him what I thought of the map as a basis for calculating the value of a picture."

"L'Arte Muta," the well-informed Italian trade paper, in an article published recently, reviews with alarm the strides made in foreign markets by American producers during the past six months. It prints the following statistical tables, taken from official records:

Severo Norsa, Cine-Mundial correspondent in Argentine, makes in his last letter the following statement, based on official data: "In the first three months of the current year (1917), 4,958,940 feet of film were imported into Argentine against 4,316,240 imported during the same period of last year. Although the increase is not very large, the situation, as a whole, is extremely favorable for the American producers. At the beginning of 1916, the film imported was mostly of European brands, all of which have virtually disappeared from the market. It can be said, therefore, that, excepting an insignificant percentage of French and Italian pictures, the five million feet imported are made up of American brands."

We are not in possession of exact data on other Spanish and Portuguese-speaking countries, but Argentine may be taken as a representative example insofar as the popularity of American pictures is concerned. Now then, Argentine, with about the same number of inhabitants as the cities of New York and Boston, is, according to the figures quoted above, a better market than France with a population of nearly forty millions. In fact, Argentine absorbs considerable more foreign film than most European countries. Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay and Peru are more or less dependent on Argentine.

Spain and Portugal, which may be considered a single unit for all commercial purposes, are a better market than Argentine.

Cuba and Porto Rico, with about three hundred theatres running daily, is another good market. As far as the American producer is concerned, as profitable as France.

Mexico, in peace times, is a better market than Argentine. Mexico is rapidly becoming normal again.

Venezuela, Colombia and the Republics of Central America, if properly handled, should absorb as much film as Argentine.

Brazil and Argentine run neck to neck in film consumption.

At this very moment the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking markets of the world are absorbing nearly as much American film as Great Britain, although, excepting two or possibly three New York concerns, the American Moving Picture Industry has made no intelligent effort to develop its trade there. If the business were gone after with a tenth of the energy displayed in this country, they would soon be at the head among our foreign customers, above Great Britain proper and second in importance only to the British Empire.

It should be stated plainly that the introduction of American film in Latin-America, and almost absolute control of the business in some of the Republics, have been caused by the war and nothing else.

The claims so often heard about the attraction exercised by our perfect plots, unexcelled beauty of the stars, well-balanced casts, superior technique and so forth have had nothing to do with the case. These merits are acknowledged today and will help to retain what we have already won, but they did not bring a single buyer to this country.

The foreign buyers came here simply because the war drove them out of business in Europe. The restrictions were so many and the shipments so uncertain that conditions became unbearable.

They came to this country to buy in large quantities, to open up new markets for our pictures, to pay, as a rule, higher prices than in France or Italy for brands and "stars" that meant less in their territorities than Galatea or La Tortajada in New York, and on top of all this with the prospect of a long and costly struggle at home to eliminate the prejudice, prevailing at that time, against our artistic production.

At the present time, after two years of constant effort, we find the American film introduced in every Spanish and Portuguese-speaking market and in actual control of some of them. But this has been accomplished IN SPITE of the American producers, who have stuck to the take-it-or-leave-it system, and it would be fatuous to disguise the fact that a feeling of resentment has arisen among many of the foreign exchanges and their representatives in this country.

Are these foreign film men right in their contention that it is impossible to do business with American producers in a business-like way?

Now we said at the beginning of these notes that the war could not last forever, and it seems pretty certain that it will not last a year longer.

Is it not about time, therefore, that the American producers and distributors gave some serious thought to the question of holding on after the war to what they have acquired during the past two years?

Or will they be satisfied to relinquish these markets as soon as Europe is ready for business again?

Today our stars are familiar to the public and generally admired, our brands are known, some have become famous and considered superior to anything produced in Europe, but owing to our haphazard methods in dealing with Latin-America, amounting to absolute non-cooperation in most cases, it can be stated, without fear of exaggeration, that as surely as the war cannot last forever, we will have to give up our preponderance in those markets if this policy of aloofness—or lack of policy—is not changed.

And the change, to be effective, will have to take place before the war is over—NOW.

Mexico Picture-Wild

Cameraman Robert A. Turnbull Finds Business Improving in the Land of Revolutions—Large Returns to Exhibitors.

ROBERT A. TURNBULL, an American cameraman who has been traveling in Mexico, writes an interesting letter regarding conditions in that country. The general impression is that Mexico is torn from one end to the other with internal strife, but Mr. Turnbull reports that things have quieted down in many states and that business is good. Motion pictures are especially liked by the Mexicans and the profits are good as his report shows. The letter follows:

"I came here from the United States about three months ago to do some motion picture work for the Mexican Government and send a little news about the American films in this country. "Joan of Arc" is here and playing to packed houses, and the prices are, of course, much better than in the States. "Civilization" was also here last month and the owner cleaned up $10,000 in gold in a few towns. This man tells me that the film was shown in Mexico City and there it covered its cost in one month and also made $12,000 profit.

"Mexico is just picture wild, and most of the pictures shown here are French and Italian. Max Linder is the favorite. The shows start at 9 p. m. and continue until 12 p. m. They have a very funny way of charging admission: First you pay for the first two reels, then if you care to stay for the rest of the show a collector comes and you pay so much more. They call this "Tandas." First tanda means first part of the show, of course you can buy all of the show at one time and you save that trouble.

"Mexico City has now three studios producing pictures and no doubt it is the coming country for the game. I have offers to go with one of these studios.

"Things are shaping up very fine. I have been to three states and find that they are working and very peaceful, took some scenics through the states of Campeche, Tabasco, and Yucatan, and the wonderful Maya Indian ruins which date back to the year 1,000 A. D. One man, a millionaire, makes pictures as his hobby. He produced a picture called "1810," which is the Mexican Independence year. He built the forts, houses, streets, canons, etc.—everything a la Griffiths; even imported some scenic artists from Cuba to do the sets. It cost him about $6,000 in gold. He took the picture, developed it, cut it, and showed it, all by himself and he had never seen a motion picture studio in his life. It was a one man business and he paid for all the expense, even hired a cook and took him to his hacienda so that the actors could have their eats. In one of the scenes he used 1,000 regular soldiers.

"I saw the picture on the screen and it was not bad at all, the photography was perfect. Out of this ten-reel feature he has made $7,000, that goes to show how these people will go to see any kind of a picture. They are easy to please and will pay the price.

"Anything I can do for you while here will be gladly done. Will be in Los Angeles by the fifteenth of September, but will return to Mexico City. I was cameraman for Lubin and on the Mutual program for the last two years, and made 'The Planter,' in Guatemala, with Tyrone Power."

Brazil As a Film Producer

First Attempts Have Not Given Great Promise —Possibilities of Large Profits Inducing Further Efforts

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, August 8.

SEVERAL efforts have been made by local capital to form producing companies in the Brazilian field, but the most serious organization has not been able to get results expected. The great American companies' success has led some men of money to believe that all they have to do is to throw a few acts on the screen and become rich overnight. A film put on here recently did not follow closely the rules of the game, and nothing more was heard of it.

A French name for the film, an American actress for the leading part, a Brazilian supporting company, Brazilian scenes the plot of German villainies, the place Belgium—all this international mixture failed to put the film across. "Le Film du Diable" was the title. The Brazilian male lead made no attempt to make up the German part he essayed; his Francis Ford whiskers plainly put him out of the part. The film began by showing several flashes telling what the poor film industry was trying to do for Brazilians. After this the audience expected to go on with the play, but the screen was further occupied by a long series of scenes in and around Rio de Janeiro. These had nothing to do with the play.

Briefly the story was that of a young woman taken over by the officer of a German regiment invading Belgium. She is made the plaything of the officer after his troops had killed all the members of her family. She escapes after a time and is seen by friendly soldiers and taken to the shed where they are lodged. While asleep her spirit is made to leave the body and go out to seek revenge for the infamies perpetrated against her and her parents. Just outside she meets his Satanic majesty, who gives counsel as to what she should do. Here the spirit of evil and the spirit of good come to blows. The spirit of good is represented by a naked woman, who constantly confronts the devil.

The naked woman appears always in the distance, but toward the end of the film there is a close-up showing her talking to the devil. The woman who played this part was plainly agitated by her emotions, and did poor justice to the part through nervousness. The girl returns to her place in the shed, and the line on the screen puts an end to the misery of the audience by saying: "The rest of this play will appear soon." Nothing more has followed.

There were some beautiful backgrounds made up from the many landscapes around Rio de Janeiro. The leading woman did a good bit of work in an unattractive part. Not one of the male characters could be called interesting. The aid of the press—which is ever ready to give advice and offer suggestions—was not invoked before the play was put on. A few changes here and there would have done wonders.

Another and more serious attempt is being made by the Sociedade Anonyma Brasil-Film to portray interesting plays. This company has gone into the field better equipped than any other. It appreciates the necessity for organization and equipment. Its staff is made up of Dr. Octavio de Souza Leão, G. Maxwell de Souza Bastos and Humberto Taborda. The artistic director is Eduardo Victorino. The latter was quoted as saying that his company would be equipped to produce any and all classes of film with the best photographic and artistic accompaniments. The company is said to count on the best work of native authors, which, in conjunction with the excellence of the marvelous landscapes and other beauties of Brazil, should guarantee success. No secret is made of the fact that the organizers and directors of the new company will adapt foreign processes to local needs, depending on the natural methods of expression of its actors to make its plays appreciated.

The company plainly seems to fear lack of capital, but the success of American enterprises is mentioned to show that success comes to those who invite it. The European war did not keep American companies from going ahead. The Moving Picture World is quoted to show that the United States counts some thirty big moving picture companies, and the new Goldwyn organization is cited to prove that money is to be made in the film game. The capital of the Goldwyn company is said to be $3,000,000, and the director is quoted as saying that these fabulous figures should stimulate Brazilians to their best efforts to produce films for local consumption. The director thinks that local capital will be difficult to obtain. Artistically, he thinks the "art of gesture and of facial expression is a little more difficult" in the making of films than in theatrical productions. If it be true that a good film actor must have a good mimicry, then it is equally true that he must possess a good oral expression. Due to the briefness of many film scenes, and lack of time for good preparation of dialogues, expression is sometimes necessarily more intense, more rapidly executed. This, claims the director, makes impossible the development of an actor. (It should be noted that up to this point the necessity of making good film actors was not appreciated.) When asked if the making of actors was a question of time, Mr. Victorino said:

"We are bringing from Italy and France three women and two men. These will serve as models, and our own artists will be formed after them."

Some of the higher schools of Brazil are using the moving picture as part of the study course. Mr. Victorino thinks the use of films should be extended to the lower schools by order of the educational authorities, giving studies in geography, history, agricultural and general information.

The company has already received and read more than forty subjects for its production, but only two have actually been filmed, "In the Abyss" and "Between Two Loves." The latter was not received with any particular fervor, and the former was hardly noticed. The director claims for "Between Two Loves" (Entre Dois Amores) that it is a play without adultery and without death. It is a simple study of characters. Mingled with scenes of beauty in Rio de Janeiro, of picturesque landscapes, of scenes of simple rural life, there is shown a struggle of hearts because of the defects or blemishes of education. Love, naturally, permeates the picture, from which comes forth a delicate emotion.

The program of the Brasil-Film includes works of science and propaganda. The director says the company has in preparation a large work for the benefit of commerce and industry in Brazil.

Worth special mention here is the success of the Nacional Film. Incidents of importance are shown the day after the event—the arrival of the American fleet, the various reecptions and the big parade on the Fourth of July were projected in several theaters in a remarkably short time. Any happening of local interest is sure to be taken and distributed.

TERRISS JOINS VITAGRAPH.

Tom Terriss has been specially engaged to play opposite Miss Alice Joyce and direct her productions. The first picture, which he is now working upon, is a Robert W. Chambers story, entitled, "Anne's Bridge," to be followed by one of Mr. Chambers' most successful stories. Mr. Terriss left the head of his own corporation as the Vitagraph made such an attractive proposition.

Russia a Profitable Field

N. S. Kaplan Says Revolution Has Removed One Obstacle to American Productions—Rest Up to Producers.

THE opening of a new market for American made film productions, one that will eventually prove to be very profitable, is seen in late news despatches from Russia by the representative of the Moscow Art theater in this country, N. S. Kaplan. From his studios last week he received details of one very tangible result for good already made possible by the revolution. The democratization of the Russian stage and screen is assured under the new regime. This means, says Mr. Kaplan, that not only will the wealth of Russian artistic production be available for the entire world, but that the obstacles hitherto placed in the way of the revelation of foreign achievement will be to a certain extent eliminated.

"When I say that Russia will prove a profitable field for American motion picture producers," said Mr. Kaplan, "I do not overlook the difficulties in the way of final success. American films have been shown in Russia, usually with little success. This lack of appreciation of your productions may be traced to two causes. One the revolution has just eliminated. The other is up to the American producer.

"Russian audiences must be studied by the producer who is not familiar with their demands. As I have said so many times the Russian playgoer insists on two things; he must have a story that is based on a foundation of realism and truth, and he demands that the players be artists. If I may say so, these essentials are often lacking in the best of American productions. Here the theatergoing public is a composite of so many different elements that a picture play generally has an appeal to one element or another. Russia is Russia, where the people have been forced to stifle aspirations, to repress their human feelings and to cringe before the oppressor. This heritage of centuries has left its mark. The Russian must be educated out of his bondage. When the American producer perceives this and selects carefully from such productions as he may make those which portray real life then he will find an enthusiastic reception in Russia.'

Mr. Kaplan compares the system by which the stars of the screen are developed in America and in Russia to emphasize his point that the failure of films made here is due to some extent to the American policy of accepting stars who have not justified their position either by experience or ability.

"But the main point of my prediction that America will find a profitable field for its film output in Russia is the announcement that has just come to me regarding the abolition of strict government direction of the stage. My studio manager tells me that the artistic management of the imperial theaters is to be autonomous. This means that a large number of theaters will have a wider range of selection than formerly. American promoters have found that even if they had an attraction that found favor in Russia they soon exhausted the available theaters for presentation. This, I believe, will be changed under the new regime. The greater the opportunity given the greater will be the possibilities of successful export of the screen productions of the United States in Russia.

"Another point, perhaps a frivilous one, is suggested by the overthrow of the monarchial form of government. Hitherto it has been well nigh impossible for many lovers of drama to obtain seats at the theaters. The government subsidized the playhouses and in return exacted more than half the capacity in reservations for the various dignitaries of the court. The best way to obtain a pair of seats in the old days was to be some kind of a relative of some attache of the court. The system discouraged enthusiasm for the drama among those who would have made it profitable. Now the bars are down and there is a splendid nucleus for a great theatergoing public in the new republic.

"Anything that applies to the dramatic stage in Russia applies to the screen as well. There is no fine distinction there. I hope to arrange while I am here for the exchange of Russian Art films and the best American productions. I believe the two peoples can form an alliance of art that will be everlasting."

KATE PRICE IN COMEDY SERIES.

Kate Price, the jolly comedienne and screen favorite of long standing, is to appear again before her motion-picture public in a series of six of the "Sparkle" comedies released through General Film Company. With her as co-actor will be seen Billy Rugh, one of the best character comedians of the film.

New Sales Manager for Select

C. E. Shurtleff, Formerly with Pathe and V-L-S-E, Comes Into the New Organization.

Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, is rapidly strengthening the sales staff of that organization. He has just brought into the Select camp C. E. Shurtleff, who assumes position as sales manager for Select Pictures.

Mr. Shurtleff is well known in the trade because of the special work which he has done for the Pathe organization. As special representative for Pathe during the past year Mr. Shurtleff organized a sales system which proved remarkably effective. He spent much time organizing and reorganizing the Pathe sales force and bringing it up to a high standard of efficiency. He first entered the Pathe organization as manager of the Cleveland branch.

Three years ago Mr. Shurtleff joined the World Film Corporation, afterwards leaving it to go with the V-L-S-E as branch manager, being in turn in charge of exchanges at Detroit, Cincinnati and Cleveland, at which points he made a high record for sales and business transactions. It was to join Pathe that he relinquished his V-L-S-E connection.

With Select, Mr. Shurtleff will devote his energies especially to producing a highly efficient sales corps, and to this end intends to make a comprehensive study of fields covered by Select exchanges.

"Intensive cultivation of territory is an important phase of the program which I expect to follow in handling Select Pictures. I am strongly impressed with the value of the personal equation in selling pictures, and I believe that both exchange managers and salesmen should thoroughly acqaint themselves with the personnel of the exhibitors throughout the territory which they are expected to cover, and should make a thorough study of the conditions existing in each locality in order to more intelligently supply that locality's needs. With this object in view I shall doubtless spend about half of my time in the field getting acquainted with exhibitors and keeping in close touch with our branch executives and with their sales forces," said Mr. Shurtleff.

"Nothing can quite equal the personal sizing up of conditions on the spot, and by following this method it is my hope to make the distribution of pictures through Select exchanges as near perfect as it is possible to bring picture distribution when the rapidly changing conditions in all the various territories are considered.

"In the short time that I have been with Select I have already become impressed with the tremendous opportunities which this organization holds forth to live exhibitors, and also to its own many employees."

BEBAN SIGNS NEW CONTRACT WITH PARAMOUNT.

Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, has just announced the completion of arrangements whereby the famous impersonator of Latin types, George Beban, will remain as one of the galaxy of stars who are engaged in making pictures for Paramount, and that at least two more Beban productions will be released following "Lost in Transit," which went to exhibitors September 3d.

During his period of activity in Paramount pictures Mr. Beban has done some of the most appealing, wholesome and thoroughly satisfying photoplays that have ever been produced. In each and every one there has been pre-eminently featured a type of Latin character which in itself was worthy of commemoration in the annals of dramatic representation. It is conceded that Beban is an artist without a peer in his line, and he has had the advantage of excellent vehicles, splendid support and productions, to which the most careful attention and sumptuous investiture has been given.

MARIE DRESSLER GOES TO CALIFORNIA.

Marie Dressler and her staff quit the Goldwyn studios at Fort Lee last week for California and sunlight. Accompanied by her director, her secretary and her cameramen, the famous comedienne is Hollywood-bound in a private car. When she will return is a matter for conjecture.

Prints of "Tilile, the Scrub Lady" are being prepared and will soon be ready for distribution for trade showings throughout the country. Miss Dressler has approved the scenario for her second comedy, and work on it will begin with her arrival at Los Angeles. She will make eight pictures a year for exclusive distribution by Goldwyn.

"In Old Canton and New Shanghai" (Paramount-Holmes).

TWO of the most interesting cities of China are Canton and Shanghai, to which Burton Holmes takes us in this release of his travel pictures. In Canton we see much that belonged to the old regime, as well as much that pertains to the progress associated with the new. As we jog through the narrow streets of Canton in a coolie-carried chair we realize that in these streets no wheeled vehicle could navigate, and we gaze on sights and types totally unfamiliar to many of us. Once in a while we see school boys drilling, which suggests to us the spirit of a new China. And we will even see a corps of Boy Scouts. There is also to be noticed the new woman of China, whose feet are larger than those of her sister of the old regime. Then we meander on to Shanghai, which is an international city. Here we see British tramways crowded with Chinese, while British East India policemen direct the traffic. We will notice, too, the absence of pigtails, for the Chinaman of the Republic has cut off his pigtail. There are trolley cars in Shanghai, another mark of progress in contrast to the man-trundled vehicles so common in Chinese cities.

"Historic Monterey" (Educational).

This picture presents in an interesting way the scenes of beauty along the Bay of Monterey and also about the town. The well-known seventeen-mile drive is, of course, included, and at various points of interest along the way progress is halted while we stop to gaze at Point Joe, Point Lobos, or the Lone Cypress tree. It will be remembered that one of the charms of this drive is the fringe of cypress trees, with delightful glimpses of the shore. This is a beautiful scenic number.

"The Orang Volunteers" (Educational-Ditmars).

Among his charges at the Zoo, Raymond L. Ditmars discovered an unusually precocious orang; and in a picture, to which he has skilfully added a patriotic touch, he has shown us many of the animal's clever tricks. He starts him out husking corn on a patriotic farm and shows him to us at the close of a strenuous day mopping his brow with a handkerchief. He throws stones with curious dexterity, and is then given lessons in rifle shooting. To this form of bombardment he does not take very readily, for after experiencing for the first time the recoil of a gun he shows the white feather and returns to his former method of stone throwing. One of the most amusing things in the picture is the clever manner in which the orang dressed in soldier's uniform stretches himself out on the ground to take aim in true military fashion. This picture is one of Ditmars best.

"The Mussel Pearl Industry" (General Film-Selig).

The scenes of this picture, which will be found in No. 17 of the Selig World Library, were taken at the White River, Arkansas. The mussel pearl industry has grown to be an important one, netting those who engage in it large sums of money. The mussel pearls, which are obtained by steaming open the shells, are used in the making of jewelry; while the shells which form the most profitable part of the mussel are used in the manufacture of pearl buttons.

"The Sugar Industry of Java" (General Film-Selig).

In this picture, which is a part of the Selig World Library No. 17, we learn how the sugar cane is planted, as well as how it is converted into the sugar we use. The cane is cut into short pieces, which are planted in mud beds prepared in trenches. Then the harvesting of the sugar cane is shown, and its transportation to the mills, where it is put through a crushing machine and its juice later put through an evaporating process and treated with sulphuric acid and lime to remove impurities. This subject is well illustrated.

"The Production of Fine Table Salt" (Universal).

In Screen Magazine No. 33 will be found a good illustration of the method in which fine table salt is manufactured. We learn from the picture that the brine is forced up by compressed air into large centrifugal tanks, where it is allowed to remain for forty-eight hours in order that the impurities may settle. The brine is then run through hot vats for evaporation purposes. The evaporation process completed a scraper is placed in the vat, which pushes the salt onto a belt which carries it to the centrifugal drivers, where it revolves at the rate of from 850 to 1,000 revolutions per minute. This machine also automatically weighs the salt and places it in bags for the purpose, which are then passed on to operators, who sew the bags.

"Helping Men Go Straight" (Universal).

The work of the industrial schools and prison reformatories in connection with the Department of Corrections of the City of New York is a wonderful and important one, as is shown in the scenes photographed at one of these institutions for the Screen Magazine No. 33. The picture shows how the boys arriving at the farm are made to feel at home. Before they are put to work on the farm each boy is thoroughly examined by a doctor and reported on. We are shown the various branches of farming which these boys are taught to do, including the care of chickens, pigs and cows. They are taught how to raise the finest vegetables and fruits, and are then shown how to can these for winter use. We also see the boys at recreation, and learn that drilling is one of the principal daily exercises. There is much to interest in this subject, as illustrated in the Screen Magazine.

"Preparation of Pasteurized Milk" (E. I. S.).

A picture of possibly two reels, showing the method used by one of our large dairy concerns in pasteurizing milk, was made by the E. I. S. Film Company and exhibited at the Strand Theater, New York City. The picture opens with views of cattle grazing, and draws attention to some fine specimens of breeding stock. Then we are taken to the stables, which are receiving one of their two daily cleanings. Here we see the cows washed and milked, after which the milk is weighed and placed in clean receptacles. The exact details of the pasteurization of the milk are then shown, when we feel perfectly satisfied that the manner in which the milk at this dairy is handled is perfectly sanitary.

"The Principle of the Gyroscope" (Mutual-Gaumont).

An interesting and clearly defined explanation of the gyroscopic principle as applied to the monorail car and the motion of the earth will be found in Reel Life No. 73. The demonstration is given by Professor Newkirk of the University of Minnesota, with a miniature monorail car suspended on a wire, and the gyroscopic bar-bell and dumb-bell, as well as with a miniature body representing the earth turning on its axis.

"Student Officers" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In Reel Life No. 73 we have a good illustration of how student officers are trained to undertake the duties of coast defense. Here we see them being instructed on how to manipulate a fleet of battleships on a dummy map 50x50. The use of big guns in coast defense work, and the laying out of fort cities is interesting by way of instruction. The sending up of aerial observation kites and the movement of an artillery corps across a temporary bridge, which can be erected or displaced at will, are also features of interest.

Co-Operative Work for Better Films

National War Council of Y. M. C. A. and National Committee for Better Films to Co-operate on Movement.

WITH THE co-operation of P. F. Jerome, Director of the Equipment and Supplies Division of the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A.s of the United States, comprehensive plans are being worked out by the National Committee for Better Films to take steps in the way of creating organizations of affiliated committees in cities where up to this time there has been but little interest in the Better Film Movement. The secretaries of various social welfare organizations, it is expected, will take an active part in calling conferences of groups of individuals in each locality looking to the formation of a definite committee which will adopt a program for co-operation with some local exhibitor. The plan presupposes that exhibitors will welcome the co-operative support thus assured them. The present plan of the Committee is to cover the following states systematically: West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, Oklahoma, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota. Already correspondence is under way, and the outlook is hopeful for active results.

FOUR MINUTES.

Operating under the authority of the Committee on Public Information of Washington, there has been organized in New York City a patriotic committee under the title of "Four Minute Men," whose particular work in the cause of national defense will be that of making four-minute talks in the moving-picture theaters. The brief talks must be of great importance, the brevity demanding both a force and thoroughness which shall attract and become effective. Each speaker will be duly authorized and a standard policy of subjects and subject-matter required. The necessities of the war, truths desired to be promulgated by the Government will be given first importance, and the moving-picture houses afford abundant occasions for reaching large numbers of people effectively. Again we gladly help!

A correspondent writes that moving pictures are to be exhibited in the school houses in Jones County, Mississippi, under the auspices of the Farm Demonstration agents, T. J. Cook and G. E. Hailes.

The Russian Parents' League, said to have a membership of some 50,000 in more than 200 cities and towns of Russia, has become interested in the subject of motion-picture films for schools, and has asked the American consulate-general at Moscow for catalogues and instructions in the use of such films. While the inquiry does not promise a large business, as the league will undoubtedly take most of the pictures it displays in order to present a familiar background and setting, there is an opportunity for friendly co-operation between American and Russian educators, with possibly incidental business. The address of the league is Vserossisky Roditelsky Soyus, Balchug No. 15, apart. 7, Moscow, Russia. The English language may be used in correspondence.

The following are longer dramatic pictures for young people which have been used successfully for special programs in theaters:

Artcraft—"Wild and Wooly," "The Little American"; Bluebird—"A Kentucky Cinderella"; Metro—'Lady Barnacle," "The Slacker"; Mutual—"The Immigrant"; Triangle—"The Clodhopper," "Paws of the Bear," "American—That's All," "The Sawdust Ring"; Pathe—"Fires of Youth"; Paramount—"A Roadside Impresario," "The Cook of Canyon Camp; K-E-S-E—"The Man Who Was Afraid."

SELECTING CAST TO SUPPORT MABEL NORMAND.

Among the players already selected by Casting Director Adolph Klauber to surround Miss Normand and to carry out this idea of straight comedy are Robert Elliott, a favorite screen player since his appearances on the stage as leading man to Margaret Illington; William Fredericks, the character player; Joseph Smiley, well known for his work as actor and director during the last months of the Lubin Company, and John Webb Dillion, seen recently with Fox in "The Darling of Paris."

Intolerance for Picture Houses

Griffith Decides to Offer Mammoth Production for Popular Exhibition.

BY CABLE arrangements, completed within the past few days, D. W. Griffith will present his great spectacle, "Intolerance," this season in the representative picture theaters of America. This means that the same care and elaborateness which were shown in the handling of the Griffith spectacles on their special tours of the country will be carried out when "Intolerance" is transferred to the regular picture field.

It is nearly four years since Mr. Griffith has been a direct contributor to the screens of the representative motion picture theaters. In the interim he has built up a greater following for his newer form of art than had been dreamed possible in photoplays up to the time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched upon its phenomenal career. Perhaps no one man associated with the art of the camera had done so much to elevate the tone of pictures and to increase their popularity as Mr. Griffith. It is fitting that his return to his favorite field will be with his crowning achievement, "Intolerance."

Great plans are being made by Mr. Griffith's forces to present his production in a way that will further add to the popularity of the picture theaters. It will be handled by experts in every branch and given on the same magnificent scale that has marked the Griffith productions from the time the director-producer made his first venture outside the confines of the popular-priced houses.

Limited engagements will be booked in the representative motion picture theaters of the principal cities of the country. This opens up a new and larger field for Mr. Griffith, and is made possible by the many splendid picture theaters that have been built since he began to make his elaborate productions. At the time Griffith's first big schemes of spectacular offerings were being formulated the opportunity to show his productions was so limited that he was forced to go to the old-line theaters and make a new place for the art of photoplays. Picture theaters have breasted up with modern requirements in the new art since then, and Griffith's return to that fold is an event which thoroughly demonstrates the advancements which have been made in the past four years.

Experts who have grown up in the Griffith organization will lay out a complete campaign and every detail looking to the success of the presentation will be attended to. This will cover the advance promotion, the advertising, the atmospheric projection and the musical accompaniment of the great four-fold story, which is unquestionably one of the most remarkable motion picture spectacles the world has ever seen.

Distributing offices for the bookings of "Intolerance" have been opened at 508 Longacre Building, and the scheme of presenting this spectacle under the new conditions will be entirely separated from any other venture with which Mr. Griffith is identified.

VIOLET HEMING IN BLACKTON PICTURE.

That Commodore J. Stuart Blackton intends to engage only stars of recognized merit for his forthcoming productions for Paramount is evidenced by the fact that Violet Heming, well known on the stage and on the screen, has been engaged by Commodore Blackton to star in his adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Judgment House." Violet Heming, who will play Jasmine in "The Judgment House," is one of the best known of the many celebrated English actresses who have come to this country. She has already appeared in one Paramount picture and recently played opposite H. B. Warner in "The Danger Trail." She made a great success in the leading role of the great war drama, "Under Fire," in which she appeared with William Courtney, and has to her credit a large number of successful stage appearances. Wilfred Lucas and Florence Deshon, both film players of recognized ability, are to appear in support of Miss Heming, while Conway Tearle, famous on the stage and screen, and one of the most popular leading men of the day, will play opposite Miss Heming.

NOTABLE CAST FOR "NEARLY MARRIED."

Comedians of note are in the cast supporting the Goldwyn comedienne, Madge Kennedy, in the filming of "Nearly Married," Edgar Selwyn's successful comedy, which is nearing completion at the Goldwyn Fort Lee studios. Among them are Frank Thomas, Mark Smith, Alma Tell, Richard Barthelmess and Hedda Hopper.

Popular Picture Personalities

GIBSON, Helen Rose. Born in Cleveland, Ohio. Her father was Swiss and her mother a German. Weighs 140 pounds and is five and a half feet tall. Dark brown hair and hazel eyes. Miss Gibson made her debut away back in 1914 —which is far back in Pictureland, and then she worked for the Bison-101 company. Later on she went to Kalem and is now with the Universal. Some of her appearances have been in The Test of Courage, The College Boys' Special and the Longpoint Feud. She writes that her fads are driving, riding, skating and camping. Camping is all right around Universal City; no one can ask for a better camping location than most any part of southern California, but it is unlikely that she gets much chance to indulge in skating in a place where snow is a s scarce as ice is said to be in another and even warmer locality t h a n California.

Helen Rose Gibson

HOWELL, Alice. Born in New York City. Irish parentage. Is five feet, two inches tall and weighs 130 pounds. Fair complexion, red hair and brown eyes. Miss Howell has not been upon the speaking stage, but started in pictures with the Keystone, later going to L-Ko and now heads her own company known as Century Comedies. Considering the fact that her first appearance with Keystone was in January, 1914, in Beans to Billions, her rise to stellar honors has been rapid, but she has a sense of humor that gets over and she is not afraid to take chances or to make herself look ugly, indeed she prefers to look in character and sends a character picture even for reproduction. Many women think they are born comediennes, but few stand the test of time. Miss Howell has stood the test. Her fads are motors, horses, dogs and not filling in questionaires. The latter seems to vie with all out door sports.

Alice Howell

ARMAND, Aida. Born in Buenos Aires. American parentage. Three feet, six inches tall and weighs 43 pounds. Light complexion, golden brown hair and brown eyes. Little Miss Armand is only four years old, and has most of her career before her, but she has already made a name for herself as a dancer and reciter at social affairs, and she was the little ragged girl in the Clara Kimball Young production of The Foolish Virgin and the smallest model in The Runaway with Julia Sanderson. She is studying classical dancing under competent teachers and wants to be an interpretive dancer some day. She is also fond of drawing, and has quite a repertoire of recitations for so small a tot. She likes motoring and swimming and can go through the water like a Kellermann, though perhaps not so fast yet. Perhaps some day she will be specializing in Mermaid pictures and beating Miss Kellermann.

Äida Armand

MULHALL, John Joseph, ("Jack"). Born in New York City. Irish parentage. Is five feet, eleven inches tall and weighs 154 pounds. Ruddy complexion, dark brown hair and blue eyes. Mr. Mulhall made his stage debut in 1909, and has played stock, including the West End Stock in New York City, with James K. Hackett in "The Grains of Dust," and with Ned Wayburn productions. In April, 1913, he went over to pictures and his first screen apeparance was with the Biograph stock in the days of its greatest popularity, the first picture being "The House of Discord." He is now a member of the Universal, playing leads. Some of his best liked plays have been The Gang's New Member, The Terror, Mr. Dolan, of N. Y., Fighting for Love and Playing Safe. True to form, he likes all out door sports, but he has another liking for "plays without a heavy vamp," and a large community rises to endorse his choice.

Jack Mulhall

FORTH, George J. Born in Philadelphia, American parentage, for the Forths settled in the Cumberland valley of Pennsylvania in 1742. Five feet 11 inches tall and weighs 170 pounds. Dark complexion, brown hair and eyes. Mr. Forth has no stage record, but he has been busy since he made his debut in pictures in March, 1917. Since then he has played in Vitagraph, Thanhouser and Edison productions, including The Sixteenth Wife with Peggy Hyland, Bobby's Bravery with Bobby Coneley, The Heart of Ezra Greer with Frederick Warde, The Girl from the Sea, with Shirley Mason and Roger Kendall in O. Henry's A Municipal Report. That is going some for a few months. Mr. Forth for the past five years has been personally stage managing his stock farm in Maryland, and still is owner and manager of a 350-acre estate there. He specializes in blooded stock. Is an all round athlete and is musically inclined.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Editing Film.

CONTRIBUTING to the Saturday Evening Post a series of stories on the Motion Picture industry, Rob Wagner has in turn told the stories of the director, the actor, the script writer and the rest. One late story deals with the experiences of an exhibitor. In the story he is made to say that he has houses in the Middle West, but the Wagner stories have been picked up on the Pacific Coast, and this story reads more nearly like the story of a live Pacific exhibitor. Probably most of the readers of this department have read the story and others interested can procure the issue. It is not our purpose to brief the article here, but to speak of what Mr. Wagner's exhibitor calls "film-assassins." The term is apt, for there is a growing and all too frequent tendency on the part of exhibitors to usurp the functions of the cutter and editor. We are not saying that many exhibitors cannot edit film more intelligently than many editors, but this is not the point. It is not a question of fitness but of results. To cut even a one-reel story is no light matter, and it should take more than a day to properly trim the last run of a five-reel picture, and many of these cuts would require new leader, yet an exhibitor will trim a five-reel story in an hour and never dreams of bridging the cuts. Many exhibitors speak with pride of their work, but even the best jobs are butchery and worse. It is unfair to the patron and to the producer alike. Let the producer stand on what he has done and let the patron see the film as he would have the patron see it, and not as the temporary renter thinks it should be seen. If a story is too palpably padded, do as Mr. Wagner's exhibitor does, and pass it over for another subject. In these days of rebookings and return dates the first-run fetich is impotent. Book only films of which you know, and having booked them—leave them alone. It would be bad to change the film if your patrons alone suffered, but all who come after you must suffer, too. If the scenes are properly trimmed the opening and closing are properly timed. Cutting out and replacing means the sacrifice of several frames; at least two frames for each splice, and presently the entrances are all wrong and the entire film looks botchy and inexpert. It is almost as bad as cutting out and saving bits of scenes that you take a fancy to, perhaps a pretty landscape, a closeup of some star or the risque scene. More than one exhibitor has from 500 to 2,000 feet of such material, stolen from exchanges, that he runs off for the delectation of his friends. It is a condition of affairs that should be stopped, and film cutting for any purpose other than repairing a break should be penalized, but it will not be possible to exact penalties until the exchanges so change their plans that proper inspection is made possible. There is something radically wrong on the entire system of release that is based upon dates. At least the exhibitors can help to the extent of keeping their hands off the film and giving others a chance to see the story as the director planned it and not as some not always competent authority thinks it should be arranged. Let's lay off it.

Here's a New One.

Now and then someone strikes something really new. F. S. Workman, of the Brainerd (Minn.) Amusement Co., sends in a cast sheet with this note:

> Inclosed find a cast which we are giving away each day. We have these changed according to program, which is sometimes daily, and our patrons are so pleased with them that I am passing the idea along. The ads pay the cost of the program, and the work of getting them up is nothing compared to the return to your feelings from the compliments paid by the patrons.

The casts are about four by five inches, printed on good grade white paper on one side only. The examples shown give those for two changes of showing how the space works for large and small cuts. These casts can be used with a weekly program and will, in a large measure, reduce waste on these larger issues. Moreover, they are a real convenience to the patron, since they are small and handy. Mr. Workman has evolved a winner and the wonder is that no one thought of this scheme before.

Starts a Program.

J. H. Ziegler, of the Bluebird theater, Orangeburg, S. C., sends in number five of a new program and writes:

> This is one of your ideas that was taken from your book, "ADVERTISING FOR EXHIBITORS." We in the near future intend to make it larger and more interesting for the readers. In other words, to make a thing like this go you have to give them a large quantity of good, interesting items about the stars and plays; in this way you will make your program so popular that they will be waiting with eagerness to receive a copy of it.
>
> We will let you hear from us, from time to time, so that you may see our progress with it.
> We think your book, "ADVERTISING FOR EXHIBITORS," covers every branch of advertising that could be wished for by any exhibitor, and that every exhibitor should have one of these valuable books in his possession; there is unlimited amount of good advertising stunts in it. If we couldn't get another one like it, we wouldn't part with it for ten dollars.

The program is 5½ by 8½, in brown on white. The cut shows the front page and the two inside pages. The back carries the formal program with dated days. Where the back page program is used, we think it is a better form to omit the dated days over the stories and instead treat them as headed news items running into "to be shown Thursday, September 6," or whatever the date may be. The form shown in the cut is good where the formal program is not used, but it is better to use the formal program and omit the heavy dates over the readers, using instead of the "William Fox presents" something more on the order of a news head, such as Old and New.

The Hardwick Brothers, Clovis, N. M., are offering some old and some new ideas in a new program. The old idea is to give out a monthly program and offer to accept the same as five cents on the last day of the month. This is to insure the program being held through the period of its life. The announcement reads: "This program is worth 5 cents to you." A better catch line would be a twelve or even eighteen point. "We will pay you—" running down to an eight-point announcement to get

We Will Pay You

> To keep and read this program. It is good for the month of September. Note the attractions day by day, and on September 30th we will accept this program as five cents on the purchase of any ticket.

New ideas are plentiful. One points out that for five cents a head a worried parent may bring children to the matinee and shop in peace and comfort, and another paragraph words the old "If you like the show tell your neighbor, if not tell us." The new form is better and runs:

> If there are pictures that you would like to see tell us. We will try and get them for you. It is our business to please and amuse you. If you don't like the show tell us. Don't tell your neighbor; he can't improve it, but we can by getting what you want.

This carries a real argument instead of being merely a catch phrase. The program itself is decidedly neat, a vest pocket (though a bit large), on thin but stiff card. It is a bit costly, but it has to last a month, and it pays to make it last. If you spend four dollars a thousand for a one-week program it is worth six for better stock to run a month, and you save ten—if the program is held for a month.

Credit, Please.

The Stillman theater program is running a half column a week on how to write photoplays. When they lift stuff bodily from our photoplay department they might give a credit line now and then.

Makes His Own.

Evidently Ralph Ruffner means what he says when he declares that the stuff the manufacturers give him to work with is not good. He doesn't merely say it and keep on using the stuff. He says it and then proves it by getting something better. He writes—in all capitals:

WHEN I CALL IN A GOOD PHOTOGRAPHER TO SHOOT OUR LOBBY AND PAY THE BILL OUT OF MY OWN POCKET JUST TO FURNISH YOU WITH MAGNUM OPUS, I'M JUST FAR ENOUGH WEST TO BE INSTILLED WITH THE DEVOTION THAT WHAT IS WORTH DOING IS WORTH DOING WELL, AND AS LONG AS THE TRACK IS FAST AND MY WIND GOOD I'M GOING TO CHASE IT DOWN TO SEE IF IT REACHES YOU. THERE ISN'T A DAY GOES BY BUT WHAT I SEE HANDIWORK OF SOME ONE SOUL WHO IS COMPLETELY OUT OF TUNE WITH THE UNIVERSE FROM THE STANDPOINT OF USABLE STUFF FOR THE PICTURE THEATER MAN. I HAVE ARRIVED AT THE POINT WHERE I'M GOING OFF ON A TANGENT OF MY OWN. THE PHOTO HEREWITH IS EVIDENCE THEREOF. WITH THE KNOWLEDGE THAT MOST EVERY THEATER FROM THE ATLANTIC TO THE ORIENT USES THE SAME TOOLS TO WORK WITH, BE IT ONES, THREES, SIXES IN LITHOS OR HOME MADE CARDS, BANNERS OR SIGNS; A BUNCH OF PHOTOS, CUT-OUTS AND THE LIKE, I, FOR ONE, PRAYED FOR AN INSPIRATION THAT WOULD LEAD ME TO A SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEM, AND THE ANSWER IS FOUND IN THE LARGE TERRA COTTA PEDESTALS AND FLOWER BOXES. IF YOU WILL COMPARE THIS PHOTO WITH THE ONE SENT YOU SOME TIME AGO OF A DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS' LOBBY YOU WILL SEE HOW VERY FAR AWAY WE REALLY HAVE DEPARTED FROM THE OLD ORDER OF THINGS. THE COLOR SCHEME IS BLUE AND IVORY WHITE, AND ALL WERE MADE TO OUR ORDER. THEY WEIGH ABOUT A THOUSAND POUNDS EACH. LETTERING OF THE ATTRACTION CAN BE DONE ON THE FACE OF THF FLOWER BOX ITSELF OR PLACED ON A PATTERNED CARD TO FIT THE RECESS, AND CHANGED AS OFTEN AS NECESSARY. THEIR COST IS CONSIDERABLE, BUT IT IS ALL IN THE GAME. WE HAVE ACCOMPLISHED THAT WHICH WE SET OUT TO DO—TO PRESENT SOMETHING DIFFERENT, ARTISTIC AND ATTRACTIVE, TO DO IT WITHOUT THE AID OF FRAMES, PHOTOS OR BALLYS.

Somewhere around here is a cross-page cut of the Liberty lobby. There is a large glass dome that does not show in the reproduction because we cannot spare the space for glass, but we have reproduced the lobby in single column more than once. The reproduction to which Ruff specifically refers is a cross-page cut in the issue for March 31 of this year. If you have your file handy turn to that date and compare the present lobby with the last. One is the lobby of a picture theater, the other is the lobby of a theater. Not many Broadway houses offer as good a display. Just take this issue in your hand and go out and compare the picture with your own lobby. Not all houses can afford thousand pound flower boxes, but no house is too small to make some effort at decoration to avoid the old nickelodeon look.

Ruff is right. The majority of the stuff put out by the makers of film is rotten. Just plain rotten. No other word seems to fit. People of discernment and good taste are supposed to be appealed to by the sort of paper that would disgrace an old style Gus Hill or Al Woods melodrama. It is stuff that a self respecting manager hesitates to put on the boards and will not permit in the lobby. Many companies now pay particular attention to their helps for exhibitors. Bill Hines, of Paramount, for example, was a regular theatrical press man fifteen years back. He knows what the house needs and can give it. Other Paramount men have had similar experience. Other companies have similar men. Essanay, for example, has L. J. Scott, who came up from the small town theater through the larger house and the exchange to his present position. He knows. On the other hand there are too many still who merely suit themselves instead of seeking to suit the exhibitor. If the manufacturer of film played the houses on sharing terms it would not be three months before conditions were completely changed. Then he would get money only if he helped the house make money. But now he seems to figure that when one exhibitor goes broke another man with money will take the house, and the rentals will go on.

Ruffner solves the problem in his own way. He gets out his own lobby displays, his own drawn designs for the advertising, his own ballyhoos, and more and more he works to the quiet, refined side, because he finds that this brings him the better income. He can afford to because he has a large house and a large clientele. But what about the little man who is almost wholly dependent upon the manufacturer for his publicity material? The condition is all wrong.

We do not mean to say that a manufacturer should supply ornate lobby displays with each film, offer free photographs and all sorts of special matter, but each manufacturer should see to it that the paper is of the right sort and not the dead, odorous stuff that is all too common. It is hard to get directors to supply the proper stills, but they can be trained once the manufacturer realizes that the man is working for him and not he for his employees. The press man can get out good paper if only he gives more time to his work, and with proper paper probably houses would use more. Certainly the live wires would because they would find it good business to do so, but the day is passed when the spectacle of a man in dress clothes choking a woman in no clothes at all is regarded as "strong." It is too common to be strong any longer, and we have even seen it get a laughing comment.

If we had a house and belonged to the league we would make a fight for paper worth while, and we think that we would get it in time. Meanwhile the exhibitor individually must do the best he can, and he can do pretty well if he will do a little thinking. Ruff is "raising a holler" about bad paper, but he is not waiting for his kicks to bring results—he cannot afford to. In the meantime he is getting ouf his own displays, and is making business through these displays. If you cannot afford concrete flower boxes, you can adapt the idea. Don't blame all the bad business on the manufacturer's lethargy. Do your own share meanwhile. Get your own lobby looking so attractive that you can send a photograph of it to the manufacturer and write, "Do you expect me to put your punk paper in this beautiful lobby?"

Show the manufacturer that you are not merely kicking, but kicking with a reason, and he will be more apt to wake up himself. This department, if closely followed, will help you to get better, but you must learn to apply the ideas to your own use. And remember that variety is the chief appeal. Do not stick to a single idea. Vary your appeal. The Kashim house in Montreal gets out some remarkably good displays, but they are all the same sort and have come to be a sort of open aid Eden Musee. If you had a trick butcher shop for Arbuckle, and it paid, as probably it did, do not have a mechanical effect for the next attraction. Get something else—something different. It it novelty that counts. If you have had photograph frames in your lobby for three or four months take them out for a week. Nail photograph albums of the cheaper sort to light tables. Put the stills for the next attraction in these and post a card inviting the passer by to look them over. He will for the novelty of the thing. And before the novelty is exhausted get something else. Keep kicking for better helps, but meantime help yourself, and you will be more apt to find your prayers answered by the manufacturers. Ruff sets a good example. Follow his lead.

Found It Out.

J. H. Kennedy, of the Pavilion, Lemoore, California, in sending in his subscription adds:

> We have been trying to do without the Moving Picture World the last three months, but find that we cannot do so. It is certainly a great help to us as well as the operator.
>
> I am enclosed herewith one of latest advertising stunts.
> We send out about 300 of these postals every week, besides advertising in the newspapers and using a float about town.

That's the sort or letter we like to get. The man who changes over and finds that he cannot do without the Moving Picture World knows the real value of the paper, and knows that it offers more material of real value, intelligently presented, than any other publications or the lot of them. He has found that others papers may look the same, or even better, but after he has tried out the stunts and suggestions he begins to realize that something besides bushwa and printers' ink is necessary to get out a trade paper that is really worth while. The post card inclosed suggests Jay Emanuel's old layout (before he used dated days), with the date running down the side of the card in the shape of a line reading "A glimpse of what we have in store for you the week of July 8th." This is not as good as dated days. We would suggest that each day be dated and that a Roman be used in place of the full face body type, using the full face for titles and stars, or the stars may be put in italics. This full face works better than usual, because it is opened with lead, but a clean cut Roman would be better still for so small a card. The post card is the most economical form of mail advertising, since it requires no envelope and the stock is furnished free. It works so well that where the card is regularly used it would pay to provide some clip or frame into which the regular patrons may slip them as received. Perhaps some company will think out something of this sort. Meantime it is possible to get spring clips with a celluloid advertising button about the size of a half dollar, and these might be used, one being given each person on the mailing list, perhaps when the address is turned in, as a premium for the name.

Booming McCormick's Booming.

The Pathe Exchange has issued a special six page, newspaper size folder showing how S. Barrett McCormick boomed "The Tanks in Action at the Battle of Ancre." It makes a fine advertisement for this striking release, but it does a great deal more than this. It shows that with any attraction of merit good newspaper work will fill the house, in spite of the weather. The film played the Circle, Indianapolis, the last week in June. It broke the house records for attendance and receipts. The same can be done with any other strong feature, provided it is done well. A vital news subject is as good as a Pickford or a Fairbanks, providing you can get the feature. We are carefully saving our copy of the sheet. It is a study in advertising and advertising methods worthy of preservation. If you have not received a copy write the Pathe Exchange for one. Mr. McCormick is an old newspaper man—old in service rather than in years—who was pleading for ten cent shows in Denver when Denver was the deadest show town in the country. Later he went back and ran a quarter house in that same town and made so good that he was brought East to a more responsible charge. His entire success has been based upon advertising, but he knows that advertising is something more than putting any old copy into a given space in the newspapers. He knows that it must be the best and strongest argument he can conceive for that space and that it must be backed up by production, house, presentation and in every other way possible. He adroitly uses every department of the paper from the editorials to the society slush and he works hardest for the stuff that costs him nothing because he knows it is worth something. Get this campaign stuff, study it, and do as much as you can afford to do with your own next big subject. It will pay you so well that you will keep on doing it.

Artcraft's Organ.

Artcraft celebrates its first anniversary by inaugurating a house organ, Artcraft Advance, that carries a well designed cover in colors and some good reading inside. The best thing in the entire sheet is one of the ears on the editorial page that reads:

He profits most who serves the best.

If there were nothing else in the paper it would be worth while just for this compact guide to exhibiting, but the twelve pager is well edited (by Norman S. Rose) and swings into line with the rest of the house organs. Did it ever occur to you that the distributors find it plays to get out a house organ and that a house organ might pay you as well? It is the most personal form of general appeal. Note, too, that these house organs talk about themselves and not about general topics. Make your house organ talk about your house as well as your films. Help your patrons to realize how good your house is. It can be done.

Booming Himself.

The shoemaker's children are always out of their shoes and the tailor's boy has a hole in his trousers, but George Wotherspoon is a publicity artist who believes in taking his own medicine in liberal doses. He has concluded a two years' contract with a Western theatrical firm and is ready to book in elsewhere. To make himself known he has sent out a booklet of twenty-four pages and cover giving a brief account of himself and offering samples of every class of press work from phrases to page ads. The idea is unique. He does not say that he is good, but he proves it by his past performances. Here's success to a man who has ideas.

What About the Organs?

It has been more than a year, we think, since any exhibitor has written in about his free organ recitals? What has become of them? Time was when many houses featured their organs, some of them even giving special free recitals on Sundays when local laws did not permit Sunday shows. More houses than ever are now using organs and yet few, if any, seem to be using the organ recital as a business booster. Get up a series of invitation affairs. Invite the literary and musical societies, the clubs and lodges, school children and their teacher. Have programs suitable for each type of guest and you'll be surprised at the talk you'll get—and talk means business.

Neatly Put.

In its monthly calendar the Elite theater, Merced, California, announces an increase in prices by saying:

> We believe in preparedness and are compelled to offset our increased expenses by a few changes August 1st. On and after this date children between five and fifteen years will be charged 10 cents. Children under this age will be admitted free, but must refrain from exercising their vocal chords. Our patrons object.

This is so well put that no one can object, where "Crying children must be removed" would assuredly garner the maternal goats.

Analysis.

ABOUT the best study in plotting we know of is the editorial advertisement of the Popular magazine appearing in the back of each issue. The editor is talking of stories to come, but most of these announcements are studies in plotting. In a recent issue the editor explains that publications are of two sorts—"class" and "punch". Class he describes as "fiction that might have been written by a professor of English who had devoted his spare time to psychological study," which has the drawback of being "either an exhibition of hairsplitting as regards human emotion and character or a good enough study of still life". Passing on he comes to "punch" in these words:

> And now we come to the school of fiction with the "punch". The idea on which this is based is sounder, if less elegant. Fiction should have "punch", and lots of it. The great difficulty with the fiction of plot and incident is that too often it has little else. It is badly written. It gives no clear impressions or visualizations. It tells us nothing that we don't know, and, what is more, it tells us many things that we know to be untrue if we stop to think about them. The whole fault is not with the idea itself, but with the people who are trying to put the punch into the fiction. In almost every case the man writing or buying and publishing this sort of work imagines himself above his task. He is not consulting his own taste; he is consulting the taste of an imaginary public—a collection of beings without reflection, discrimination, or powers of reasoning. He feeds them clothing-store advertisements for heroes, and calendar pictures for heroines. His villains have been cast aside as worn out by writers of melodrama ten years ago. Incident he gives you, but it is purely physical incident, such as automobile chases, explosions, fist fights, and murders. All these things have their place, but our idea of action and incident is something with more pith and meaning to it. Ask the purveyor of these wares why he does it, and he tells you that he would like to do something better—he means the "classy" stuff—but that this is what the public want. All the readers want or understand is clatter for action, clamor for conversations, and motion for emotion.

The writer is talking of fiction in print and not fiction in film, but he accurately describes the attitude of too many motion picture purveyors, manufacturers, editors and directors, who affect to look down upon the cheap tastes of their patrons, who offer the mechanical punch instead of the mental appeal and then curse the flatheads because they cannot appreciate even this.

A more intelligent appreciation and less of the spirit of contempt would doubtless bring better results, but it is difficult to make the average producer and manufacturer realize that his cheap little tricks should be put back into the bag and sent to storage while he labors for a more intelligent appeal. Even the children are no longer thrilled by the purely mechanical punch. It is no longer possible to excite even the ten and twelve year olds with train wrecks and aeroplane flights. The appeal should lie in the reason for the flight or the wreck, but most producers believe that the wreck alone is sufficient. It is a pity that there exists no system for gatherineg the opinions of the patrons. Did such a system exist, makers of film stories would be shocked at the results. People these days mostly go to the pictures in spite of their poorness, rather because of their merits. It is only a question of time when this failure to appreciate the real taste of the public will result in the creation of newer and more successful brands.

Not Quite Right.

H. Tipton Steck, in his article in the big issue, seems to suffer from astigmatism of memory when he remarks that he was instrumental in pushing along to us our first photoplay check. He also claims first payment to Emmett Campbell Hall, and to have used the first idea of Roy McCardell. Mr. Steck never took one of our stories for Essanay, and we did not even send a story to Essanay until more than a year after we had purchased a half reel comedy from Mr. Steck for the use of the Lubin company. More than that Lubin took the first story Emmett Campbell Hall sold, and Roy McCardell's first idea was turned out for the Biograph company back in the last century, for Roy was the first paid script writer in the business, and "wrote" the ideas for the Mutoscope that were also put out as Biograph film because it did not cost anything.

Building Up.

As we sit here writing we can look out on the surface of a small lake. This morning the water was like glass, but the wind came up and has grown in intensity, working on the water until there is now a decided ripple. By afternoon it is probable that there will be whitecaps on the waves, and the water will be dashing up on the beach. You cannot say just when the change came. First there was the occasional ripple on the surface, then the ripple became permanent, and now and then some gust made an extra large wave. It is the same way with a story. Start with placidity and work up to a storm, not immediately; not violently, but so gradually that you sense only the fact that the story grows more tense because the facts have become more vital. You cannot do that with machine-made sensation. The turmoil must rise from the story or you are like a small boy trying to create a storm with an oar blade. You can make an awful fuss for a moment in one locality, but it will not be convincing. It cannot be more than a small boy splashing about.

Adapting.

Here's an adaptation of the loose leaf idea to adaptation. One man who has gained some reputation in this line takes a pack of blank cards. As he reads the book he makes a separate note of each essential fact on one of the cards. When he has completed his reading he reads a second time for story alone. Then he takes the cards and distributes the facts into their proper place in the film story and proceeds to write his script. It often happens that a chance paragraph in the middle of the book gives a fact that in the film should appear earlier in the story than the first stated fact. By using the cards he is able to place the fact in its proper position, and he is also able to discard the non-essential facts. In adaptation the chief trouble lies in the proper orientation of facts. Phil Lang used to tell of his adaptation of a place in which the last line in the last act was the first scene in his screen version.

Suitability.

Lately an actor who came into pictures about a year ago told us that he was trying to get the rights to a certain story by a well-known author. "Just that one," he qualified. "The set is no good for pictures, but that one would make a peach of a story." He was right. There was just one story in a series of a dozen or more that would work into pictures. The rest were interesting fiction stories, but they did not have the making of motion pictures in them. The actor failed to get his single story because the entire series had been purchased by one of the large companies. Possibly this company knows that there is but one picture story in the lot, but they are looking to the author's name and the fact that the stories were printed in a widely circulated magazine to bring them back their money. There is no question as to the advertising value of the pictures, but the camera stories are not there, and yet they brought about the same price as another series from the same magazine that will lend themselves excellently to pictures. Even at this late day manufacturers are not yet ready to make picture stories, but are still fooling around with experiments. Both of the authors have written directly for the camera and have failed. Both could write for the camera if given coaching and encouragement, but manufacturers seem to prefer the second hand but advertised stuff.

Substitutions.

If you go into a grocery and ask for a pound of best butter, you will resent the efforts of the grocer to sell you oleomargarine. You want the best butter and not an imitation. You cannot exactly blame the grocer for trying to sell the substitute if he has no real butter, but you will not buy the oleo and you'll go somewhere else next time you want more butter. That's about the way a reel editor feels when he asks for only the best scripts and gets all sorts of junk. He wants what he wants and unless that is what you have to sell he wants none of your goods. Make certain that your scripts make more than good for their pure food label before you ship them out.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Defends the Exchange.

L. D. Lumpkin, Local Union 626, I. A., Barnesville, Georgia, grabs his trusty cudgel, shies his hat into the ring and hands us the following:

> Have just read August 18 issue of The World, taking special note of A. D. Hoatling's article with regard to condition of service received from Atlanta branch of the Vitagraph. I request that you have him send you some of the faults he has cut out, for the reason that I have been running service out of the Vitagraph Atlanta branch for the past six years, and am running it at present; also I have run the two subjects he named, less than sixty days ago, and I can say that if all exchanges kept up the physical condition of their films as the Atlanta Branch of the Vitagraph does, we would have no trouble to speak of. I have been running their service which is more than a year old here in this house (Palace Theater) since January first, last, and have not had a picture which required inspection as yet. Of course you will find a sprocket hole broken once in a while, but never two together, and when even one is broken it is invariably trimmed—or at least that is the way I have found it. In view of these facts I would have to see some of the faults Friend Hoatling cut out before I could believe his statement. I readily agree that films should be in such condition that the operator will have no need to inspect and repair them, and if he must do so, then certainly he ought to be paid for the work. I trust you will investigate this matter fully.

That would be an extremely difficult matter, Brother Lumpkin. Moreover, it would be of little use to ask Brother Hoatling to send in faults. If he would be dishonest enough (a thing I am by no means prepared to concede) to send in a dishonest report of film condition, then it would be but a step further to get film faults to send in, even if he had to make them. You seem to forget, however, that Hoatling sent copies of his letters to the exchange, together with the originals of the exchange managers' replies along with his letter to the department. Surely you would not imagine that an operator would go to the length of writing the exchange twice if his only object were to send in a dishonest report to this department. That theory does not hang together very well. Now do not get me wrong. I am not questioning your honesty. While it would be improbable, still it is within the range of possibility that your service has been all that you claim it to be, and at the same time Hoatling's service was exactly as he described it. This department has no axe to grind in matters of this kind. It has no grudge against the Vitagraph Atlanta branch, or against any other exchange. It simply seeks to protect the operator, the theater and the industry at large against the manifest outrage of films sent out in wretched physical condition, or, for that matter, in any other condition than that of ready-to-run. It also seeks, and intends to continue to seek, to protect the operator against the rapacity of exchange managers who try to force him to do their film inspecting and repairing free of charge. As to the present case, why, I would suggest the following: Operators receiving service from this exchange make careful note of name of each subject for one week, make a record of the exact condition of the films, the time the reels were received, and whether received direct from the exchange or not. These reports should be O. K.'d, if possible, by the theater manager, and forwarded to this department, accompanied by all faults cut out, each bunch of faults tagged with name of subject, and, if possible, the number of the reel, if more than one in the subject. I know this will involve some trouble, but if you want this non-inspection outrage cleared up, you must take a little trouble. Personally I would particularly like to see this case threshed out to a finish, because I don't want to do injustice to any one.

And while we are at it, here is another letter bearing on the same matter. It is from New Hampshire.

> Was pleased to read the letter from A. D. Hoatling, Deland, Florida, August 18 issue, and what you had to say concerning same. You both hit the nail squarely on the head, and the high note you struck when you asked the exchange manager why he doesn't do it (get a lot of inspecting done for three dollars) was fine; nor do I believe Saint Peter will close the Big Gate in your face for it, either. I have myself done a lot of kicking, and have written many letters to exchange managers, who do not even bother to reply. Also I have paid good money for service, with guarantee that it would be in first class condition. The guarantee was always by word of mouth; also it was always composed entirely of hot air. The films come with no leaders, no tail pieces, with sprocket holes by the hundred broken, with loose patches, and many times with one or more total breaks, left by the operator who ran them last for the exchange to repair, and by the exchange for me to fix up. I have even found the last part of one reel of a multiple-reel subject spliced to the front end of another reel, with nothing to tell where or how to get it together again, except by careful examination and matching up scenes. There is not a week that I do not work from two to four hours every Tuesday and Friday, doing inspector's work free of charge. I am both operator and manager, and must put down the coin for supposed-to-be service, even to a two-cent postage stamp on posters sent, which I find to be repeats and which I must return, at my own expense, and then fight to get credit for them. If you use this, please omit name of town, as I have to deal with exchanges, and they can make it even more unpleasant for me than it now is.

And this case is but one of many. The man is paying his good money for one thing, and getting quite another. It is unfair; it is indecent; it is not good business from the exchange man's viewpoint, and is a dagger in the back of the moving picture industry. How much longer is the fifth industry of the country to endure such unbusinesslike methods? And the pity of it is that exhibitors have it entirely within their power to call a swift halt on the sending out of film in imperfect condition.

Group of Exhibitors, Managers and Operators of Springfield, Mo., Taken at Time of Editor's Visit, but Mislaid and Overlooked.

Must See It.

H. W. Floyd, Capron, Oklahoma, sends in patent papers covering his invention, designed to attach to the projector and obviate the necessity for rewinding. He asks for our "honest opinion" with regards to its merits.

For the benefit of Friend Floyd, and others, let me say that it would be foolish to venture an opinion on something I have not seen in operation, or to form an opinion from a description, no matter how complete, or from patent papers and drawings. Such an opinion would have no value whatsoever. If you want my opinion, Friend Floyd, you will have to send on a well made, practical working model, and even then I might not be able to venture a decided opinion on a thing of this kind without first having watched it in actual theater projection work over a considerable period of time.

Interesting Theories.

Our old friend, John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, proceeds to stir the optical pool as follows:

The following comments on light ray action are written with the general idea of getting them out of my system, rather than to immediately inflict them upon the department readers. Perhaps I have unconsciously fostered the idea that the projection of motion pictures cannot be successfully accomplished except with the crater in focus, or near-focus at the aperture, in contradistinction to stereopticon projection, in which the crater is in focus either within or near the projection lens.

As a matter of fact, the projection of motion pictures may be accomplished in a number of different ways, dependent upon the arrangement of the apparatus and the amperage used. The chart published March 17th issue was designed for use under conditions as found in ordinary practice, and with the apparatus arranged in the usual way. In many matters I am in perfect accord with friend Martin's conclusions, whereas, judged by published data only, we seem to be at variance.

Where low amperage is used, with consequent crater of small area, such as, for instance, an experimental outfit, or for demonstrating purposes, it is entirely practical as well as very efficient to project motion pictures in the same manner as stero slides are projected, provided always that the focal length of the projection lens be short enough, because with the crater image within the projection lens the plane of the condenser beam through which the film is passing is even in density, whereas, if the projection lens were of longer focal length, then, in order to advance the crater image to a point within the lens, it would be necessary to bring that portion of the condenser beam which is not of even density ahead far enough to reach the film, and, as this portion of the condenser beam carries the blue ghost, it follows that the blue ghost would be in focus at the screen, and would inevitably show thereon.

One very effective method of projection motion pictures with very light amperage would be to use a two-inch-diameter condenser, and duplicate the projection of slides exactly, by having the lamphouse snug up against the machine head, so that the condenser would not be more than ½ inch from the film. This would be ideal motion picture projection, but unfortunately it does not lend itself to heavy amperage, owing to excessive heat. Under this plan there would be practically no loss of light, except the absorption which takes place in the glass itself, and the necessary loss by reasen of the revolving shutter. Spherical aberration would cut no figure at all, and long focal length projection lenses would represent no difficulties. The method would be to either mount the condensers where the cooling plate now is, and have the mount water cooled, or else mount the condenser in the usual place on the lamphouse (And bring the lamphouse forward, I suppose he means, though he does not say so.—Ed.). In the former case a thin, circular piece of mica could be placed in front of the arc, with the dowser between the crater and mica. The crater position would, under these conditions, be from 1½ to two inches from the arc condenser, which would give the condenser the same collective power as the regular 4½-inch lens now used. The E. F. of the condenser combination would be about two inches, varying slightly, according to the focal length of the projection lens, so as to place the crater image within the projection lens, and small enough to pass through without obstruction. The plane of the condenser beam which would be in focus at the screen would be ½ inch in front of the front plane of the front condensing lens, therefore, it would be perfectly even in density. Also the beam is converged entirely within the lens, so that if A. C. be used, both craters will give effective illumination, and if the projection lens diameter be ample it would require a much-neglected arc to show discoloration on the screen.

It will thus be seen that motion pictures may be projected on precisely the same principle as we employ in stereopticon projection. There are other possible methods also, but for modern operating conditions they are useless, unless unusual amperages be used. I believe the chart in March 17 issue about fills the bill. I believe you will find that where the chart seemed to fail with the lower amperages it was due to an insufficient Y distance to correspond with the small crater area, and in all probability the spot was not an approximate image of the crater, which same is essential if the chart is to prove a success.

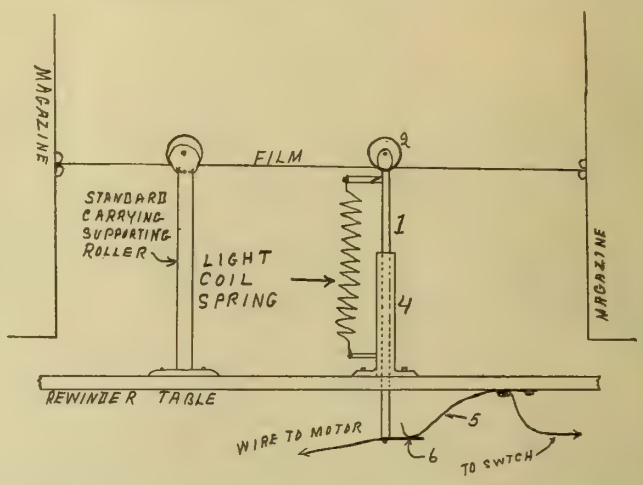
I print this as an interesting topic for study. That there would be more heat at the film with the film ½ inch from the condenser is not true, but to bring an electric arc of any considerable amperage 1½ inches from even a two-inch condenser would be something else again. Personally, I have never given this phase of motion picture projection any thought. I know and knew that it could be done. In fact, it is being done in at least two small "home" projectors. The writer believes, however, that insofar as theater projection be concerned, the thing is merely interesting. I do not think it is practical. I do, however, think there are decided possibilities in the matter of a corrected condenser. I believe condenser breakage can be stoppd, though it is, to date, confined strictly to "believing." That is one of a number of things I hope some day to find time to experiment with. Seems to me a properly directed air blast of proper volume ought to do the trick, and the possibilities that a corrected condenser would open up are very great.

Motor Cutoff.

J. M. Lenny, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, says:

Note in recent issue, cut of rewinder made by Frank Bell, Palestine, Texas, and that you suggested to him the addition of an automatic cutoff, so that the motor will be automatically stopped when the film is rewound. Would you be kind enough to tell me, through the department, how this can be done, as the cut accompanying original article is not sufficiently clear to enable me to dope it out.

Sure, Mike! I'll do that little thing for you. The automatic cutoff had not been installed when the photograph accompanying the other article was made. There are several ways in which the motor may be automatically stopped upon completion of the rewinding, and the best methods are through a magnetically controlled switch. But I don't remember just how that is done, and have not the time, nor have I the energy, during this hot weather, to dope it out. So I will give you a very good mechanical method, and ask those who use the magnetic to send in a description, if they will be so kind.



The sketch isn't a very good one, viewed from the artistic standpoint, but it is nevertheless very easily understood. 1 is a standard, carrying roller 2 at its upper, and copper plate 6 at its lower end. 4 is a hollow standard carrying standard 1 as shown. 5 is a copper contact, attached to rewinder table on under side, with insulation between, of course, since otherwise friend Inspector would put up an awful howl. The supporting roller shown is not absolutely necessary, but advisable. The action is simple. Contact 6 is attached to standard 1 by screws, under one of which is attached one end of one of the motor circuit wires, the same having been cut for the purpose, The other end is attached to contact 5 by one of its holding screws. When there is no film, the rewinder standard 1, being unsupported, drops, the action being aided by the coil spring. I personally don't think the spring necessary, and if it is used it must be a very light one. Standard 1 ought to be square in shape. When the film is in, tension applied to the tail reel (reel from which the film is being wound) and the motor is started by raising standard 1, the film, being drawn taut, standard 1 is held up by the film, and thus contacts 5 and 6 are held together. As soon as the rewinding is completed roller 2, no longer being supported by the film, drops, thus opening the motor circuit at contacts 5 and 6. Roller 2 should be so made that it bears only on the film track, and if it is of ample diameter all the better. Standard 4 may be made of heavy steel metal, bent over a convenient form. The whole thing is practical; also it may all be constructed by the operator, without any expense to speak of. I would, however, prefer the magnetic action, and will publish description of same as soon as received.

A New Book and a Good One.

I have just been looking over "Modern Theater Construction," by Edward Bernard Kinsila, published by the Moving Picture World. The book contains 269 pages, is substantially bound in cloth, printed in plain type, on good paper, and is illustrated. So much for the mechanical end of it. The book itself seems to be a general treatise on theater planning and construction, and as such is well worth its price to exhibitors and managers. In one particular it is unique, viz.: it is the only work of the kind I have seen which did not burst forth into pure, unadulterated drivel and arrant nonsense when its author reached the chapter dealing with the operating room. Brother Kinsila does not go into details concerning the operating room very much, but what he does say is essentially correct. I am not an architect, but, taken as a whole, "Modern Theater Construction" is, it seems to me, well worth its price, which same is $3.00.

Can It Be Possible?

Last week a New York City exhibitor called me up and anxiously inquired as to what he could use to mix black paint with to paint the interior of his operating room, to which I replied: "Turpentine and boiled linseed oil." But, to my astonishment, he told me he would not be allowed to use paint mixed with either turpentine, oil or both.

I really have not the time or energy to chase down every rumor of fool "rules" promulgated by fire departments and other city authorities, concerning operating rooms, but I really wonder if there exists a public official with a dome roofed with solid ivory so thick that he would actually issue as thoroughly and completely idiotic an order as that? If such a one exists I would be more than glad to have his name, and to know the position he is attempting to occupy. Probably, if he really exists, we shall soon hear of an order from him prohibiting the use of oil to lubricate the projectors, because lubricating oil will, given proper inducement, b-u-r-n ! Another item of danger lies in the language used by operators in speaking of this type of official. It is often lurid enough to set almost anything on fire, except, possibly, asbestos.

Extremely Doubtful.

J. B. Simon, Pine Bluff, Arkansas, makes the following inquiry:

> Please advise me as to your opinion of the value of the Super-Light shutter, made by the Super-Light Shutter Co., New York City, N. Y. They claim it will increase the screen illumination by as much as 30 per cent. Inasmuch as its purchase represents quite an investment, will you kindly investigate and advise?

I have done violence to one of my rules, and have invited the Super-Light people to present their goods for examination and test. Will advise as soon as they have done so, but the chances are ten to one that if they could have made good on their claim, they would have needed no invitation. They would have presented their shutter to this department about the first thing they did after getting it ready to market. If they still fail to present it, I would advise you to only purchase after testing the shutter out in your own theater. The chances are all against the validity of their claims.

Patent Intermittent Sprocket.

There have been several attempts to so construct an intermittent sprocket in which the teeth may be renewed without renewing the whole sprocket, but to date none of them have seemed to have value. And now comes one, John Domerhuizen, New York City, and presents the following:

> Am inclosing patent papers of an invention which bears directly upon an idea you have long been hammering upon, viz.: frequent renewal of intermittent sprockets. My invention introduces a sprocket which may, in so far as the teeth be concerned, and that is, of course, the vital point, be renewed at a minimum of expense; also the renewal element may be made of better material, and the hardening process may be brought to a greater state of perfection. Does this merit your attention?

Anything which presents any possible points of superior merit, and which is not obviously impractical, either from the manufacturing or some other standpoint, "merits my attention", and gets it too.

As to the article in question, it is not for me to pass judgment. I see no reason why better material could be used than in a whole sprocket, but can see that it might, and probably would, very much simplify the hardening problem. But there are other and exceedingly weighty matters to consider, the first of which is the element of weight. It seems to me the sprocket you propose will, of necessity, be very much heavier than those now in use, and that a very considerable portion of this added weight will come near its rim. Now, an intermittent sprocket must start from absolute rest, overcome inertia and attain high speed, and then overcome velocity and come to absolute rest sixteen or more times per second, therefore, any added weight, no matter how slight, must be reckoned with, particularly if it comes at or near the outer diameter. Then, too, an intermittent sprocket must be mechanically true, and the question arises, can a sprocket thus constructed be made perfectly true? It would seem to me doubtful. Take the one item, the holes for screws, 24. These would, of necessity, have to be made and finished before tempering. Suppose the tempering shrank the metal ever so slightly, and shrank it unevenly. What then? Modern sprockets (intermittent) are finished after tempering, by grinding, and the grinders run at the speed of about 20,000 revolutions per minute. You could not grind these holes, could you?

These are a few of the questions which present themselves when this matter is examined. On the other hand, such a sprocket would be very much easier for the operator to renew, since there would be no delicate hub pins to drive out; also, if the plan worked out satisfactorily, the parts would be interchangeable, and the turning of the sprocket teeth or installation of a new set would be a comparatively simple operation. Please understand that I am not passing judgment on this matter. I am not competent to do so. Only a manufacturer of projectors could give an authoritative opinion on a thing of this kind. I am merely presenting the matter to you, amiable reader, making such remarks as occur to me while so doing. Anyhow, the thing is interesting—maybe it is also practical, I don't know. The two illustrations show two possible methods of construction.

LET us not forget, however, that the human eye has a lens of extremely short focus and accommodates itself almost unconsciously so that in taking near objects with a large-apertured objective the fuzziness of a distant background is very much greater to the longer-focused wide-apertured lens objective than it is to the human eye and that the selection of a background very close or very dark gives a much better effect than the exaggerated mushiness of a brilliantly lighted distant background.

The shutter fade-out gives the best effect, as the image fades uniformly and completely away. The shutter fade-out is a mechanical device by which, while the shutter is revolving, one blade advances over the shutter opening until it is entirely closed, thereby gradually decreasing the successive exposures from normal to nothing. Its range being always the same, renders it much superior to the diaphragm fade-out, as the diaphragm fade-out may be from the largest aperture at one time and from F 16 at another, and it is practically impossible to give a properly graded fade-out from a small stop, as the arc of movement from a small stop to closure is too short.

The Bell-Howell camera is practically the only well-known make of camera in which the shutter dissolve, or fade-out, as it is variously known, is incorporated in the original instrument. Such a shutter can be installed in any make of camera by a competent mechanic, and, while the cost will probably range around a hundred dollars or more, no photographer who has used one would part with it for twice its cost. A shutter fade-out may be either hand operated or automatic. In the hand operated shutter dissolve the shutter opening is controlled by a lever with a graduated arc which indicates the shutter opening. The automatic dissolve is operated by a push button, which throws in a clutch on a screw, which operates the shutter, while a dial indicator shows the closing or opening of the shutter blades. It is open to the objection that it works at one speed only and consequently produces a fade-out of only one certain length, while a hand-operated dissolve may be varied to any desired extent.

The graduated screen fade-out is not much used and consists of strip of glass sliding in a race or grooveway as close in front of the lens as possible. This strip of glass varies in intensity from clear glass at one end to complete opacity at the other. To make one of these strips, place an unexposed contrast plate in a holder in the dark room and insert the slide into the holder just far enough to cover about one inch of the plate. Place it facing a distant incandescent lamp and have some one turn it on at a word of command, at which time slip the slide home slowly and evenly. On development you will have a plate clear at one end where protected by the slide, with a deposit increasing in density to the other end. With a good glass cutter, this can be cut into several strips, each wide enough for your purpose. Cut another similar strip of clear glass for a cover and bind or cement them together to protect the graduated screen. Slip the clear end in the groove in front of the lens and take the scene which you wish to fade out through this. When the fade out is to occur, slide the glass strip slowly across the lens until the opaque portion covers the aperture.

A graduated screen fade-out mechanically operated by clockwork is manufactured by the Universal Camera Co. and sold by Burke & James, Chicago.

In using the graduated screen it is essential that a hood be used which prevents any stray light from falling on the screen, or there will be a decided degraduation in your negative, due to light scattered by the screen.

The chemical method of producing fade-out is a last resort, as it is a very difficult matter to obtain an evenly graduated fade-out, owing to the uneven action of the chemicals. It is a very valuable aid to have in reserve, however, as a fade-out may be placed anywhere it is thought desirable after a picture is taken.

To produce a chemical fade-out make up one of the following formulas:

Cyanide of potash	1 oz.
Water	20 oz.
or
Ferricyanide (red prussiate) of potash	1 oz.
Water	10 oz.

The first formula works better and quicker, but is a very deadly poison and should be used with extreme care.

To use either formula wrap a piece of rubber cloth about the roll of film which is to be reduced, leaving the end on which you are to work projecting about a foot longer than the fade-out you intend to make and fasten securely with rubber bands.

To 4 oz. of the cyanide of potash solution add, before using, 3 dr. of tincture of iodine, or, if you use the ferricyanide solution, take 4 oz. of it and add to an equal quantity of plain 1 to 4 hypo solution. Place whichever solution you are about to use in a saucer or shallow dish and have ready a tray in which you have placed an equal quantity of acid hardener solution and water. This acid hardener and water acts as a shortstop in case your reducing solution should act too quickly.

Lay a clean board or a long strip of glass or even the back of a large tray in the sink and place the end of the film down the incline, with the end which is to be darkened at the lowest point. Then, with a swab of absorbent cotton dipped in the reducing solution, commence to swab the lower end of the film with the solution, gradually working upward, so that, as you come to the roll, the reducer has less and less time to work upon the emulsion. If you are not familiar with this procedure, it is well to experiment a few times with waster strips of negative before attempting to produce a chemical fade-out on a valuable negative. If you have carried the process through correctly, the reducer will have dissolved away the picture entirely at the lower end of the film, leaving it perfectly clear, from which will be a succession of faint images gaining in strength up to the point where they join the roll and the fade begins. Immerse this quickly in the acid hardener to stop the action of the reducer, which will otherwise continue for some time, if not checked; although plain water may be used as a check, it does not stop the reducing action at once, and must be applied before the reduction is quite complete.

In case the formula for hardener is not at hand, it may be mixed up according to the following formula:

Water	5 oz.
Sodium sulphite (dessicated)	½ oz.
Acetic acid No. 8	3 oz.
Alum, powdered	½ oz.

The Dissolve: The dissolve is a combination of a fade-out and fade-in, lapped over one another. The effect is that of a scene gradually disintegrating and dissolving to another. This effect is attained by fading out, and then, with the lens covered, turning the film back to the point where the fade-out began and then fading in the succeeding scene, so that the following scene is fully faded in at the expiration of the fade-out. This may be done by any of the methods described under the fade-out, but in the case of a chemical dissolve it becomes necessary to overlap two pieces of film where the fade-out and fade-in occur, which occasions a great deal of trouble in printing, on account of the extra thickness of film, and the trouble caused by rewinding a negative with this overlap, which can only be cemented at one end, because, if it is cemented at both ends, the rolling up of the negative will cause a buckle in the film at the second joint, because whichever film in the dissolve is on the outside of the roll will prove too short to encircle the roll, having to circumscribe a larger diameter.

Where there are a number of prints to be made from a chemical dissolve, it is often advantageous to make a dupe negative of the dissolve portion and cement that into the negative in place of the cumbersome overlap.

Circle-in and Circle-out: Also called circle vignette or round dissolve. As the instrument with which this effect is produced is an iris diaphragm, it is sometimes miscalled "Diaphragm-in" and Diaphragm-out," but this term should not be applied to it, because it confuses it with an entirely different effect caused by diaphragming in and out with the lens diaphragm, which produces a fade-in or fade-out.

The circling-in instrument or outside diaphragm is mounted upon the end of an extensible lens hood and produces the effect of the image disappearing at the corners of the frame, gradually diminishing in a circular form to a round dot, which also disappears in blackness. The sharpness or diffusion of the edges of this circle are determined by the distance between the outside diaphragm and the lens and also by the lens aperture used. The nearer the outside diaphragm is placed to the lens the more out of focus it bcomes and, consequently, the softer the graduation of the edge of the circle. This instrument of late has come into extensive use not only for circling in and circling out but also for isolating the expression of any particular character in the close up from the background, in which case after focusing upon a close view of the character at the stop used, the outside diaphragm is gradually closed until everything except the features to be shown are obliterated by the iris blades.

"The Man Without a Country"

Five-Part Thanhouser Picture Founded on Edward Everett Hale's Story Has Strong Patriotic Appeal—Released by Jewell Productions.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN adapting Edward Everett Hale's famous story, "The Man Without a County," for the screen, Lloyd Lonergan, who made the scenario for the Thanhouser Company, recognized the necessity of supplying considerable new material in order to produce a five-part picture. To this end the photoplay presents a story within a story, most of the action taking place at the present time and centering around a young man named Philip Nolan. He fails to respond when the call comes for volunteers for service in France, and is totally indifferent to every patriotic appeal. In a moment of anger he uses the same words that Edward Everett Hale put into the mouth of the chief character in his tale: "Damn the United States! I never want to hear her mentioned again." A friend of Nolan's hands him a copy of "The Man Without a Country," and begs him to read it. He does so and the force of its lesson is brought home to him. He hurries to a recruiting office and enlists. There is a love interest connected with the picture, but its chief value lies in its call to duty and its impressive lesson on love of country. The visualization of the Hale classic is brought in naturally and effectively, and the artistic shortcomings of the picture, as a whole, are lost sight of in view of its timeliness and the response its story is bound to command. The average spectator will pass over its slowness of movement, and the lack of engaging qualities in its hero, and feel only the fire of its patriotism and the good Americanism it aims to teach.

Scene from "The Man Without a Country" (Jewel).

H. E. Herbert was a wise selection for the character of Philip Nolan, and his mental awakening seemed genuine. Florence LaBadie had the part of a patriotic American girl, and supplied her with the right qualifications. Other well played parts were contributed by J. H. Gilmour, Carey Hastings, Ernest Howard, and Charles Dundan. Ernest C. Warde's direction of the picture is capable, in the main, but his idea of a naval officer's cabin is peculiar.

"The Lost Express"

New Mutual Serial Proves Worthy Successor in First Two Episodes to Former Helen Holmes Pictures.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN the new Mutual serial of two-part episodes, entitled "The Lost Express," we encounter, with one or two exceptionss, the same faces as in "The Railroad Raiders" and "The Lass of the Lumberlands." Helen Holmes is still playing the fearless heroine, and Thomas Lingham is back in the role of the double-dyed villain; while L. D. Maloney is playing a "man of mystery" sort of part which keeps the spectator guessing. John McKinnon and Edward Hearn are new members of the company who give promise of accellerating interest in the story.

The first episode draws its title from the name of the serial, "The Lost Express," and tells the story of how when Helen Thurston's father is paralyzed by a shot from the hand of a burglar known as Harelip, the express which she charters to move the contents of her father's vault to safekeeping in a bank of a nearby town, disappears from the tracks in a most mysterious way. A formula for the manufacture of granulated gasoline, and which was hidden in the vault, was the prize for which the burglary had been made, and which disappeared with other valuable papers on the express train.

The second episode, entitled "The Destroyed Document," shows how a missing page of the prized document is found by the gang who, in trying to get away with it, are followed by Helen and a detective. Helen creeping along the top of the moving train focuses a powerful glass on the document which at that moment is being examined by Harelip and his associates, and succeeds in burning it. This incident is not very convincing. The serial is full of action, however, and gives promise of being interesting, providing too much of the "far-fetched" material is not inserted in its makeup.

"The Woman Beneath"

Ethel Clayton in Five-Part Peerless Photoplay, Written by Williard Mack, Gives Convincing Characterization.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IF playwrights are sometimes forced to present conventional aspects of life it is quite as well that they select pleasing phases of existence for the hero and the heroine. In "The Woman Beneath," a five-part Peerless production, directed by Travers Vale, Williard Mack, the author, has kept this fact in mind, and treated the spectator to a series of diverting, if familiar, situations. Tom Connolly, a Western millionaire, takes a trip to New York and meets Betty Fairchild, a brilliant bud in the social hothouse. Connolly is a man of action, and once he discovers that he is in love with Betty, sets about to make her Mrs. Connolly. A former suitor of his wife's attempts to force his attentions on her, and Tom is led to believe that Betty does not love him. He pretends to be ruined financially, and the true character of his wife is brought to the surface. She takes to life in a Harlem flat without complaining, and when she finds out that Ruppert Crandall, the former suitor, has betrayed her husband's sister, compromises her own good name so that Tom shall not become a murderer. The misunderstandings are all cleared away at the finish, and Tom and Betty are so happy that they both continue to smile even after Tom takes his wife riding in a flivver and the machine refuses to run.

Scene from "The Woman Beneath" (World).

The playing of Ethel Clayton as Betty Fairchild, and Curtis Cooksey as Tom Connelly goes a long way toward making the picture acceptable. Miss Clayton, especially, has a convincing characterization to her credit. Her perfomance of Betty presents an easily recognized type of well-bred, true-hearted young womanhood that only needs the test to bring out its real nature. Isabelle Berwin, Frank de Vernon, Craufurd Kent and Eugenie Woodward are the remaining members of a competent cast. The production is equal to all demands.

"The Spindle of Life."

Five-Reel Butterfly Release Features Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber in Offering of Light, Pleasant Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. M. Elravy.

COMEDY is the prevailing note in this feature number, which has its principal scenes in a seaside resort, and in the New York stock market. Such drama as there is occurs in the city end of the story, but this is of a quiet and more or less restrained sort. The production, as a whole, tells a rather slight but brightly pictured and generally engaging story of the romantic type.

Scene from "The Spindle of Life" (Butterfly).

Neva Gerber, who recently did some effective work with Ben Wilson in "The Voice on the Wire" serial, is cast here in a lighter, more spontaneous role, which she handles with equal skill. She plays the part of Gladsome, daughter of a widow with social ambitions. Mrs. Harrison, the mother, has selected Vincent Bradshaw as a desirable son-in-law, but the girl does not like him, and proceeds to work out her own destiny in a way that is also agreeable to her mother in the end.

The girl has a very democratic disposition, and shocks her mother and their society friends by wearing oilskins and enjoying herself in the company of some fishermen with whom she has played ever since she was a child. It is on one of these excursions that she meets a young man with whom she falls desperately in love. He is known to her by the name of "Sandman," but later proves to be a wealthy Wall Street man on a vacation. Ben Wilson plays this part acceptably. On the street he is known as "Alphabet" Carter, and the dramatic end of the story shows the way in which he "breaks" Bradshaw and his father. The latter are speculating with Mrs. Harrison's funds.

The photoplay and scenic effects are very pleasing throughout this feature. Others in the cast are Jessie Pratt, Ed Brady, Richard La Reno, Winter Hall and Hayward Mack. The story was adapted by Karl Coolidge from a novel by Sidney Robinson and was produced by George Cochrane.

"For the Freedom of the World."

Eight-Reel Patriotic Production Featuring E. K. Lincoln, With Barbara Castleton and Romaine Fielding.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A STIRRING eight-part patriotic production which was produced by Ira M. Lowry and F. J. Carrol, of 220 West 42d street, New York City, from the story of Edwin Bower Hesser, will be found an excellent aid in the work of recruiting. "For the Freedom of the World" is the title of the production which features E. K. Lincoln, with Barbara Castleton and Romaine Fielding, with a supporting cast consisting of Neil Moran, Jane Adler and Walter Weems.

The story of the picture follows the fortunes of a member of the American Legion, and presents some intensely interesting scenes which were evidently photographed at the training camps in Canada, showing how these soldiers are trained for the work ahead of them. One of the features of the picture is the night photography which it contains, and which has been very carefully done. The battle scenes photographed in the darkness, with only the light from bursting shells by which to distinguish objects moving on the horizon, are very effective. E. J. Lincoln plays the role of the son of wealthy parents, who suddenly aroused from his profligate habits by a manly young officer of the American Legion, enlists and finally receives a commission. The character of the slacker is well portrayed by Romaine Fielding in a manner to inspire disgust for this type of man. And especially the earlier portion of the production is constituted to inspire patriotism. Rather an extreme instance has been cited in the picture which might be questioned by the uninformed, in which an officer and his wife, who, disobedient to orders, visits her husband at the front, are condemned to death. This, we understand, is in accordance with an order governing such instances issued by General Joffre some months ago. In this case the officer shoots his wife to save her from death by other means. Barbara Castleton does excellent work as the young wife who in trying to reach her husband at the front steals her passage on a transport carrying members of the Red Cross corps to France, and is disguised as a nurse by a sympathetic fellow passenger.

"Barbary Sheep."

Artcraft Romantic Drama of Fine Artistry With Elsie Ferguson in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

BARBARY SHEEP" is distinguished for superior artistry of presentation, high suspense and some fascinating psychology, the latter especially where it reveals the effect of primitive passions on the refined mentality of a modern society woman. This last-named feature of the story is largely responsible for the suspense, and it is handled with skill by the director, but there is a lack of intensity on the part of Miss Ferguson, notwithstanding her highly intelligent interpretation of the leading part. Her art is subtle and therefore modern so far as the stage is concerned, but in the absence of that most wondrous stimulant to emotion, the human voice, it is safer to err on the side of exaggeration in screen representation. It is quite evident that the author intends to show a tremendous inner struggle of the civilized woman with the fragmentary remains of barbarous instinct still lingering in her soul, and this is very well done in a ladylike way, perhaps in a consistent manner from some points of view, but it is not strongly enough addressed to the average mixed audience.

Taken as a whole, "Barbary Sheep" is a story which will hold attention, and it is replete with convincing "atmosphere," particularly in the difficult Algerian scenes. The environment helps greatly to enhance the illusion and preserve the charm of reality. It is far from an easy story to make plausible in the matter of surrounding influences, hence the director, Maurice Tournier, deserves high commendation for his work. It is to be deplored, however, that he could not attain something with more zip in it for the last scene rather than the conventional ending. The play is strong enough throughout to deserve something more effective at its conclusion. As a piece of pure artistry it should win.

"Under False Colors."

Pathe-Thanhouser Five-Reel Production Features Frederick Warde and Jeanne Eagels In Russian Revolution Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

INTENSELY modern in every inch is this five-real production, written by Lloyd Lonergan and directed by Emile Chautard. It tells a lively and stirring tale of present times, with the recent Russian revolution as a background.

Frederick Warde gives dignity and sympathy to the part of the American millionaire, John Colton. Mr. Warde plays with the grace and finish that have been his through long years of histronic fame. Jeanne Eagels is remarkably attractive as the Countess Olga, a young girl of the Russian nobility, who comes to this country to procure funds for the revolution. Her features are expressive and well adapted to the screen, and she had just the right touch of naive eagerness and wonderment to give strength to certain scenes.

The story is quite complicated and entertaining so far as the plot is concerned, and the presentation is adequate throughout, though not particularly lavish in settings. It is carried chiefly by the good acting in evidence through its course.

The Countess Olga is befriended in Russia by Jack Colton, son of the American millionaire who gives her money and a passport to bring her to this country. On the trip over she meets Vera Ladislaus, a friend of the Coltons'. The ship is torpedoed and Vera dies. Olga then takes her place and goes to the home of John Colton, who takes her in, believing her of course to be Vera. There is a scene of unusual dramatic strength where Vera's father comes and Olga does not recognize him. A little more suspense in certain of the latter scenes would have helped, but the story interest is so strong that its absence is not greatly felt.

Others in the cast are Robert Vaughn, Anne Gregory and Carey Hastings.

"For France."

Five-Part Vitagraph Photoplay of the Great Conflict, Written by Cyrus Townsend Brady, Is Interesting from Start to Finish.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A YOUNG West Pointer, who goes to France to study aviation and joins the French army at the outbreak of the war, is the hero of "For France," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, written by Cyrus Townsend Brady, and directed by Wesley Ruggles. The picture interests. None of the material is new, nor is there anything remarkable in the way it is handled by the director. The entire production maintains a fairly impressive level of merit, however, and the story has enough romance, vital action, and the clash of battle to hold the attention of the average spectator.

Gerald Ackland, the West Pointer, falls in love with the daughter of a celebrated French artist. The girl and her father are living at a farmhouse near Mons, when a party of German soldiers stumble upon the place, and the arrival of Ackland is all that saves his sweetheart from becoming the victim of the officer in command. The picture terminates with a well arranged battle, in which a body of British hold off the Germans until a detachment of French cavalry rides up and force the enemy to retreat. A machine gun, operated by Ackland and the artist's daughter, also has a voice in the matter. The American is dangerously wounded, but is nursed back to health by his sweetheart, who becomes a Red Cross nurse.

The acting is entirely satisfactory. Edward Earle is natural and animated, and always commands respect for the character of Gerald, and Betty Howe represents the French heroine with the same result. Arthur Donaldson, Mary Maurice and Frank Anderson are valuable members of the cast.

"The Hostage."

Wallace Reid the Star in Absorbing Five-Reel Lasky-Paramount Drama Writen by Beulah Marie Dix—Directed by Robert Thornby.

FEW photoplays attain the degree of sustained interest that is found in "The Hostage," a five-reel Paramount picture in which Wallace Reid is the star. Suspense—a suspense that holds the spectator's interest tightly captive—is contained in every foot of the five reels. Even in commonplace action the story is always just a little bit ahead of the viewer. And Mr. Reid and his supporting cast make important even the smallest incidents, all of which have bearing on the story. Beulah Marie Dix has written a war story with a purpose, but the purpose is so cleverly veiled under the cloak of entertainment that one who has seen the picture does not get it until after analyzation. The purpose is not exactly a pacifist argument, but is more an arraignment by either belligerent of the other.

For her story the author has put at sword's points the Highlanders and the Lowlanders. Mr. Reid is seen as the son of the commander of the Lowlanders. He is given the Highlanders by the Lowlanders as hostage—as a guarantee that the Lowlanders will keep their pact with the Highlanders. The lieutenant is billeted at a Highland home where he comes under the scorching hate of the house's occupants. His stoicism, his gentility and honor soon win the compassion and later the love of the daughter of the house. The lieutenant is accused of treachery when his uncle attacks the Highland stronghold. He is tortured in an endeavor to make him tell the Lowlanders' plans, but is released when it is learned that he forfeited his right to live in defending a Highland girl. He is about to be shot when peace is declared.

Mr. Thornby's direction shows a skill that is evident in every place where directorial skill is most needed. Lightings and photography are fully up to Paramount standard.

Gertrude Short has the leading female role. She acquits herself admirably, as also do Dorothea Abril, C. H. Geldert, Guy Oliver, Camille Ankewich, Noah Beery, George I. Spaulding, Lillian Leighton and Lucien Littlefield.

"One Hour."

Zena Keefe and Alan Hale Featured in Six-Reel Drama—Released Through Hoffman-Foursquare Exchanges—Produced by Harry Rapf.

Reviewed by Ben. H. Grimm.

THE latest Hoffman-Foursquare picture, "One Hour," is a satisfactory offering. Zena Keefe and Alan Hale are the featured players in a six-reel screen drama that holds the interest throughout. The story is of the type that always has been popular and the tale has been screened in a manner that adds to its attractiveness. The story centers around the lives of a man and youth and their love. In the early reels there are seen many beautiful exteriors. There is much attractive "snow stuff," and several very effectively lighted night scenes in the forest. Also the film has been edited in a manner that aids it considerably. While the picture is one that will make its biggest appeal to adults, there is nothing shown on the screen that is offensive.

Miss Keefe is seen as a young woman around whom much mystery centers. She lives with her aunt and uncle in a bungalow in the Adirondacks. Near her lives a youth called Stanley (Mr. Hale). The youth rescues the girl when she falls through the ice and brings her to his cabin. As time passes they fall in love. Their happiness is broken by the arrival of a foreign Baron, who tells the girl that she is the princess of a small European kingdom, and that she must marry the profligate king of a neighboring kingdom to save her people from war. In desperation the girl goes to her lover. She is torn from him and brought to Europe, followed by the youth. It develops that the youth is the nephew of the king to whom the princess must be married. Intoxicated, the king endeavors to embrace the princess in her chambers. He is set upon by Prince Stanlai. The excitement kills the king, and the prince succeeds to the throne.

The work of Miss Keefe, Mr. Hale, and the other members of the cast is thoroughly satisfactory. On the screen with the leads are seen D. J. Flanigan, Ina Brooks, Warren Cook, H. W. Pemberton, William Marion, Franklyn Hanna and Herbert Dancey.

The scenario was written by Paul McAllister, who, with Edwin Hollywood, also directed. The direction leaves nothing to be desired. The picture was produced by Harry Rapf.

"Behind the Mask."

Catherine Calvert Featured in Five-Reel Drama Produced by U. S. Amusement Corporation for Release by Art Dramas.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

IN "Behind the Mask," a five-reel drama produced by the U. S. Amusement Corporation for release on the Art Dramas program, we have a photoplay of medium grade. The story is moderately interesting and its screen presentation fairly well made. Catherine Calvert is seen in the featured role, with Richard Tucker playing the male lead. The story was written by Charles T. Dazey. The production was directed by Miss Alice Blache. Much of the plot is bridged by titles, some of which are rather long. If the spectator is willing to take much for granted he will get a fair amount of amusement from a view of "Behind the Mask."

The story tells of the revenge of a girl whose father is ruined by a capitalist. She becomes his daughter's social secretary, and in that capacity meets Lord Strathmore, to whom the daughter is affianced. Lost in the woods, the Lord and the girl are forced to spend the night in a lonesome cabin. The Lord is in love with the secretary. The next morning he marries her, the secretary thus being revenged on the daughter of the man who ruined her father. But after marriage hate for her husband springs into the heart of the girl. She leaves him. A baby is born. The mother is made blind through an illness.

Two years later the lord finds his wife. He comes to her as an old friend of her father. He engages a physician who restores her sight. She still hates the man she knew as her husband, but loves the man she knows as the friend of her father. To prevent "them" taking her baby away, as she believes will be done, the mother flees into the woods. When confronted by her husband she is about to fling herself and her baby over the cliff, but when she learns that her husband is the man whom she knew as a friend of her father, she relents.

Both Miss Calvert and Mr. Tucker are capable. Other important parts are in the hands of Kirke Brown, Charles Dungan, Flora Nason and Charles Halton.

"The Conqueror"

Eight-Part Fox Photodrama of the Life of General Sam Houston, William Farnum Starred, Has Historic Value—Directed by R. A. Walsh.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN WRITING "The Conqueror," an eight-part photodrama produced by William Fox, with William Farnum in the leading role, the author, Henry Christeen Warnack, has evidently intended to give a fairly truthful picture of the life and times of General Sam Houston, the American pioneer who was so closely identified with the settlement and development of Texas. The page of American history devoted to the romantic figure of this famous son of Tennessee is a fascinating one, and the author of "The Conqueror" has succeeded in transfering a number of its most striking incidents to the screen. William Farnum has the physique and personality that makes him fill the eye in the role of Houston, and director R. A. Walsh has endeavored, with satisfactory results, to give the production a bigness of treatment that would mark the picture as much above the average.

The story of Houston's life is full of diversity and color, and this condition has been used to advantage. His friendship with the Indians permitted the director to bring a large number of redmen into several scenes of the picture, and to use them in the battle at the end. Director Walsh has not lost any of his old cunning, and the ensembles are handled with the effectiveness of which he is a master. Some of the comedy relief might well be spared, so far as the judicious are concerned, but it will bring joy to the rest of the spectators. They will find in Jumbo and his live stock a welcome spring of laughter.

The love interest hangs upon Houston's love for a Nashville, Tennessee, belle, and his struggle upward, socially and politically, until he makes her his wife. They afterward become estranged, and the scene shifts to Texas, where Houston defeats a band of Mexican outlaws and rescues his wife, after the manner made and approved of for men of his character.

Scene from "The Conqueror" (Fox).

William Farnum does all that is demanded of him in the way of acting, with ease and finish, and shows that he suits the part and the part suits him. Jewel Carmen as Eliza Allen is first a "haughty beauty" and then the loving woman who is glad to acknowledge Houston as her husband, and presents both phases of the character convincingly. Charles Clary, J. A. Marcus, Carrie Clark Ward, William Chisholm, Robert Dunbar, Owen Jones and the Indian chiefs, William Eagle Shirt, Chief Birdhead and Little Bear are members of the cast.

"When False Tongues Speak"

Melodrama with Plenty of Old-Time, Sure-Fire Stunts—Some Fine Human Climaxes—Weak Continuity—Went Well at East Side Star Theater.

THERE is plenty to trouble a reviewer in the recent Fox five-reel picture, "When False Tongues Speak," and there are plenty of scenes that will be a delight to the most critical. The comic relief—as the drunken man who plays upon the bars of his prison as on a heavenly harp—is so often ably done that one will have to laugh, even though he laughed at the same thing years ago. There are climaxes, as when the big heroine of the plot meets the little heroine of the counterplot in the Pullman car, that pulls the heart, even though the picture drops again to a much inferior level. Taken as a whole, the plot is weak in continuity. The villain is loosely connected to the tale, and the hero is faintly set forth and not very convincing. Virginia Pearson, the heroine, is often altogether charming, and Claire Whitney, in the role of the deceived woman, also acts with precision. Carl Harbough as the drunken husband shows his marked ability to make a character convince, and Hardee Kirkland as the villain is all that anyone could be in the role. Many of the lesser characters are commendable.

Scene from "When False Tongues Speak" (Fox).

The picture has many of the earmarks of the old play—it is by George Scarborough—that hasn't been quite remade into a real picture. Take, for instance, that little struggle before the blackboard at the mission school. Personality on the stage might have made it convincingly, because the voice can connote what in film must be told plainly. In the picture, it seems silly for a society woman to get so intimate with a mere reporter on the second short meeting. Yet the director, Carl Harbough, shows marked ability again and again as a picture man by his ease in handling some of the scenes, by his interesting by-play and by the beauty of his close-ups.

I saw the picture at the Fox Star theater, at 107th street and Lexington avenue, New York, with a cheap audience. It was followed closely, and was given a very ample appreciation. The Star is on the East Side in a poor neighborhood.

THE two pictures under review at the present writing represent a marked improvement in their class of comedy. "Crazy by Proxy" and "Green Eyes and Bullets" were made by the Christie Film Company. They lean to the farce order of comedy without being extreme, are free from vulgarity, and will be found entertaining to the average audience.

The first-named, "Crazy by Proxy," introduces us to a young man who is about to marry; in fact, he enters the picture at the dawn of his wedding morn. The bride-to-be, pretty Betty Compson, is also presented; but while she eagerly pursues preparations for the wedding, the bridegroom is kidnapped by a jealous cousin who is envious of his position as heir of a fortune. An amusing chase, and final escape from a sanitarium where he has been taken brings the picture to a close in a pretty wedding scene.

"Green Eyes and Bullets" tells the story of a young couple, newly married, who have made frequent changes in their place of abode. At last taking quarters at a hotel they feel that they are peacably settled when a shadow again crosses their sky. This time it is the foolish jealously of the husband, who goes out one morning taking the key of their door with him, leaving his pretty wife, attired in negligee clothing, in the corridor. Unable to get into her own apartment the young wife accepts the kindly offer of the man across the hall to step into his apartment for shelter while he hunts the janitor for her.

In the meantime the husband returns with the key and discovers his wife in another man's room. This situation, while much hackneyed, has been in the present instance handled in an amusing and unsuggestive manner, which proves harmlessly entertaining.

Conquest Program No. 8

Fine Group of Subjects, Including "T. Haviland Hicks, Freshman," a Stirring College Tale, and R. H. Davis' Story, "Gallegher."

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE quality of pictures on the Edison Conquest programs still holds good, and program No. 8 has not a dull moment. The first number on the program is a three-reel version of a story by J. Raymond Elderdice, entitled "T. Haviland Hicks, Freshman," which, as the title would suggest, is a story of college life. Raymond McKee gives a lively portrayal of the character of T. Haviland Hicks, a rich young freshman, and fond of adventure. His clever dodging of his fellow students' attempts at hazing him are very amusing and well staged. Others of the cast are Albert Macklin, James Turbell and William Sherwood.

The second number is a two-reel filmization of the Richard Harding Davis story "Gallegher," in which Andy Clark plays the role of the precocious office boy in a newspaper office, who turns detective on his own account and succeeds not only in bringing in the biggest scoop of the season, but in causing the arrest of a murderer. The picture is well made and Andy Clark in the title role does an excellent bit of work. Jack Willard plays effectively the role of Stephen Hade, the murderer, William Wadsworth that of the sporting editor of the "Press," and Lou Stearn that of Detective Hefflefinger.

The educational numbers, "Turning Out Silver Bullets," which was photographed at the Philadelphia Mint; "Young Salts," a review of work and play at the Culver Military Academy, and "The Holy Land," are all well illustrated and interesting, especially the first mentioned, which are unusually good.

New "Ham" Comedies

Kalem Presents "Ham" and "Bud" in a Pair of New Laugh Producers, Directed by Al Santell.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT IS human nature to laugh at certain forms of trickery, and this is perhaps a good thing, for there is always a great deal of it in evidence. "Ham" and "Bud," two laughable individuals who live upon their wits, appear again in two comedy subjects, which will find favor with their former friends. Lloyd V. Hamilton and A. E. Duncan play the leading parts and are supported by a cast which includes Henry Murdoch, John Steppling and Edythe Sterling.

In the number entitled "The Boot and the Loot" Ham begins operations by borrowing the uniform of a street car conductor. He then approaches the Italian proprietor of a bootblack stand and offers to trade him a street car for his stand. The trade is made, and the Italian tries to make off with the car. This starts a number of entertaining developments of a rapid-fire, burlesque sort. Ham and Bud also in the course of the story take up the trail of a badly wanted thief, whom they follow to the home of a millionaire. Here they learn that the man is not a thief at all, but the millionaire's butler. At this moment the Italian again shows up, and all hands indulge in a wild chase.

"A Whirlwind of Whiskers" is a similar type of comedy, in which Ham and Bud visit a detective bureau. They are mistaken for sleuths and are sent out upon the trail of a counterfeiter. They spot a man with a long white beard and follow him to a barber shop, where numerous amusing scenes occur. While they are still looking for the counterfeiter a real detective comes along and chases them over roof tops. Ham and Bud succeed in evading the detective and other pursuers and go on their way, looking for new adventures.

"The Mysterious Mr. Tiller"

Five-Reel Bluebird Features Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford in Excellent Story of Mystery and Suspense.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

EVERY foot of this five-reel subject plunges the observer further and further into absorbing complications of plot, which are baffling and thrilling at one and the same time. From the moment Rupert Julian appears as a cravenetted, silk-hatted gentleman strolling down Lester street until the close of the story there is nothing wanting in the way of dark doings and interesting adventures to hold the attention.

Scene from "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller" (Bluebird).

Mr. Julian appears as Prentice Tiller, an individual of whom little is known, but whose movements instantly arouse speculation. He meets, or rather follows, a girl who runs out of a house in which an explosion has occurred. They collide with one another at the end of a blind alley, and the girl asks him to escort her home in safety. He walks with her a certain distance, and she then asks him to leave her. He does so, but watches her further movements with interest.

From this point the story moves on to innumerable adventures. Tiller attends a reception at the Hawthorne residence and recognizes in Clara Hawthorne the girl of his brief acquaintance. During the evening two valuable necklaces are stolen. An arch criminal named Mordant is suspected, but it turns out that Tiller has a hand in the operations. In the course of the tale Mr. Julian also assumes a second part, by means of certain facial distortions which he has successfully employed before. This brings up a situation toward the close which is both interesting and surprising. In the end the theft of the necklaces is cleared up, and the criminal, Mordant, and his accomplices are brought to justice. The production is a strong one of the mystery type.

Ruth Clifford is attractive in the part of Clara Hawthorne, and Frank Brownlee does good work as Mordant. Others in the cast are Wedgewood Nowell, Harry Rattenberry and E. A. Warren. Elliott J. Clawson is the author of the interesting story.

Triangle Releases

"The Bond of Fear," Five-Part Photoplay Featuring Belle Bennett and Roy Stewart, and "Mountain Dew," a Drama of the Cumberlands, Starring Margery Wilson.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Bond of Fear."

THE opening incident of "The Bond of Fear, a five-part photoplay written by Edith Kennedy for Triangle and directed by Jack Conway, gives the picture an excellent start. Judge Camden McClure of Philadelphia is shown in court, giving a convicted man the full extent of the law. That same day the Judge has a quarrel with his brother and strikes him with a decanter in self-defense. Believing he has killed the young man, the cowardly nature of the Judge asserts itself and he becomes a fugitive. He flees to the western desert, meets a woman who nurses him through a fever, and then exhibits a yellow streak, in his treatment of her, that is quite beyond belief. Fortunately, the woman is loved by a real man and she accepts him as the last scene fades out.

Putting aside the overdrawing of the character of the Judge, the dramatic value of the picture is considerable. The production is always in keeping with the subject, and Director Conway has brought out the strong points of the story with skill. The desert scenes, which include a sand storm, are impressive, and the work of the cast is never at fault. Belle Bennett, as Mary Jackson, makes the character womanly and fine, and Roy Stewart is just the sort of man that Cal Nelson is supposed to be. Malborne McDowell, George Webb and John Lince had important allotments.

"Mountain Dew."

Moonshine whiskey, a young novelist, and a mountain maiden who can neither read nor write, are the springs of action in "Mountain Dew," a five-part picture by Julian Josephsen and Monte M. Katterjohn. The part of the Kentucky girl is played by Margery Wilson, the character of the novelist having been intrusted to Charles Gunn. Thomas Heffron directed the production. Everyone connected with the making of the photoplay have labored earnestly and well. The story is quite as good as any of the numerous ones on the same subject that have preceded it, and many of its scenes have pronounced pictorial charm. Comedy relief is supplied by the colored valet of the novelist. Humor of the brand that was once found in the popular price dramas of the spoken stage is the specialty of Roosevelt Washington. Al. W. Filson, Jack Richardson, Aaron Edwards and Mary Borland contribute well-defined impersonations.

"The Awakening of Ruth."

Five-Part Perfection Picture Released by George Kleine System Features Shirley Mason, and Is Well Produced.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE first release of the Perfection make of pictures, distributed by the George Kleine System, is entitled "The Awakening of Ruth," and was produced by Edison. It is a five-part story of the Florida Keys and was written by Lucien Hubbard, the director being E. H. Griffith. The plot is pleasantly entertaining, although not all dramatic, and the author has made no attempt to have his heroine smack of the soil. Ruth Hoagland has been reared upon one of the islands of the Florida Keys, but she talks as correctly as a Boston schoolma'am and exhibits none of the peculiarities of character that are looked for in natives of a certain locality. No explanation of her early life is given, and the spectator is at liberty to imagine for himself how Ruth came to be living on the island with her father, a half-witted fisherman, who spends most of his time hunting for buried treasure.

Robert Winthrop, a wealthy young fellow from the North, comes to the island, and he and Ruth fall in love with each other. After Winthrop's return to New York he forgets the little island girl and becomes interested in a musical comedy star. Ruth finds that she has a voice and goes north to seek her fortune, a doctor from the mainland, who loves her, helping her at great personal sacrifice. Her adventures in New York bring her in contact with Winthrop and his actress friend, and this experience makes her glad to go back to Florida and marry the doctor.

The production of the picture has been made with care, and many of the scenes are attractive, although lacking the southern atmosphere. Speeding up the movement of the story would improve it greatly. Most of the time it merely drifts along. Shirley Mason is a pathetic little figure as the island girl and swims, dives and fills the acting requirements of the part with much skill. Her support is satisfactory, and consists of Donald MacClennan, Joseph Byrke, William Hayes, Donald Hall, Sally Crute, Jessie Stevens, and Edward Elkas.

"Rasputin, the Black Monk."

Eight-Part Brady-Made Production on Russian Conditions Preceding the Revolution Features Montagu Love in Title Role.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

NO PERIOD of history is more fraught with dramatic events for any of the nations of the earth than was that period preceding the Russian revolution. And the fact that two of the most pretentious of present-day moving picture productions have been based on the unhappy conditions of that period speaks well for the producer's choice of a subject suited to inspire interest in the mind of the public.

The first of these productions to be given a public screening is that presented by William A. Brady and ably directed by Arthur Ashley. The picture opened for a run of ten days at the Park theater, New York City, on Wednesday, September 12, and was greeted with loud enthusiasm by an audience among whom were many of Russian nationality. It is well and carefully made and covers in a general way the history of events which finally engulfed the royal family of Russia, and in the weave of which Rasputin, the Black Monk, was the chief artist. Lack of knowledge of actual incidents in this chain of events which led the way for the crafty peasant from the ranks of the lowly to the palace of royalty prevents us from passing judgment on the production, except in the general outline, which we believe is true to the history of Russia for the past eighteen to twenty years. It follows in a dramatic way the career of Rasputin, touches delicately the domestic life of the royal family of Russia, with its weak-kneed Czar, and finally, after the splendidly staged assassination of Rasputin, leads from the gloom of cruel conspiracy to the sunshine of liberty and the forced abdication of the Czar. In the role of the latter Hubert Wilkie is highly deserving of praise, and while in feature Mr. Wilkie is not an altogether satisfactory double for the Czar, it must be admitted that he carries out the idea of dignified royalty to the very last letter.

Montagu Love plays the role of Rasputin in a marvelous manner. June Elvidge in the role of Raff's wife is beautiful, and so also is Lillian Cook as her daughter. Others of the cast equally effective in the roles which they portrayed are Irving Cummings, Julia Dean, Henry Hull and Arthur Ashley.

"A Man's Man."

Seven-Part Photo-Melodrama Starring J. Warren Kerrigan Is Full of Action and Humor—A Paralta Release.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MODERN romantic drama of the quality shown in "A Man's Man," a seven-part photoplay, released by Paralta, with J. Warren Kerrigan as the hero, will entertain any human being with red blood in his veins. No matter if it isn't life and the needs of the handsome young American who wins the heroine were never enacted outside of this Richard Harding Davis sort of tale! More's the pity! We have all wished we could stroll about, rescuing beauty in distress and pulling the nose of the villain every time he pokes it where it doesn't belong. Peter B. Kyne has followed an excellent model in writing this story, and started off with an enter-hero-knock-down-villain scene that gets the spectator in the first five minutes. Events of either a thrilling or an amusing nature follow rapidly, after this, the action skipping from California to South America and involving one of those familiar Latin-American revolutions, without which no story of that region is complete. And he has enlivened his tale with an obvious but beguiling humor, that heads off threatening bits of sentimentality before they can do any serious harm.

To Thomas G. Geraghty, who made the scenario, and to Oscar Apfel, who directed the production, go also a substantial share of the credit for the picture's success. Every detail is handled with skill, and a refreshing disregard of how the other fellow did it. The South American atmosphere, the battle scenes and the various features of the production, bear the stamp of authenticity, however.

Scene from "A Man's Man" (Paralta).

The acting comes in for some meed of praise. J. Warren Kerrigan fits the character of John Stuart Webster in all its dimensions. He has the beauty, brains and brawn demanded, and never fails to register the humorous touches that fall to his share. Then there is Lois Wilsonê. This young woman is a real find. Blessed with good looks, a winning personality, and high grade acting ability, she is one of the pleasant surprises disclosed on the screen for some little time. Any male being worthy the name of man would feel just as John Stuart Webster did about her—if he were in J. S. Webster's place. The list of exceptionally good impersonations by the rest of the cast includes Ida Lewis as Mother Jenks, Kenneth Harlan as Billy Geary, Ed. Coxen as John Cafferty, Harry Von Meter as Ricardo Ruey, and Eugene Pallete as Captain Benevido.

Universal Serials

"The Gray Ghost" Now Reaching an Interesting Conclusion —To Be Followed Shortly by "The Red Ace."

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE Universal serial known as "The Gray Ghost" is now approaching the final instalments. This has provided a generous combination of mystery and thrills, and the story interest has held up in a gratifying manner throughout its entire course.

"The Gray Ghost" is an adaptation of a story by Arthur Somers Roche, published in the "Saturday Evening Post" under the title of "Loot." Harry Carter is featured in the name part, playing the master criminal in a very satisfying manner. He is supported by a pleasing cast, which includes Eddie Polo, Priscilla Dean, Emory Johnson and others.

The "big" incident of this serial occurs in the early instalments, where "The Gray Ghost" and his followers plan and carry out the wholesale looting of a jewelry house in broad daylight. This operation carries over into two numbers and is staged on an elaborate scale, making a criminal exploit so gigantic in scope that it takes the observer's breath away. The further developments, in which the master criminal and his followers are rounded up, continue the interent well. There is perhaps a little spinning out of certain situations to make the required sixteen instalments, but the love story and various side plot features justify this course. The serial as a whole is one of strong interest.

Immediately following this the Universal will release a new serial, entitled "The Red Ace." This features Marie Walcamp, who had the leading feminine role in "Liberty." The first nine episodes of "The Red Ace" have been seen by the reviewer, and it may be safely promised that admirers of "Liberty" will find this a worthy successor. This, also, is an adventure story, the scenes occurring in a wild and rugged mining country. The heroine, through the death of her father, who was murdered by foreign spies, falls heir to a hidden platinum mine. She visits this region and is immediately set upon by the spies, who seek to gain possession of the key to a cache of platinum left by her father.

This serial, written and directed by Jacques Jaccard, has a sustained story interest and contains many thrills. Larry Peyton, Yvette Mitchell, and many real and "make believe" Indians are in the supporting cast.

Kalem Favorites in "Ham" Comedies

Director Al Santell Recruited Versatile Players from Kalem Dramatic Companies to Support His Stars.

IN ANNOUNCING release of new "Ham" comedies, featuring Ham and Bud, the Kalem Company calls attention to the strong company of funmakers assembled to support the comedians.

Following "Politics at Pumpkin Center," announced last week, Kalem will issue two ludicrous one-reel skits, "The Boot and the Loot" and "A Whirlwind of Whiskers," directed by Al Santell. In "The Boot and the Loot" Edythe Sterling, leading woman in the "Stingaree" series, displays her versatility as a comedienne, and the company also include John Steppling and Henry Murdock. Marin Sais, star of "The American Girl," "The Girl from Frisco" and other Kalem series, is the comedienne in "A Whirlwind of Whiskers," recalling to her many admirers the days in which she made laughs in comedies. R. E. Bradbury and Edward Clisbee, who created many splendid character roles in Kalem series, are also in the cast.

Director Santell went in for spectacular burlesque melodrama in these new issues. A wild street-car that raises havoc and a torrent raging in a sewer figure in "The Boot and the Loot," and "A Whirlwind of Whiskers" presents a sensational chase over the tops of skyscrapers, Ham and Bud precipitating their pursuers through a skylight.

After Mallards on the Carolina Coast.

The eighty-sixth release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine-on-the-screen," is of special interest to every lover of the great outdoors. E. F. Warner, of Field and Stream Magazine, one of America's greatest sportsmen, furnishes the material for an exciting day among the great marshes on the coast of Carolina, where myriads of ducks stop over on their way south for the winter. Here is a hunter's paradise, indeed.

In order to get this picture it was necessary to construct a great blind in which to hide the cameraman, for the birds are easily frightened and would take flight at the slightest provocation. The blind was built on a pile of logs in order to get near enough to the scene of action, and, as logs have a tendency to roll over in water, the cameraman got several wettings before the day was over. Fortunately, however, he managed to keep the camera from sharing his misfortunes, so that none of the film was injured.

Lou Marks Starred in "Three Comedies"

Commonwealth Comedy Company Stars Keystone Player for General Film Releases.

HAILED as a new luminary in the comedy world, Lou Marks, a former Keystone comedian, has been placed under contract by a recently organized company. Releases of his weekly one-reel eccentric comedy subjects begin September 28 through General Film Company. The brand will be known as "Three C Comedies," from the name of the producing organization, the Commonwealth Comedy Co., Inc., of 1545 Broadway, New York City.

Lou Marks.

Production of "Three C Comedies" has begun at the Thannhouser studio at New Rochelle, where accommodations have been secured under a long lease. Frank P. Donovan is directing Lou Marks, Pearl Shephard, Oom Paul and a large stock company in a series of one-reel pictures which will feature the laugh-inspiring personality of Marks, the piquant beauty of Miss Shephard and the excruciating facial contortions of Paul. Three releases are ready—"His Watery Waterloo," "His Winning Ways" and another subject not yet named. The first-named picture is the first of the series.

Pearl Shephard is no stranger to the motion picture world. She is a 20-year-old girl of bewitching attractiveness and the winner in three beauty contests. The first was at a motion picture exhibitors' convention at Madison Square Garden, followed by an engagement with the Thannhouser company. She has played the feminine lead in Pokes & Jabs comedies and later in the Wizard and Vim comedies.

Jos. S. Klein, a New York attorney, is president of the Commonwealth Comedy Co., Inc., and is remembered as prominent in urging the passage of the new act raising municipal courts of New York to courts of record. He is high in lodge circles and in Democratic politics, and made a speech nominating Mr. Wilson for President at the St. Louis convention. Arnold A. Kline, a building magnate of Newark, N. J., is vice president, and Charles W. Reiser, a public school executive of New York City, is secretary.

Clara Kimball Young on New Picture.

Clara Kimball Young, who has just completed her production of "Magda," the first release by her own organization, which she owns and controls, under the management of Harry I. Garson, has started filming "Shirley Kaye" at the Thannhouser studio in New Rochelle.

Joseph Kaufman, who directed "Broadway Jones," "The Traveling Salesman," and many other notable successes, will direct Miss Young in this, her second production, which will be released some time in October.

"Shirley Kaye" will be followed by "The Marionettes," Miss Young having finally established her right to that play, which was contested some time ago by the Charles Frohman interests.

"Magda," "Shirley Kaye," and "The Marionettes" will be the only three pictures Miss Young will do in the East, as she contemplates a de luxe production of "The Savage Woman" as her fourth release. Immediately after the holidays Miss Young will take her entire company to Porto Rico and other islands in the West Indies to film what, in her estimation, is to be her masterpiece.

After "The Savage Woman" is completed, Miss Young will proceed to California, and it may be that a new and strictly modern up-to-date studio will be ready for her occupancy by that time, as Mr. Garson is already considering several advantageous locations.

The "Magda" release date will be announced in a few days.

New Lloyd Comedy.

"By the Sad Sea Waves" is the title of the Harold Lloyd comedy which Pathe will release on September 30. It is described as a girl show, with Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels as the Beachhound, Snub, and the Doll, respectively, and it is said to be one of a thousand feet of laughs, girls and prize-winning bathing suits.

The extremely speedy action for the most part revolves around the Sousehem Bathhouse and deals with the very funny and finally successful attempts of the Beachhound to save a man, only to find out that he is the wrong one. He is appointed official lifesaver and gets more joy out of the job than one would think possible. This comedy maintains the high standard set by the long list of those in which Harold Lloyd has scored so heavily.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

WORLD LIBRARY NO. 18 (Selig), Sept.—The subjects covered in this issue of the World Library are "Harvesting Lima Beans in California," "Famous Zoo at Sidney, Australia," "Oyster Harvest in Chesapeake Bay," and "Famous Mausoleums of Chinese Mings."

WHAT TRANSPIRED AFTER THE WINDUP (Essanay).—One of the George Ade fables, and an entertaining comedy subject. The principles of the fable are Ferdie, a male vampire, and Adele, a graduate of a high-class reform school. The fable follows in the most amusing manner the love story of the pair, and excels as a film production by reason of clever staging.

THE BOOT AND THE LOOT (Kalem).—A comedy number, featuring Lloyd V. Hamilton and A. E. Duncan in the familiar characters of "Ham" and "Bud." Ham poses as a street car conductor and trades a street car to an Italian for his bootblack stand. This results in a number of burlesque comedy situations, which are quite laughable throughout. Later they get into further difficulties by trailing the wrong individual as a criminal suspect.

THE VICTOR OF THE PLOT (Selig).—A two-part military story, the scene of which is laid in India. The picture is a reissue and is slightly out of date in more ways than one, but is not altogether lacking in interest. It contains plenty of action, but has a slender stock which is rather hard to analyze.

BLINDMAN'S HOLIDAY (Broadway Star Feature).—A picturized O. Henry story in four parts, directed by Martin Justice, this photoplay is not one of its famous author's best plots. He has forced the use of coincidence beyond the limit. The story is an appealing one, however, and is fairly well acted. It shows how far a woman will go in sacrificing herself for those she loves.

THE VOICE THAT LED HIM (Selig).—This is a reissue of a one-reel drama in which Kathleen Williams appeared some time ago. It contains some interesting animal scenes, and Miss Williams does a remarkable scuffle with a tiger cub. The picture has, of course the stamp of the period in which it was produced. The story tells of a naturalist who went with his wife to Africa, and while there his wife, through carelessness, breaks a valuable negative belonging to her husband. He leaves the bungalow in a rage, refusing to speak a word of forgiveness. In his absence his wife is killed by a tiger, and the remainder of his life is spent in following the voice of his wife, which is always calling him.

A WHIRLWIND OF WHISKERS (Kalem).—A "Ham" comedy, featuring Lloyd V. Hamilton and A. E. Duncan as Ham and Bud. They are mistaken for detectives and set upon the trail of a counterfeiter. Numerous scenes occur in a barber shop, and at the close there is a chase over roof tops. This is a characteristic number and will bring numerous laughs.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

BARBARY SHEEP (Sept. 10).—A romantic drama of exceptionally fine craftsmanship, strong in suspense and in the self-struggle of a refined woman with primitive desire, Elsie Ferguson in the leading role.

Art Dramas, Inc.

BEHIND THE MASK (U. S. Amusement Corporation), Sept. 3.—A five-reel drama, in which Catherine Calvert is featured. The story tells of a woman who marries a man to strike at the daughter of the man who ruined her father. After marriage she hates her husband, becomes blind, and is finally won over by him. A longer review can be found in the review columns.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE MYSTERIOUS MR. TILLER, Sept. 17.—An absorbing five-reel mystery number, featuring Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford. Mr. Julian plays a double role, not by the ordinary means of double exposure, but by clever facial distortions. The plot is complicated and thrilling. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Butterfly Pictures.

THE SPINDLE OF LIFE, Sept. 17.—A five-reel number of a light, generally engaging type, featuring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber. The story, adapted from a novel by Sidney Robinson, has its principal scenes at a seaside resort and in the New York stock market. The number is a pleasing one of its kind. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Christie Film Company.

CRAZY BY PROXY.—An amusing comedy of the farce order in which a bridegroom almost misses his wedding appointment because of being kidnapped. A review of the picture will be found elsewhere.

GREEN EYES AND BULLETS.—A farce comedy in which a young husband causes his bride much distress, carelessness and jealousy. The situation is an amusing one which is explained in a full review of the picture to be found elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE CONQUERORS (Standard Picture).—The life of General Sam Houston is the subject of this eight-part picture, William Farnum having the role. R. A. Walsh had charge of the production. The work is important. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

WHEN FALSE TONGUES SPEAK (Fox), Sept. 9.—A five-reel melodrama with Virginia Pearson and, as a whole, a very able cast. It is not an artistic production and a good deal of it is crude. Some of its climaxes are sure to please greatly, and one or two of its subtitles are perfect, though most of its subtitles are weak. It has many pretty scenes. This reviewer saw it with a cheap audience and there it went pretty well. It is not a sure picture for a critical audience.

Greater Vitagraph.

AN ALABASTER BOX (Sept. 10).—Mary E. Wilkins Freeman is the author of this five-part New England romance, in which Alice Joyce and Marc McDermott are featured. The story is interesting and the production does it justice. Reviewed at length on page 1859, issue of Sept. 22.

FOR FRANCE (Sept. 17).—The present war furnishes the background for this five-part Blue Ribbon written by Cyrus Townsend Brady. The picture has a good plot and is well produced. A battle at the finish introduces British, French and German soldiers and an American hero. A longer review will be found on another page of this issue.

RISKS AND ROUGHNECKS (Vitagraph).—Some amazing acrobatic stunts are the principal features of this one-reel knockabout farce, invented by Lawrence Semon and Graham Baker. Everything and everybody moves so fast that the plot is soon left behind, but the supply of broad humor keeps pace with the action.

PLANS AND PAJAMAS (Vitagraph).—Another Semon-Baker one-reel knock-about farce; it shows the interior of a female boarding school and a lively chase by the inmates after a burglar. Up to the average of this brand of pictures.

M. H. Hoffman, Inc,

ONE HOUR.—A satisfactory six-reel drama, featuring Zena Keefe and Alan Hale. There are many beautiful snow exteriors, and the story holds interest throughout the six reels. The tale centers around the lives of two young people who, at first in the Adirondacks, later go to Europe, where each, it develops, is the member of a royal family of small kingdoms. The story at all times interests. A longer review may be found in the review columns.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

THE MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY (Jewel).—A five-part screen version of Edward Everett Hale's famous story, the patriotic appeal of this picture is timely. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay.

CONQUEST PROGRAM NO. 8 (Edison), Sept.—The general quality of this program is unusually good. The subjects which it contains, and which have been reviewed at length elsewhere, are a three-part story of college life, entitled, "T. Haviland Hicks, Freshman," the Richard Harding Davis story, "Gallegher," in two parts, and three educationals, "Turning Out Silver Bullets," containing scenes photographed at the Philadelphia Mint; "Young Salts," consisting of some splendidly photographed scenes with the students at the Culver Military Academy, and "The Holy Land."

A CONTENTED WOMAN (Selig).—One of the Charles Hoyt comedies, produced in two parts. This comedy is not high-class, but is amusing. We could not recommend it, however, for a refined motion picture program. As the story runs, a wife who is taken up with the woman suffrage question leaves her husband and son at home to get the dinner while she attends a meeting. The men try to do the cooking, and succeed in making some disgusting exhibitions. They then turn the matter over to a caterer, and go to the theater. Here they are taken up with some dancing girls, one of whom accompanies them home, and is found there by the wife on her return.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

UNDER HANDICAP (Yorke), Sept. 3.—The story of a rich man's son and how he made good in spite of his financial handicap, this eight-part photoplay offers Harold Lockwood a congenial role, and has been carefully produced. A longer review was printed on page 1858 of the issue of Sept. 22.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 141 (Gaumont), Sept. 12.—Interesting items of this issue are scenes in revolutionary Russia, a German aeroplane which took fire and fell behind the French lines, Ruth Law with her aeroplane at the Ohio State University, a hurried erection of barracks at Camp Gordon, Ga., President Wilson leading the parade of the National Army in Washington, and the "Jackies" on the old exposition ground at San Diego. This last presents a beautiful picture.

THE RAINBOW GIRL (American), Sept. 17.—A five-part production featuring pretty Juliette Day, with George Fisher playing opposite her. The production is crude, and what interest the story might succeed in inspiring is partially destroyed by the quality and arrangement of subtitles. The picture treats of the love story of a young woman who meets her Prince Charming through renting one of the rooms in her father's home. The young man who has come to the city for the purpose of selling his own musical compositions finally makes good and tells the girl of his love for her.

THE LOST EXPRESS (Signal), Sept. 17.—The initial release of the new Mutual serial promises that the story of the picture, which is by Frederick B. Bennett, will be an interesting one. Plenty of action marks this serial in which Helen Holmes is again featured, but, as usual with serials of this class, inconsistencies crop out. A full review will be found elsewhere.

THE LOST EXPRESS (Signal), Sept. 24.—The second episode of "The Lost Express" is entitled "The Destroyed Document" and shows how after the mysterious disappearance of the express train on which the contents of the Thurston vault, which included a valuable formula for granulated gasoline, were being conveyed, a missing sheet of this document is found. The thieves trying to make a getaway are traced by Helen and a detective, and Helen, creeping along the top of the train in which they are traveling, succeeds in destroying the document. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

SEEING THINGS (Klever), Sept. 3.—A Victor Moore comedy in which the comedian returns from a sanitarium only to find that he is far from being cured. Among the optical illusions which haunt him is in the form of a man whom he calls Gloomy Gus. The picture is not of the highest type of comedy and the optical illusions referred to are really delirium tremens, the man having been sent to the sanitarium to take a drink cure.

THE HOSTAGE (Lasky), Sept. 10.—Wallace Reid is featured in an absorbing five-reel drama written by Beulah Marie Dix. Few photoplays attain the degree of sustained interest found in this one. There is suspense in every foot. Love interest is there, too. The story is a war story, but there are no battle scenes. A longer review is printed in the review columns.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

IN THE WAKE OF THE HUNS (Pathe), Sept. 23.—Three reels of official French pictures, taken in the battle region after Von Hindenburg's "victorious retreat." The ruin and desolation in the Somme the Oise and on the Aisne are pictured in all their appalling tragedy. Shattered villages, blown up bridges, devastated orchards and every imaginable form of vandalism that may be inflicted upon mere property are shown. Occasional peasants are seen among the ruins and this gives a human touch to the views. Armies on the march and big guns in action are also shown. A strong subject of the kind.

THE DESPERATE CHANCE (Pathe), Sept. 23.—Episode No. 12 of "The Fatal Ring." Numerous events of stirring interest occur in this instalment. Pearl struggles with Carslake on top of a swiftly moving passenger train, which both leave in a daring manner. Tom Carlton proposes to her after some pleasing comedy scenes. In the final reel "The Spider" and his gang join Pearl in pursuit of Carslake and some thrilling roof-top scenes take place.

UNDER FALSE COLORS (Thanhouser-Pathe), Sept. 23.—An "up-to-the-minute" five-reel subject, by Lloyd Lonergan, featuring Frederick Warde and Jeanne Eagles. The story concerns the recent Russian revolution and the scenes are laid in Petrograd and America. This has a good, dramatic plot and is presented by a strong cast. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

PINCHED (Pathe), Sept. 23.—A knockabout comic, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. This is full of amusing small business, which brings numerous laughs. The chief scenes occur in a park and later in a jail, where the leading character finds himself a prisoner. A good light subject.

EMBROIDERY MAKING (Pathe), Sept. 23.—An instructive industrial subject, demonstrating the way in which embroideries are made by machine processes. This is gone into thoroughly and watching it is as good as a trip to the factory itself. A good half reel subject.

THE TANK (Pathe), Sept. 23.—An amusing half reel comic, by F. Opper. This pictures in animated drawings the adventures of "Happy Hooligan" with a fearful and wonderful new invention for making war, though the action is not sanguinary. On same reel with above; very amusing.

Peter Pan Film Corporation.

The picture is reviewed at length on page 1859 of the issue of Sept. 22.

FLYING COLORS, Sept. 23.—A five-part photoplay with William Desmond as the star, the story is optimistic and tells how a Yale athlete turns detective and captures a gentleman crook and a sweetheart. Well acted and produced. Reviewed at length on page 1857 of the issue of Sept. 22.

THE TIGHTENING SNARE (Universal Special), Sept. 17.—No. 13 of "The Gray Ghost" serial. In this number the Gray Ghost captures Hildreth and Morn Light on the eve of their wedding, by passing himself off as their chauffeur. THE FOUNTAIN OF TROUBLE (Joker), Rel. Week of Sept. 24.—A comic number, by A. F. Statler, featuring William Franey, Milburne Moranti and Ida Tenbrook. Franey picks up a small white elephant on the beach and wears it on his coat. A gang of pickpockets, thinking he is one of them, pass their booty over to him. This leads to some amusing knockabout situations. A typical number of the kind.

TAKING THEIR MEDICINE (Nestor), Rel. Week of Sept. 24.—This is a one-reel Western comedy with Edith Roberts, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Fred Gamble. When the girl visits the ranch, all the cowboys pretend to be sick so that they may be nursed by her. Her father fixes up a combination of castor oil and worm medicine for her to administer. This is a very funny comedy.

MARBLE HEADS (Joker), Rel. Week of Sept. 24.—A comic number, by Tom Gibson, featuring Gale Henry, William Franey, Milton Sims and Milburne Moranti. This number is very amusing. Gale appears as a lady art collector who buys a statue for her garden fete. Franey and Moranti pose after the statue has been broken. A familiar idea worked up in a new and enjoyable way.

YOUR BOY AND MINE (Victor), Rel. Week of Sept. 4.—A one-reel rural comedy. The story tells of two boys who start fighting and soon get all four parents scrapping. But in the end all make up. THE MASTER SPY (Gold Seal), Rel. Week of Sept. 24.—An episode of the "Perils of the Secret Service" series, by George Bronson Howard. An excellent adventure subject, with the present war as a background. Kingsley Benedict gives a stirring performance as the bearer of a secret message, trying to escape to England. The events pictured are exceptionally vivid and exciting. One of the best of the series.

A ROMANY ROSE (Star Featurette), Rel. Week of Sept. 24.—This is the story of a gypsy girl, played by little Lena Baskette, who shows herself to be an excellent child actress. The girl is sold by her father to an old bachelor. He takes good care of her. But the gypsy father being short of money, attempts to steal his daughter back to put her on the vaudeville stage. This is a good picture for children.

THE DYNAMITE SPECIAL (Bison), Rel. Week of Sept. 24.—A two-reel railroad yarn of an absorbing type, by T. Shelley Sutton. Helen Gibson is seen at her best in this, catching a wild engine by means of a motorcycle. She halts the engine and avoids a collision. The suspense is excellent. The story interest is also good. Others in the cast are Mark Fenton, Al Harris, Millard K. Wilson and Val Paul.

AT BAY (Universal Special), Sept. 24.—No. 14 of "The Gray Ghost" series. This opens with a continuation of the fight on the island house between friends of Hildreth and Morn Light and the members of the Gray Ghost band. Jean rescues the captives from the burning house. Russian War Films For State Rights

Overland Film Company Distributing Revolution Films for New Russian Pictures Corporation.

THE New Russian Pictures Corporation has bought the films of the Russian revolution and war, which were imported last month by the Skobeloff committee, and the receipts of which have gone toward the relief of Russian soldiers and prisoners of war. These pictures are said to be the sole record of one of the greatest events in the history of the human race, the living memorial of a great people, for centuries under the yoke of tyranny, at last rising to the realization of their power, and overthrowing the most autocratic government in the world. They show the Russian people at war, first under the rule of the Romanoffs, with the country honeycombed with Teutonic intrigue and later genuinely fighting for their Fatherland under a cleansed and popular administration. They are the only official pictures of these great events.

They are not merely a record of historical events, but the human, flesh-and-blood story of the struggle of the Russian people; pictures which will enable the people of this country to better understand the tremendous forces at work in the Russian mind, the inspired courage and devotion to duty in the hearts of these soldiers of the people. Millions of people swarm the streets of Petrograd, wild with joy in their new-found liberty, and hundreds of thousands follow in stately procession the bodies of their comrades who gave their lives that the New Russia might live.

Samuel Rothapfel, director of the Rialto theater, New York, dropped the regular program in favor of the pictures, which made up the bill for an entire week. The Eighty-first Street theater, New York, has been quick to follow his example, and last week gave over their entire program to the showing of these pictures.

The Overland Film Company is distributing them for the New Russian organization, and Samuel Krellberg, president of the former company, states that there already has been a large demand for territorial rights. The pictures are being sold on the state rights market. Mr. Krellberg said that he was having several new prints made to fill the present demand, and that one would shortly be presented to the government and also to one of the country's great historical societies, to be preserved as a permanent record of these stupendous events

Harry Berg, sales manager of the Overland Company, has started on a trip across the continent, covering the various film centers in the interests of the pictures.

ROBARDS EAST WITH "MOTHERS OF MEN."

Willis Robards, actor-director and manager of the Robards Players, has come East with what is said to be one of the most remarkable pictures yet produced. The story and scenario of the picture, which is entitled "Mothers of Men," was written by Hal Reid, one of the ablest of the present day photoplay writers. It is on the order of suffrage propaganda, based on the election of a woman to the governorship of a Western state and of her finding herself in the position of having to pass judgment upon her husband, accused of murder. A series of complications develops and in their unraveling a story has been constructed.

The cast includes such notables as Dorothy Davenport, Katherine Griffith, Willis Robards, Mr. and Mrs. Hal Reid and others. It is a six-reel picture of the very highest grade in respect to acting, directing and photography.

Willis Robards, the director, is most enthusiastic about its future, for it has been particularly well received at several private showings. Mr. Robards feels confident that it will be a brilliant success.

BOBBY BUMPS STARTS FOR SCHOOL.

In the eighty-fifth release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine-on-the-screen," an adventure which goes down in the life of every youngster, is the saddest in his career, the first day at school, furnishes the material for another of the famous Bobby Bumps series of animated cartoons, and this promises to be the funniest that Earl Hurd, artist and humorist, has contributed.

Two Directors For Bushman and Bayne

Stars Not to Lose Time Between Pictures—Brabin and Carewe the Directors.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN, Metro star, will begin immediately on a double director system, whereby he will not lose a moment's time between productions. First under one director and then under another, he and his co-star, Beverly Bayne, will keep constantly busy. Under the new system, to be inaugurated at once by Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro studio, one of Metro's directing staff will complete the direction of one Super-Feature and another will begin at once on the direction of the next production. The first director will retire into the inner chambers of the studio to cut and assemble his picture, watch it as shown in the projection room, O. K. the finished proof, and make arrangements for his next picture.

In illustration of this plan Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne are at present completing work under the direction of Charles Brabin on the production of "God's Outlaw," a screen version of Max Brand's story to appear simultaneously with its release in the All-Story Weekly. Immediately thereafter the two stars will begin work under the direction of Edwin Carewe on a new feature production to be called "The Voice of Conscience." It has been written by Finis Fox, author of "The Jury of Fate," a recent Metro wonderplay starring Mabel Taliaferro. Mr. Fox is a brother of Edwin Carewe, the director, and will be associated with him in this production as co-director. "The Voice of Conscience" is a Southern story, part of the scene being on a cotton plantation. In it Mr. Bushman plays a dual role of an entirely new type.

Gladys Hulette Heads Pathe Program

She Appears in "A Crooked Romance," a Five-Reel Feature—Serials and Single Reels Complete the List for Week of September.

GLADYS HULETTE will again appear as the feature player of Pathe's program for the week of September 30, and the other box office stars on the same program are Mollie King, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd. Miss Hulette is seen in a five-reel feature produced by the Astra Film Corporation under direction of William Parke, and entitled "A Crook of Romance." It is stated that this will probably be even more popular than any Gladys Hulette pictures yet because it has every element that appeals to the public, and because it has in the splendid supporting cast Paul Clerget, one of the most famous actors of France, who recently came to this country and made a hit in "Pierrot the Prodigal," which was produced by Winthrop Ames, and was one of the big successes of last season. There is also J. H. Gilmour and William Parke, Jr., in addition to a number of other well-known players in lesser roles. "A Crooked Romance" is comedy-drama, with a touch of "fantasy" that would do credit to J. M. Barrie.

Mollie King is starred in the third episode of the "Seven Pearls" serial entitled "The Air Peril." She is supported by Creighton Hale and Leon Bary.

This chapter has one of the biggest thrills ever seen on the screen. Mollie King is tied to a balloon by a rope, which is being slowly eaten away by acid. Creighton Hale attempts to rescue her in an aeroplane, and his efforts are combatted by the villain in another machine.

"A Dash for Arabia" is the title of the thirteenth episode of "The Fatal Ring," in which Pearl White stars.

In this chapter, Pearl and Carslake are discovered struggling on a beam between two roofs in midair. In a thrilling manner Pearl escapes. Carslake starts for Arabia, where he expects to use the power given him by the Violet Diamond. He is followed by Pearl, Tom Carleton and the Spider. Pearl is shanghaied, but jumps overboard. Sailors bribed by Carslake pursue her. Tom Carleton and the Spider race to her rescue in a motorboat. The steering gear breaks after they have succeeded in getting Pearl into the boat. They find themselves in the path of a swiftly approaching ferry boat, and Pearl is taken up in the paddle wheel to what looks like certain death as the picture fades out.

"By the Sad Sea Waves" is a one-reel Girl Show, with Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard, and Bebe Daniels. It is one thousand feet of laughs, girls and prize winning bathing suits.

"The American Switzerland" (Glacier National Park) is a scenic release produced by Ralph Earle, and showing the most beautiful spots in the "Alps of the U. S. A."

An International Cartoon and Scenic split reel subject and Hearst-Pathe News No. 80 and 81 complete this program.

State Rights Department

Conducted by BEN H. GRIMM

Independent Producers Organize

Form Producers' Protective Association—Headed by William L. Sherrill—Purpose Is Regulation of State Rights Field.

FOURTEEN independent state rights producers on Wednesday, September 12, met and formed the Producers' Protective Association, an organization whose avowed purpose is to "regulate the state rights field." The meeting was held at the offices of William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. The certificate of incorporation was presented and accepted, as also were the by-laws under which the organization will operate.

The following were elected directors for the first year: William L. Sherrill, Leopold Wharton, Harry Rapf, Jesse J. Goldburg and I. N. Chadwick. It is expected that one of the directors will withdraw from that position at the next meeting and that M. A. Schlesinger, of the Mayfair Film Corporation, will take his place on the board. It is also understood that one of the officers will withdraw as such in favor of Mr. Schlesinger. The officers elected Wednesday night were William L. Sherrill, president; Leopold Wharton, vice president, and Jesse J. Goldburg, secretary and treasurer.

The objects of the new organization are radical and far-reaching. They tend toward the complete systematization of state rights producing and distributing.

The organization was conceived by Mr. Sherrill and was prompted by the unsettled state of business and the doubtful aspect with which banking institutions doing business with state rights producers view the present manner of conducting and regulating the sales market of independent attractions.

The business affairs of the organization will be in the hands of a board of directors of five headed by the president of the association. The by-laws contain, among others, the following provisions, as objects of the association:

"To regulate the medium of advertising, the members agreeing not to patronize any publication, lithographer, printer, slide manufacturer, engraver or any other concern unless such publication or concern has been listed with the association as one worthy of the patronage of the members of the association.

"To pass upon all grievances of members against any person, concern or corporation, and in the event of the complaint being sustained, the members of the association agree not to employ or do business with such person, firm or corporation. This applies to commercial institutions, trade publications, actors, directors, as well as state rights buyers." (The by-laws do not provide for any hearing to the person or firm against whom a complaint is lodged.)

"The employment of outside brokers for the sale or leasing of the productions of members is prohibited.

"A complete record of all transactions with state rights buyers on the part of members of the association is to be kept to the end that a commercial rating may be had, and the failure of any exchange to live up to its obligation will prevent it from doing business with any other member in the future.

"A central sales exchange is to be established. All productions of the members must be listed on the floor of the association, with territory open and price asked. All productions will be sold by the association for the benefit of its members. A print of each production, with a complete line of advertising matters, must be deposited with the manager of the association, who will have charge of the sales. A percentage of the gross receipts on all productions of a member is payable to the association."

Mr. Sherrill made the following statement as to the future intended operations of the association:

"We have aimed primarily to systematize our business. At present the disposition of state rights production is without a head or tail. We intend encouraging the states rights buyer to assist him in the operation of a legitimate business, but where any given territory is without any buyer with whom we can deal we intend ultimately to open our own producers' exchange in that territory. We are fortifying ourselves against every contingency by the accumulation of a treasury that can meet every new circumstance as it may arise. You can compute the amount in back of this association when I tell you that the average number of productions of the present membership of fourteen is a minimum of five a year, and the minimum average receipts on each production is $50,000. This makes a gross return on the productions of the members of $700,000 annually, and the percentage due the association will amount to a minimum of $35,000, a sum sufficient not alone to establish exchanges but to meet every contingency.

"And, of course, as we live we expect to grow. Other state rights producers will join us. But for the present we have sufficient to know we are a going institution to be reckoned with, and one that will cure, I hope, many of the evils of the motion picture business. We are not in opposition to any other organization but rather in the spirit of good and welfare do we desire to co-operate with them in their legitimate endeavors."

Mr. Sherrill also stated that the organization was going to obtain the services of the ablest man possible, who will become manager of the central exchange. In this exchange will be offices for out-of-town buyers, a projection room, and other conveniences—factors that will make it possible for the buyer to look over virtually every picture produced which is available for his territory.

Another object of the organization will be the active and hearty discouragement of "illegitimate" pictures—pictures that are freaks and which are produced sometimes by unscrupulous persons who hope to clean up quick and get away. In fact, the chief objective of the producers is the stabilization of the state rights field.

Those concerns which are listed as members in the new organization are: The Frohman Amusement Corporation, Wharton, Inc., Mayfair Film Corporation, A. H. Jacobs Photoplays, Inc., Harry Rapf, Edward Warren Productions, W. R. Rothacker, Arrow Film Corporation, Cosmophotofilm, Ivan Film Productions, Inc., Duplex Film Corporation, Crystal Film Corporation, Ogden Pictures Corporation and Author's Film Corporation.

Kopfstein Made Foreign Buyers' Head.

Elected Managing Director of Recently Formed Foreign Film Buyers' Association.

AT a meeting held at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Thursday, September 13, at which a majority of the members of the Foreign Film Buyers' Association were present, it was unanimously decided that Jacques Kopfstein be empowered to transact all business for the association in connection with the screening and purchasing of films for the foreign market. The official title voted upon Mr. Kopfstein was that of managing director.

The representatives of the foreign buyers' association present expressed gratification at the manner in which the association was being rounded into shape, and cables from the firms which they represent were read at the meeting, the tenor of which expressed great satisfaction in the forming of the new body.

The question of the embargo on foreign shipments of American films was discussed, and Mr. Kopfstein was empowered to appoint a committee to cope with this problem. L. R. Thomas was delegated by the association to take the matter up in Washington with the proper individuals, and immediately left for that city.

The question of arranging proper banking connections to facilitate the transfers of credits was also brought up, and Mr. Kopfstein reported that he had taken this matter up with various banks and that they thought favorably of the plan and only awaited more specific details before going further into the matter. Several new buyers made application for membership in the body.

KING-BEE TO THE COAST.

The demand for the King-Bee brand of comedies featuring Billy West is so great that the studio at Bayonne will be vacated next month and the entire organization will be taken to the King-Bee studios in Los Angeles, where they will work night and day to supply the demand for these popular two-reelers.

President Burstein will accompany the company, which will have a special pullman and baggage car. In the roster are Babe Hardy, Lew White, Bud Ross, Ethel Gibson, Harry Cooper, Martha Dean, Jackie Jackson, Sam LeRose and Ellen Burford. Arvid Gillstrom, director of these comedies, will leave a week earlier.

While on the coast the King-Bee will make in conjunction with their two-reel comedies a special five-reel feature entitled "King Soloman," with the inimitable Billy West in the title role.

LESSER BUYS "MAD LOVER" AND "TODAY."

All Star Features Distributors, Inc., of which Sol. Lesser is the head, has obtained from Pathe the rights to "The Mad Lover" and "Today" for California, Nevada and Arizona. Mr. Lesser states that these two Pathe pictures should break all records in his states. He ranks these pictures very high from every commercial standpoint.

"Grain of Dust" Next Ogden Picture

Lillian Walker to Star in Screen Version of David Graham Phillips' Best Novel.

A CONTRACT was signed by the Ogden Pictures Corporation with the estate of David Graham Phillips, James K. Hackett and the American Play Company, through their representative, Edgar Selden, whereby the Ogden Pictures Corporation receives the world's motion picture rights to David Graham Phillips' most popular novel, "The Grain of Dust."

Lillian Walker, the star of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, will portray the title role.

"The Grain of Dust" is considered the high-water mark of the late David Graham Phillips' novelistic achievement, and the circulation of that novel has exceeded any other published in the past ten years. The story ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post.

"In purchasing the screen rights to 'The Grain of Dust,'" said Albert Scowcroft, president of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, "we are merely carrying out our announced policy of doing the biggest things in the biggest possible way. We are striving to visualize those works of literature which have met the popular approval of men and women the world over and we feel that in acquiring the rights to 'The Grain of Dust' we are adhering to our announced purpose. In these days of extraordinary photoplay attractions where the release of one seems to top the unusual production of the day before, producers are hard put to it to keep pace with the rapid strides of other ambitious producers, to say nothing of excelling them, but we pride ourselves in being able to announce the coming screening of such a wonderful novel as David Graham Phillips' masterpiece, 'The Grain of Dust.'"

SUPREME GETS THREE BIG FILMS.

With the acquisition of three stellar productions—Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, in "Redemption," William S. Hart in "The Cold Deck," and H. B. Warner in "God's Man," the Supreme Photo-Play Productions of Pittsburgh, Pa., now rank as not only one of the largest individual feature productions exchange in Pennsylvania, but one of the biggest in the United States.

Much credit is due Harry F. Grelle, the general manager, for the phenominal growth of this concern. Starting in humble quarters on Fourth avenue several years ago, the growth of this company was rapid until today the exchange occupies the fourth floor of the Seltzer building and is the mecca for visiting exhibitors from all over western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The Pittsburgh exchange, in addition to looking out for the entire western Pennsylvania territory, also books West Virginia. Among the big productions controlled by this company are the following: "The Masque of Life," "Idle Wives," "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Unwritten Law," "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Spoilers," "The Cold Deck," "God's Man" and "Redemption."

"OVER THERE" COMPLETED BY RICHMAN.

The Charles Richman Pictures Corporation has just completed its first picture, entitled "Over There." The title is used through the courtesy of George M. Cohan and is the same as his internationally popular song.

James Kirkwood, formerly director for Mary Pickford, directed the picture, and the cast includes, besides Mr. Richman, Anna Q. Nilsson, Walter McGrail, Gertrude Berkeley, Walter Hiers, Veta Searl and James A. Furey.

The trench and battle scenes were supervised by Lieut. W. A. O'Hara, of the 24th Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, who spent several months in the trenches in France and actively participated in the famous battles of Somme, Ypres and Vimy. It is said that the battle scenes are unusually realistic and thrilling.

JULES BURNSTEIN LAUNCHES "SHAME."

With the Jimmy Dale serial well on its way to prosperity through the Mutual exchanges, Jules Burnstein is rapidly greasing the ways for the launching of the recently completed John W. Noble picture, "Shame," which will be distributed on the state rights basis.

Mr. Burnstein, whose record as a motion picture distributing expert includes long terms as manager of the Mutual and Pathe exchanges, respectively, has been devoting his time exclusively to the E. K. Lincoln Grey Seal Serial since the starting of the popular set of pictures early last spring.

Few men have made a deeper study of the exchange end of the motion picture business than Mr. Burnstein. Equipped with a valuable business training and blessed with a strong and winning personality, he took his place among the leaders when the art was still young and has kept in intimate touch with the many problems of film distribution during the constantly changing conditions of the industry ever since. As the manager of two of the largest exchanges his wide acquaintance includes active motion picture men in every city of the country, and his frequent trips to the large film centres are always signals for impromptu reunions.

The news that Mr. Burnstein is arranging for the launching of the special state rights picture "Shame," added to the fact that it is a seven-reel John W. Noble feature, speaks volumes for its importance as a production.

GLUCKSMANN OPENS OFFICE IN NEW YORK.

Max Glucksmann, of Buenos Aires, one of the largest film buyers of South America, has established a permanent New York office under the supervision of his brother, Jacobo, at 110 West Fortieth street, New York. The house of Max Glucksmann is one of the largest exchanges operating in Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile. It controls the exclusive rights in this territory for the Pathe, American, Signal, Selznick, Kalem and Essanay pictures, of American make, and also a number of French and Italian brands.

Upon opening his New York office Mr. Glucksmann said: "We have long been represented in the United States by one of the best buyers and judges of film in the country, but we realize the strong demand for American pictures in our territory and believe it best to locate here permanently. I have just closed a big deal with the Speer Carbon Company for the exclusive rights on their product in Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile, and invite offers from producers and manufacturers at my new office."

"WEAVERS OF LIFE" NEXT WARREN PICTURE.

Edward Warren has decided on "Weavers of Life" as the title for his forthcoming feature. The title is characteristic of the play itself, being justified by an allegorical reference delicately interspersed in the picture.

The art direction, like in the "Warfare of the Flesh," is under the able direction of Mrs. Warren.

Besides the star, Helen Hayes, whom Mr. Warren considers a real find, the cast contains Howard Hall, Kenneth Hunter, Barney Gilmore, Earl Schenck, Edna Hibbard and others, all especially selected to portray their individual parts.

TURNER & DAHNKEN BUY "LUST OF THE AGES."

Turner & Dahnken, of San Francisco, through Bruce Johnson, secretary and general manager of that firm, have purchased the rights for California, Arizona and Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands to the Ogden Film Corporation "The Lust of the Ages."

Patch Decries Broadway Runs

Distributor of "The Italian Battlefront" Declares Forced and Inflated Runs Are Absolute Misrepresentation.

ABROADWAY showing continued beyond the period of the natural drawing powers of a production in order to impress the trade is neither good business judgment nor good ethics, in the opinion of William Moore Patch. Mr. Patch, who recently entered the New York field as the distributor of the Italian War pictures, "The Italian Battlefront," which are being presented in important cities throughout the country, is also president and general manager of the Fort Pitt Theater Company, of Pittsburgh.

"It scarcely would be becoming of me, as a distributor, to criticise the policies of contemporary distributors," said Mr. Patch. "As a moving picture theater owner, however, striving to maintain a standard for my house that will compete with the prices and appeal of theaters showing legitimate attractions, naturally I am affected by any inflated or fictitious values.

"Perhaps that last phase is too strong to apply to productions that are put on Broadway at enormous cost and kept there long after they cease to pay expenses simply to create an impression; but it seems to me that that is as deliberate a misrepresentation as for a merchant to advertise cotton as wool, or for a grocer to short-weight a customer.

"Despite the fact that exaggeration has become such an obsession with us that no one credits anyone's claims, when our turn comes we insist upon deluding ourselves that we can 'get away with it.' This condition has become so general that a real statement of facts, if at all unusual, is given no credence.

"It is a serious condition where business men cannot accept, with reasonable and rational assurance, the statements of other business men as to the value of a given product—serious, not only to the man who is 'taken in' by unfounded claims, but equally as serious to the man, who, because of unfortunate previous experiences, is skeptical even of that which is not overrated, and, therefore, loses the money which he might have made if he had been able to distinguish between the real and the false.

"And now on top of this costly chaos, we have the very marked tendency to add further confustion to the difficulty which already exists by forced and inflated runs along Broadway. For the life of me I cannot see either the commercial justice nor the business advantage to either distributors or exhibitors of promoters deliberately accepting a loss of thousands of dollars in the forlorn hope that the fact that their picture occupied a theater on Broadway for a given number of weeks will induce exhibitors to book that picture.

"It is, it seems to me at least, the most foolish of practices—one that deceives no one except the poor promoters themselves—for bad news travels quicker in the moving picture industry than it can by wireless, and everyone in the country who keeps his fingers on the pulse of things at all knows instantly the real status of the run—whether it is 'starving to death,' 'breaking even,' or 'making money.' And yet the idea that it can be 'put over' prevails.

"Years ago, in the legitimate field, a real Broadway run was worth a fortune in prestige and profits. Not so today. The canny legitimate manager plays his offering on Broadway as long as it makes money—and no longer. There are a few who still defy all the laws of economics, in the hope that they will get it back on the road, but these are fast becoming rarities.

"Broadway no longer possesses the magic spell for the rest of the country that it once did, particularly in the case of moving picture audiences and moving picture theater owners."

"WARRIOR" SHOWN FOR RED CROSS.

Through the courtesy of A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., the cause of the Red Cross was aided materially on Wednesday, Steptember 4, by a showing of "The Warrior," the film spectacle starring Maciste, giant hero of Gabriele D'Annuncio's "Cabiria." The occasion was a special entertainment of the Nassau County Red Cross Society, an important branch of the official parent body, held at Oyster Bay Reformed Church, Oyster Bay, Long Island.

The Reverend William H. Jackson, a prominent clergyman of the city, and member of the staff of the Moving Picture World, was in charge of the affair, and selected "The Warrior" as a particularly fitting film for exhibition at the Red Cross gathering. It may be remarked in passing that one-third of the expenses incurred through the making of bandages, etc., for the American expeditionary force by the Oyster Bay branch of the society have been earned through the exhibition of motion pictures. Mr. Jackson commented upon the readiness with which all his requests for pictures have been met by the various film producers and distributors.

AUSTRALASIAN BUYS "BOUGHT AND PAID FOR."

Hiller & Wilk, Inc., have arranged for the sale of "Bought and Paid For" for Australia and New Zealand, to the Australasian Films, Ltd. "Bought and Paid For" was a big hit in Australia when produced as a stage play, creating a record of ten weeks at Sydney.

Hall Sells Circuit Franchise

L. S. Card Booking Corporation the Purchaser—Will Distribute First National Circuit's Pictures in Jersey.

WITH the forming of the L. S. Card Booking Corporation to distribute the Chaplin pictures in New Jersey comes to light the fact that Frank Hall, the prominent New Jersey exhibitor who last spring closed deals for Edgar Lewis' first special feature, "The Bar Sinister," and Edwin Carewe's Jane Grey production, "Her Fighting Chance," sold his franchise in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., for $32,000. Less than two months before Mr. Hall disposed of the New Jersey franchise he paid exactly $1,750 for it.

The New Jersey franchise for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., was purchased by the L. S. Card Booking Corporation, formed for the express purpose of distributing the Chaplin comedies and other productions purchased by the First National. L. S. Card, whose name the new company bears, has been associated with Frank Hall for the past year as manager of his Civilization Film Corporation, booking "Joan the Woman," "Civilization," "The Whip" and other special features in New Jersey from its headquarters in Newark. Mr. Card is well known in motion picture circles, especially in New Jersey, where he served the Mutual Film Corporation as manager of their Newark exchange for several years.

Closely associated with Mr. Card in the new company will be Edward Church, also of the Civilization Film Corporation, and associated with Mr. Hall in an executive capacity for the past year. Mr. Church, who was prominent in the New York office of the General Film Company from the early days of the motion picture industry until he resigned from that organization two years ago, is one of the most widely experienced exchange men in the business and is co-operating with Mr. Card in working out a plan for Chaplin distribution in New Jersey which he believes will make the L. S. Card Booking Corporation one of the most popular exchanges in the state.

HOFFMAN BUYS "GREAT WHITE TRAIL."

"The Great White Trail" has been acquired from Wharton, Inc., by M. H. Hoffman, Inc. Contracts were signed which transfer the entire American rights to this feature—exclusive of Canada.

M. H. Hoffman is jubilant over his latest acquisition. "It is a picture which is truly 'Foursquare,'" he said. "Artistically it will exert a widespread appeal because the story is as clean and straightforward as the snow in the wonderful scenes depicted in Wharton's 'locations.'"

BRENON'S ILIODOR PICTURE READY.

Following close on the heels of its initial presentation to a big invitation audience at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, Herbert Brenon's gigantic historical panorama, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," depicting the collapse of the Russian autocracy, and all of the developments since the abdication of the Czar, is now offered for sale on a territorial rights basis. Buyers of motion pictures who invariably and properly judge pictures by their possibilities for immediate profits are vitally interested in this, by all odds the biggest of Herbert Brenon productions.

CUMMINS MAKES SEVERAL SALES.

Samuel Cummins, film broker, of 1476 Broadway, has been actively engaged recently in closing several film deals for film productions which have been pending. He closed a deal for John Cort on "The Whirl of Life" to Mr. Carlton, for Scandinavia. He also closed a deal for Trans-Oceanic Film Company of a negative to the Phax Pictures Company, and another negative for the Coronet Film Company. Mr. Cummins also has purchased for one of his clients the exclusive rights to "Enlighten Thy Daughter" for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

SAVINI HANDLING MANY FEATURES.

R. M. Savini, of Atlanta, is making rapid strides at the present time handling the following features: "The Land Just Yonder," six parts; "Warning," six parts; "Her Condoned Sin," six parts; "Woman and the Beast," five parts; "Mother Goose," five parts; "Where Cowboy Is King," four parts; "America Is Ready," four parts, and "Lottery Man," five parts. He intends to purchase four or five more features before the fall of the year and he reports business as being exceptionally good and holds great prospects for winter business in the South.

FLAHERTY CHICAGO "FOURSQUARE" MANAGER.

Frank J. Flaherty, for years one of the most successful managers of motion picture distribution in the west and recently of the Universal, has been engaged to take charge of the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange in Chicago. His assistant is to be Miss Deborah Finnan, who has long held that position with the Universal Chicago branch.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp"

Famous Arabian Nights Tale to Be Fox Film's Next "Kiddie" Production.

AN AMAZINGLY beautiful film production of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," the most fascinating perhaps of all the world-classic Arabian Nights' Tales, is announced in a detailed statement from William Fox. The picture is another of the Kiddies Features series which Mr. Fox has sponsored, and will begin a run on Broadway soon at the Globe theater.

Scene from "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" (Fox).

Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, of "Jack and the Beanstalk" fame, appear in the leading roles of the new cinema—Francis as the son of Mustapha, the tailor, and Virginia as the captivating princess. The production is spectacular in the extreme, and required the services of hundreds of kiddies and the making of countless costumes.

C. M. and S. A. Franklin, who filmed "Jack and the Beanstalk," staged "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." Besides receiving a share of the credit for the children's brilliant dramatic achievements in the new masterpiece, the Franklins have devised a score of ingenious effects in the picture.

The memorable part of the story in which Aladdin rubs the magic lamp and commands the genie who appears to build him a magnificent palace is faithfully reproduced in the photoplay version. A miracle of the screen results in the gradual appearance of a gorgeous structure on the burning sands.

All of the desert scenes are notable because of the splendid photographic record which has been made of them.

From beginning to end the filmed "Aladdin" has a distinct charm. At the very outset the picturegoers are introduced into the wonderful city of old Bagdad. The evening is falling on the Oriental splendor of the ancient mart of the East, and Mohammedans kneel everywhere in prayer.

The Arabs on the heated desert, without the gates, the devout in the Mosques, the powerful in the palaces, and the workers in the bazaars all turn toward Mecca with reverence. Then attention is concentrated on Aladdin.

The genie in "Aladdin" has something of the element of the giant in "Jack and the Beanstalk," and carries out perfectly the impression of being able to do whatever he cares to.

BLACKTON POSTPONES HIS FIRST PARAMOUNT RELEASE.

Rather than be hastened in his productions for Paramount and run the risk of impairing the artistic merit of his photoplays, J. Stuart Blackton has determined to postpone his advent upon the screen as a producer for Paramount. Accordingly, there will be no Blackton production among the Paramount October releases, contrary to a former announcement, and the first Blackton photoplay will not appear until November. Mr. Blackton thereby gains a margin of a full month, which will enable him to conserve to the utmost degree every detail of artistic production in preparing his adaptations of the famous Sir Gilbert Parker novels for the screen.

INDUSTRIAL CONCERNS INSTALLING SIMPLEX.

The National Cash Register Co., Dayton, Ohio, have just added two more Simplex Projectors to their projection equipment, making six Simplex machines now being used by this company.

The selection of Simplex by such well known concerns as the National Cash Register Co., General Chemical Co., Du Pont Powder Co., Larkin Soap Co., Curtis Publishing Co., and others attests to the high esteem in which the Simplex is held by mechanical experts.

The New York State Hospital for the Treatment of Tuberculosis, Ray Brook, N. Y., founded in 1900, for the purpose of giving those having tuberculosis in its early stages an opportunity to recover, have installed a Simplex Projector for the amusement of its guests.

FIRST PARAMOUNT-MACK SENNETT COMEDY FINISHED.

A wire received by Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, from Mack Sennett, in California, imparts the information that the first Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "A Bedroom Blunder" is finished, and that he has completed the assembling of the picture.

"I am very happy to state," night-letters Sennett, "that it is a real knockout—a screaming comedy from start to finish, and you can quote me as saying this."

The assembled print was run off before an audience at the studio, and elicited screams of laughter from even those who were more or less impervious to screen humor through long association with pictures of that sort in the making.

"Roping Her Romeo," the next release, is also virtually finished, and will be followed at regular intervals by others of the same type. As each of these comedies will be produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Sennett himself, their excellence is assured, for there is no one in the entire industry better fitted to turn out farcical films than Mack Sennett, who expresses himself as delighted with his new associations, and declares that everything is running with clocklike precison at the studios.

There is no doubt whatever that the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies will excel anything that has been previously produced of this character—they will be, in brief, the best comedies ever made. The very cream of the companies over which Mack Sennett has held sway has been skimmed for these new productions—every cast is an all-star cast, and every bit of funny "business," every gag, is the result of a carefully thought out plan by a director who has made the production of genuinely funny comedies a life study.

The release date and full particulars of "A Bedroom Blunder," first of the new Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies, will be made public shortly.

U. List for September 24

Headed by New Secret Service Story by Bronson Howard—Five Comedy Novelties and Bison Thriller Completes the Schedule.

THE Master Spy," an episode in the career of Yorke Norroy, secret service agent, written by George Bronson Howard, and directed by Jack Wells, heads Universal's regular schedule of release for the week of September 24th. Kingsley Benedict and Mignon Anderson are the featured players of this stirring Gold Seal drama of life on the border of Russia and Saxonia during the early days of the war.

Yorke Norroy, played by Kingsley Benedict, has secured passports to himself and his fellow agent of the U. S. State Department after considerable difficulty, and is about to leave for home when he is met by John Gaunt, the British agent, with a request to deliver a set of plans of the Saxonia fortresses to Gaunt's superiors in London. Gaunt is in such poor health that he mistrusts his own ability to make the journey, and he tells Norroy that if the documents do not reach their destination he will never be able to collect the two thousand pounds that have been promised him, and his family will be left penniless. Norroy finally agrees to undertake the dangerous mission. The story of the adventures that befall him as a result of his generous impulse provide many blood-stirring scenes to a screen play in which action and vivid characterization are happily blended.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are featured in "Taking Their Medicine," the Nestor comedy to be released Tuesday, September 25th. A burlesque on life as it is lived on the typical cattle ranch of story book and screen is well worked out, with Eddie and Lee the center of the merriment. Edith Roberts, as the belle of the plains, just returned from school, in the cast, also provides her full quota of the entertainment. Fred Palmer prepared the scenario, while Roy Clements is credited with the production.

"Soapsuds and Sirens," a two-reel L-Ko comedy, will be released Wednesday, September 26th, with Gladys Varden, Harry Lorraine, Walter Stephens and Bert Roach in the principal parts. Noel Smith and L. G. Blyston, who are responsible for this merry dissertation upon the craze for classic dancing, have secured several unusual effects in their latest diaphragm-expander. The 91st issue of the Animated Weekly will be released on the same date, containing pictures of the latest and most interesting news events.

Lena Baskette is the star of the dramatic feature scheduled for Thursday, September 27th. "A Romany Rose" is the title of Lena's vehicle, which was written and directed by Myrtle and Marshall Stedman. A number of prominent players appear in support of the little dancing heroine, including Claire McDowell, Charles Hill Mailes, Fred Montague and Nigel Debruiller. The story has to do with a little gypsy girl whose inherent genius as a dancer is exploited by her father without regard for the child's welfare, until fate steps in and changes the course of events.

Widely different in theme is "Marble Heads," the Joker comedy, which will feature Gale Henry and William Franey on the same day. These sure-fire laugh-producers will be shown in a tale which pictures the efforts of an impecunious sculptor to fill the order of a rich patroness who desires two statues for her garden party by whitewashing his two assistants and setting them up on pedestals in place of the real marble gods that were ordered. Tom Gibson and Allen Curtis have done well with script and production, respectively.

Friday, September 28th, will be signalized by the release of an especially good Victor comedy entitled "Your Boy and Mine," in which Lincoln Stedman and Elwood Bredel have the featured roles. The 38th issue of the Universal Screen Magazine will be released on the same date.

Helen Gibson is the star of "The Dynamite Special," the Bison railroad drama, which will be released Saturday, September 29th. The story, which offers Miss Gibson in a strong part, was written by T. Shelley Sutton and George Hively, and produced by J. D. Davis. William Franey will be seen on the same date in a Joker comedy known as "The Fountain of Trouble," written by Arthur F. Statter, and directed by W. W. Beaudine. The 20th issue of Universal Current Events will complete the week's list of releases.

"THE LAST OF THE TROUBADOURS" (General Film).

Handling a tragic climax with such delicate touch as to leave uppermost the humorous atmosphere of unconventional American frontier life, O. Henry wrote in "The Last of the Troubadours" one of his greatest stories. This is the current week's two-reel O. Henry production released through General Film Company as a Broadway Star Feature.

Humorous as this story is, there exists a pathetic trend throughout it that builds up a mountain of sympathy for the one negative character, Ellison. He is a sheep rancher of the type oppressed by cattle barons, gentle, plodding, patient, peaceful. His fortunes and misfortunes provide the background for the dramatic crises. Nolan Leary has been cast as the Troubadour. Jack Abraham plays Ellison, and S. E. Jennings has the "heavy" role as King James. Dan Duffy is also cast. The production was under the supervision of Dave Smith, who employed actual western atmosphere throughout to make it correct and effective.

JACK PICKFORD AND LOUISE HUFF IN "THE GHOST HOUSE."

Once again that clever and universally approved "kid" duo, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, will appear in a Paramount picture as co-stars of "The Ghost House," by Beulah Marie Dix. This will be an October release and was directed by William C. DeMille. The story is one wherein the two talented young people find ample opportunity to display their prowess in acting and considering their past performances for Paramount there is little doubt that they will achieve another triumph of characterization.

In "The Ghost House" Jack Pickford is a college boy, while Louise Huff is the younger of two great-nieces of an old gardner who inhabits a so-called haunted house, which is left to the girls when the old man dies.

In the supporting cast are many players who are familiar to Paramount audiences through their appearance in numerous plays which have found popular favor. Among them are noted Olga Grey, James Neill, Eugene Pallette, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Horace B. Carpenter, Edythe Chapman, Lillian Leighton and Billy Elmer.

CHAPLIN IN "THE ADVENTURER."

Charlie Chaplin's new picture, "The Adventurer," soon to be released by Mutual, is according to the comedian himself, the picture he has long been trying to achieve. It is an indoor and outdoor story, displaying Mr. Chaplin in the role of a mountain climber as well as in numerous other novel activities.

The motive of "The Adventurer" has to do with the efforts of an unfortunate youth with a sense of humor to escape a horde of pursuers who seem to think it is a part of their business to chase a funny man off the earth. Edna Purlance, who supports Mr. Chaplin in most of his comedies, has plenty to do in luring the inimitable Charles into tight places and in rescuing him after he has become so involved that escape seems impossible.

Talk about fun, Chaplin and his tender feet perambulating the sands of the seashore with unnumerable police and coast-guard men on the trail furnish all the fun that can be fixed on a film. The inimitable Charles escapes capture by the narrowest margin dozens of times and eventually emerges from his difficulties, as he always succeeds in doing, right side up with care.

"The Adventurer" is now practically complete, the finishing touches having been added during the last week. More than 20,000 feet of film have been taken in the course of the play's construction. The release date is September 24.

WHERE IS MR. PRICE?

A gentleman representing himself as Roy W. Price, president and treasurer of Park Theater Co., Newton, N. J., succeeded in having two $25 checks cashed by an assistant exchange manager in New York City about ten days ago.

Mr. Price also signed a contract for pictures with this assistant manager, to be played in a new theater. Mr. Price claimed his company was opening up in Hackensack, N. J., and gave as deposit a $40 check, drawn on a Branchville, N. J., bank. This check, together with the two $25 checks, were returned by the bank as forgery.

Mr. Price is about twenty-five years of age, brown hair, blue eyes, heighth 5 ft. 8 in., small scar on right cheek. He claims to have been manager of the Strand theater, Easton, Pa., salesman for Pathe Exchange in Kansas City, Mo., and Detroit, Mich., and Boston salesman for the Metro Exchange.

His whereabouts is desired by the assistant manager of the exchange in question, and if located, kindly communicate with the New York City F. I. L. M. Club, 1482 Broadway.

M. M. MORGAN, Secretary.

New Power's Releases.

The Incandescent Lamp Equipment's Merits Win Recognition at the Safety and Sanitation Exposition.

AT THE Fourth National Safety and Sanitation exposition, held during the week of September 10th, at the Grand Central Palace, New York, one of the drawing features was the program of moving pictures, given twice daily, illustrating safe and unsafe industrial methods and practices.

These pictures were projected by a Power's 6 B equipped with the new incandescent lamp equipment and the excellence of the projection, the ease with which the machine was operated and its extreme portability demonstrated the suitability of the new outfit for church, school and industrial use.

In the Power's booth in the exposition hall a duplicate machine with transformer and switchboard was set up in conjunction with an atmospheric screen, to show the illumination of the incandescent system of lighting.

The 110 volt 7 ampere current at the supply line was transformed to 25 volts 30 amperes, giving 750 watts consumption at the lamp. The switchboard was equipped with an ammeter showing current consumption and permitting the interested observer to see how the outfit was drawing on the supply when the proper illumination was registered on the screen.

The Power Company advises the use of the new system for a throw of from 75 to 80 feet and a picture of from 14 to 15 feet in width and the advantages and capabilities of the outfit as shown evoked much serious interest from visiting manufacturers who are contemplating installing projecting outfits in their plants as an adjunct to their educational systems.

BLUEBIRD FINALLY LIGHTS.

"Anything Once" has been definitely decided upon as the title for the Bluebird in which Franklyn Farnum will appear, Oct. 8, then making his lone-star bow as a stellar Bluebirder. When Joseph De Grasse was producing this feature, "The Maverick" was its working title, but for general distribution it was decided that the title would not be illuminating outside of the cattle country. It was changed to "A Fool for Luck," and then the discovery was made that a similar title had been previously copyrighted. Thus for the third and last time, "Anything Once" was selected as the new and permanent title.

Isola Forrester and Mann Page wrote "Anything Once," as the second comedy film story of Western life that they have done together. "The Quitter," serving Lionel Barrymore among Metros, was their first collaboration for the screen. Joseph De Grasse who has previously directed Dorothy Phillips produced the feature and Claire Du Brey replaced Brownie Vernon as Mr. Farnum's leading lady. Lon Chaney, who has been one of Miss Phillips' chief supporters, will be featured in "Anything Once" and the other players will include Sam De Grasse, Marjory Lawrence and D. C. Appling.

"SUNDAY IN LAST CHANCE VALLEY" (L-Ko's).

Vin Moore has been directing Myrtle Sterling in L-Ko's for a long time, using all sorts of tricks to surprise laughs from audiences, and has centered in "Sunday in Last Chance Valley" what he declares to be his best efforts. The L-Ko for Oct. 31 is a satire on the methods of a certain evangelist who is now operating in Los Angeles, giving Director Moore a chance to observe his peculiar methods at close hand.

Scene from "Sunday in Last Chance Valley" (L-Ko).

Al. Forbes, Russ Powell and Blance Rose will be the principal's seconds in Myrtle Sterling's leads for laughs. "Sunday in Last Chance Valley" will be pure satire without going into any offensive reflections on the "trail hitters" or their leader. J. G. Blystone, general director of L-Ko's, who supervises all the scenarios and productions, has seen to it that nothing further than comedy reflections on the methods of the evangelist have found reflection upon the screen.

JULIA SANDERSON IN "THE RUNAWAY."

Miss Julia Sanderson, one of the best known stars of the American stage, who was a big hit in "The Siren" as Lolette, at the Knickerbocker theater, New York, and as Dora Dale in "The Sunshine Girl," at the same theater, makes her screen bow as Alice Avery in "The Runaway," Empire All Star productions, scheduled for release September 24th, by the Mutual Film Corporation.

"The Runaway" is a comedy adapted for the American stage by Michael Morton. It had a successful run at the Lyceum theater, New York, and is considered one of the best of the Charles Frohman offerings under a Mutual-Frohman contract, which provides for the presentation of Charles Frohman plays in photodrama with a majority of the original casts.

Scene from "The Runaway" (Mutual).

Miss Sanderson is the daughter of Albert Sackett, a well known American actor. She made her debut on the Philadelphia stage and later scored successes as Mrs. Pineapple in "A Chinese Honeymoon" and as Matay with DeWolf Hopper in "Wang." Her most recent speaking stage successes were as Kitty Grey in "The Arcadians" and "The Siren" in the Sunshine Girl.

Miss Sanderson as Alice is given a part that suits her admirably and one that permits her to display her widely recognized versatility. There is a splendid cast, including performers as well known as Ada St. Claire, Dore Plowden, Jennie Ellison, Norman Trevor, Re McDougall and Edward Fielding.

"UNTO THE END" (Horsley).

"Unto the End," a David Horsley production starring Crane Wilbur, is scheduled to be the next release on the Art Drama program, following "Behind the Mash," a U. S. Amusement Corporation picture, with Catherine Calvert as its star.

"Unto the End" tells an absorbing story of a great love that endures until the very end. Crane Wilbur plays the part of Jim O'Neill, for whom nothing seemed to go right, from the day of his birth. Possibly, he could have blamed the hoodoo, which seemed to cling to him, because of the fact that he was born on Friday, the thirteenth. As he grew to manhood, Jim was continually getting into difficulties, but they were not of a serious nature, and though Jim's autocratic parents were often deeply mortified by his behavior, they had no occasion to cross his path with an iron hand until Jim met Goldie Gray, a chorus girl. Jim's father then commanded that he give her up.

In a strong scene, Jim comes upon his best friend and Goldie, and believing that she is merely playing with him, gives her up and goes to Hawaii. Here he again meets Goldie, who becomes very ill, and is pronounced a leper. Everyone deserts her but Jim. He follows her to a leper colony, where she dies. Jim, believing that life for him is valueless, carries her to the water and they both disappear beneath the white capped waves.

This is said to be the strongest picture yet produced by Horsley. Crane Wilbur excels himself in the part of Jim, and the supporting cast is admirably suited to the demands of the story.

NEW "HAM COMEDIES."

General Film will have for release in October five new subjects in its series of Ham Comedies from the Kalem Company. These ever popular comedies feature Bud Duncan and Lloyd V. Hamilton. The new one-reelers which will be added to General's list of former Ham Comedies comprise these titles: Oct. 3, "Politics in Pumpkin Center"; Oct. 10. "The Boot and the Loot"; Oct. 17, "A Whirlwind of Whiskers"; Oct. 24, "The Onion Magnate's Revenge"; and Oct. 31, "The Bath Tub Bandit."

Julia Sanderson Makes Debut.

First Appearance on Screen in "The Runaway" on Mutual Program for Week of September 24.

JULIA SANDERSON, the Broadway star, makes her screen debut September 24, when Mutual releases "The Runaway," a five-reel drama produced by the Empire All Star Corporation. On the same date Mutual will release "Sands of Sacrifice," a five-reel drama, starring William Russell.

"The Runaway" was directed for the screen as well as for the stage by Dell Henderson, and the cast which supported Miss Sanderson in the dramatic production was selected to appear with her in the screen version of the play. The result has been as perfect a screen production of the dramatic success as was humanly and photographically possible.

"The Runaway" is part of the series of Charles Frohman's stage successes in motion pictures in which Miss Sanderson, Ann Murdock and Olive Tell will appear. "The Beautiful Adventure" with Miss Murdock as the lead will be the next from the Empire studios released on the Mutual schedule.

"Sands of Sacrifice" gives William Russell a new and interesting hero role. He has plenty of opportunities to fight and there are several fistic encounters in the course of the five reels which show the athletic picture star to the best of advantage. The scenes are laid in the mountains of the east and in the great American desert. The stage settings are up to the standards of the American Film Company, which has gradually established a world-wide reputation for beautiful and realistic sets and locations.

Russell and George Periolat stage a battle in the last scene which is as realistic as any of the fights which Russell has produced for the screen.

"Sands of Sacrifice" is the first of a new series of Russell productions under Mutual's schedule of two a week. It was directed, as were the pictures in the recent series of Russell successes, by Edward S. Sloman. Sloman and Russell have proved to be a most efficient picture producing team and the Russell productions have proved to be box office offerings of first magnitude. Reports reaching Mutual branch offices reveal an exceptionally high batting average for the Russell productions.

The second chapter of "The Lost Express," Mutual-Signal's sensational mystery serial, will be released Monday, September 24. The second chapter bears the title, "The Destroyed Documents." It takes the story into new mysteries following the disappearance of the express train in Chapter I. Miss Holmes plays a conspicuous part in the chaper. First run bookings on "The Lost Express" have been heavy, particularly so with exhibitors who have shown Miss Holmes' previous photo dramas.

The cub comedy released September 27 is "Jerry's Big Deal," one reel in which George Ovey impersonates the new minister in a small village. Jerry makes love to the spinster sisters of the congregation and plays poker with the deacons, much to their financial and moral embarrassment. He is finally routed by the real parson, whose outfit Jerry has had thrust upon him.

Mutual Weekly No. 143, released September 26, will carry scenes from the camp of the American expeditionary force in France, together with news pictures of the preparations for war in this country. "Reel Life" No. 74, the one-reel weekly magazine, shows the interesting method by which clocks are corrected in all part of the country from the naval observatory. It pictures the portable bakeries which have been designed for the American army, shows the progress which has been made in the processes for manufacturing eye glasses and contains an animated drawing from Life.

The Week's Work in the Fox Studios.

Some New Subjects Recently Turned Out by Fox Players East and West.

GEORGE WALSH, "The Smile-a-Minute Man," is the hero of William Fox's mid-September release, "The Yankee Way," a bright comedy of international romance which has its beginning in a Chicago cabaret, and concludes with a wedding ring in the ever-boiling Balkans. The picture presents the breezy and genial George with abundant opportunity to display his physical prowess. The film starts, in fact, with a fight.

In the supporting cast are Enid Markey, Joe Dowling, Charles Elder, James O'Shea, Ed. Sedgwick, Count Hardenberg, Edward Cecil and Tom Wilson. Richard Stanton, who made "The Spy," the sensational unveiling of German secret service methods now being presented at the Globe theater, in New York city, was the director of "The Yankee Way," so a splendid production is assured.

"Smiling George" has begun work on a new special feature under the direction of his brother, R. A. Walsh. James A. Marcus and Ralph Lewis who have had important roles in many William Fox productions, have been selected by Director Walsh to appear prominently in George's forthcoming screen drama. The only film in which "Jim Marcus" has been seen which R. A. Walsh did not direct was "The Mediator," and in that George Walsh was starred. Marcus will be remembered particularly for his admirable characterization of the Governor in "The Honor System."

June Caprice, William Fox's "Sunshine Maid," has also started work on another production for the silent stage. Harry Millarde, who directed Miss Caprice in "Every Girl's Dream," her most recent release, is again in charge of the direction. A title has been determined upon by William Fox for the picture, which Gladys Brockwell now has in the making. This will be called "Conscience." The story is being interpreted by a wonderful cast and is being filmed under the supervision of Bertram Bracken.

After the release of "The Yankee Way," on September 16, will come "North of Fifty Three." The latter will be followed in turn by "A Rich Man's Plaything," a subject of strong dramatic action. This production was screened in the Fox studios in the East, at Fort Lee, N. J.

COMPLETING "WHO IS 'NUMBER ONE?'"

So rapidly is Paramount progressing in its work of polishing "Who is 'Number One?'" its first serial, written by Anna Katharine Green and starring Kathleen Clifford, that the entire fifteen episodes will be complete and in the exchanges several weeks before the release date of the first episode.

Miss Clifford is cutting short a vaudeville tour to return to make new scenes and new thrills which will be completed and edited within the next few weeks. A corps of artists has nearly finished the work of lettering the new titles and will soon set to work on the novel trailers that are to be added to each episode. These trailers, a unique idea in motion pictures, are especially devised to pile up added interest so that every theater patron who sees an episode of "Who Is 'Number One?'" will be eagerly watching for a chance to see the next one.

Every episode of "Who Is 'Number One?'" is being edited and re-edited and no print will be released until it is in every detail up to the Paramount standard.

ANOTHER POPULAR BOOK STORY FOR ELSIE FERGUSON.

Following the sensational success of Elsie Ferguson's initial photoplay characterization in "Barbary Sheep," at the Rialto theater, New York, and throughout the country, under the auspices of Adolph Zukor for Artcraft pictures, the next screen subject for the popular stage star was announced last week by Walter E. Greene, President of Artcraft. The new film vehicle for Miss Ferguson is an adaptation from the popular book, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," by Mary S. Watts, author of "Nathan Burke," "Van Cleve" and many other well known works. Work on this production is now well under way at the famous Players-Lasky studios in Fort Lee, under the personal direction of Mr. Tourneur. An exceptional cast has been selected, including Elliott Dexter, Fania Marinoff, Frank Goldsmith, Callie Delatorre, Mae Bates, Edith McAlpin, Isabel Vernon, Blanche Craig, James Cogan and Marie Burk.

"BONDAGE" (Bluebird).

Dorothy Phillips will make her regular monthly appearance among Bluebirds on Oct. 17, presenting her third Ida May Park production. "Bondage" is the title and the story was suggested by Edna Kenton. Miss Park took the idea Miss Kenton advanced, made the scenario and then directed Miss Phillips in the production.

William Stowell, who has always led Miss Phillips' support, will be her leading man in "Bondage," with J. B. McLaughlin, Gretchen Lederer and Gertrude Astor also prominent in the cast. This Bluebird is a straight dramatic offering, the type of story in which Miss Phillips is seen to best advantage. Its basis is life in New York's "bohemia" with the atmosphere in and around Washington Square predominating.

Ida May Park, having taken over the exclusive screen direction of Miss Phillips, has prepared "Bondage" as her third offering in a series that will continue throughout the coming year. Miss Park, has of late, alternated with her husband, Joseph De Grasse, in directing Miss Phillips but the feminine combination worked out so well that Miss Park was given exclusive control of all subsequent Dorothy Phillips Bluebird.

Second O. Henry Four-Reeler

Jean Paige and Carlton King Featured in Drama with Happy Ending, "Blind Man's Holiday."

A NEW featured lead in the O. Henry productions is introduced in the second of the four-reel releases of the new series through General Film Company, the story being "Blind Man's Holiday." Jean Paige as Norah Greenway, the heroine of this fascinating story, makes her debut as a headliner, opposite Carlton King, who plays Lorison, the hero.

Scene from "Blind Man's Holiday" (General Film).

Miss Paige has made a tremendous and brilliant stride in pictures. She is only 20, and was last seen in another Broadway Star Feature in the supporting cast of "Discounters of Money."

An O. Henry two-reel production. She was chosen to play the lead in "Blind Man's Holiday" after Director Martin Justice found her work greatly adapted for the role.

"'Blind Man's Holiday" finds the man, Lorison, a victim of his own shifting perspective. Haunted by an accusation of crime, he sees himself at times "an outcast from society, a shady skulker on the ragged edge of respectability." At other times he bore himself "with the serene grandeur akin to greatness." The story is the epic of his moods during a swift, romantic love adventure with a girl he meets casually on the streets.

How, in his more depressed mood he tells her he is unworthy to wed her, and how he becomes elated when she deprecates her own worth by a circumstantial tale of wrongdoing is brought out in many vivid scenes. Then, having married her only to have her depart mysteriously, how he is tortured by mental pictures of his folly that nearly drive him frantic forms another lively series of suspense incidents. At this point a third principal comes vitally into the story. Father Rogan, played by John Costello. To punish and cure Lorison of his morbid state of mind he takes him on a round of certain significant locations, at the end of which, in one of O. Henry's famous "situations" he clears up the mystery, proves the man's doubts to have been unworthy and reunites a remorseful hero with a triumphant heroine.

An excellent production has been given this photoplay, well up to the standard of those O. Henry pictures that have gone before.

"THE LITTLE PRINCESS" NEXT MARY PICKFORD SUBJECT.

Simultaneous with the country-wide success of the latest Mary Pickford picture, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," Artcraft announces "The Little Princess" as the next vehicle for "Our Mary." This subject has appeared with wide success both in book form and on the stage. The original book which became popular throughout the country is 'Sara Crewe," from the pen of Frances Hodgson Burnett. In 1903 Miss Burnett dramatized the book and at the Criterion Theater the story was staged under the management of Charles B. Dillingham.

The story presents a typical Mary Pickford subject on the order of "A Poor Little Rich Girl" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." and discloses "Little Mary" in a type of characterization in which she is most popular, namely, the little girl in short dresses. Both the book and the play are well known and that the subject should prove another triumph for Mary Pickford is readily appreciated by the many thousands who are familiar with it. Work has already been commenced on this new picture at the Lasky Studio in California, under the direction of Marshall Neilan.

The World Film Corporation has presented several of its photoplays to the United States Battleship Missouri, for the entertainment of the sailors and marines.

PERSONALITIES IN THE PUBLIC EYE.

Many interesting personalities figure in the 18th issue of Universal Current Events just released. Among those who might be mentioned are: Donald B. McMillan, the recently returned Arctic explorer; Sir William White, chief of the British recruiting service in America; Miss Lucy Freeman, the 19-year-old girl who holds the national long-distance swimming record; Andre Tardieu, French High Commissioner to the United States, and Rear Admiral Usher, commanding officer in charge of the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

One of the unique features of the issue is the series of pictures showing the pretty Missouri girl who wore an even $1,000,000 worth of diamonds at the National Jewelers' Convention held in St. Louis a few days ago.

The memorial exercises in honor of Lafayette's birth, which were held in New York about the same time, will probably appeal to an equally large number of spectators, although contrasting widely in subject matter.

Some spectacular military scenes, showing one of our military units going into cantonments at Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont, and incidents that occurred during the journey of the Third New York Field Hospital from Manhattan to Spartanburg, S. C., are also well above the average in interest.

A new title has been designed for Current Events which displays the letters of both words as though they were composed of live electric wires.

VOLA VALE IN FALCON FEATURES.

Another bright particular star is presented as the lead in the current Falcon Feature from General Film Company. With Philo McCullough, Miss Vale is strongly featured in "The Secret of Black Mountain," a most dramatic story by Jackson Gregory. This is the sixth release of the Falcon Features, which are issued one every week, and which have been notable for their variety of strong film favorites in specially selected roles.

"The Secret of Black Mountain" is an adventure of the West. The plot of the story concerns the thrilling encounters of a young girl who undertakes to recover the fortune lost by her grandfather in the gold fields of California when he fell among bandits. The production is supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer, and carries a large and capable cast. Mignon LeBrun, Chas. Dudley, George Austin, Henry Crawford, Jack McLaughlin, T. H. Gibson Gowland, H. C. Russell, James Warner, and Lewis King are in the support to Vola Vale and Philo McCullough.

"A CONTENTED WOMAN" (Selig).

"A Contented Woman" is the title of the Selig comedy released Monday, September 17, in K. E. S. E. service. The comedy is considered one of the cleverest written by Charles Hoyt, the famous American playwright. J. A. Richmond, responsible for the other Selig comedies so successful in K. E. S. E., directed the comedy of "A Contented Woman."

The cast included Wm. Fables as "Uncle Todie," James Harris as "Benton Halme" and Amy Dennis as "Helena Wrangle," the stage beauty. There is promised a wealth of comedy situations and clear-cut photography. The plot, in brief, concerns Uncle Todie and his wife, Aunt Jim. An argument ensues whether man is or is not superior to woman. It results in the men folks remaining at home to prepare the evening meal. They fail of course and engage a caterer. At the theater Uncle Todie and Benton Holme discover Helena Wrangle, leading lady. When four irate landlords from four small towns arrive and threaten to tie up the show, Uncle Todie proves an easy victim, and, with Helena Wrangel, hurries to rob his penny bank. But Aunt Jim arrives and there is a terrible time trying to stall her and get Helena out by disguising her as a chair. When success comes and Uncle Todie is giving Aunt Jim the lecture of her life about the superiority of man, the caterer comes in with the dinner and spoils the situation.

Fox October Releases

Great Variety of Subjects Scheduled Among Next Month's Offerings.

WHAT is probably the most varied list of releases William Fox has ever made is announced for October. The pictures star Gladys Brockwell, Virginia Pearson, June Caprice, George Walsh, and Dustin Farnum. Technically, Miss Brockwell's play is a September issue, as it will be released on the last day of the month; but inasmuch as it has been substituted for another production through a change in schedule, it comes practically unheralded. This will be the order of the photoplays:

September 30, Gladys Brockwell in "Conscience."
October 7, Virginia Pearson in "Thou Shalt Not Steal."
October 14, June Caprice in "Miss U. S. A."
October 21, George Walsh in "This is the Life."
October 28, Dustin Farnum in "The Scarlet Pimpernel."

"Conscience," Miss Brockwell's new starring vehicle, is an unusually vivid drama, with an allegorical motif. The central theme has been deftly treated by Bertram Bracken, the director, who returns to the William Fox forces with this picture. Miss Brockwell had the assistance of one of the most distinguished companies that has appeared in any feature production this year in interpreting the story for the screen. The chief roles were taken by Majorie Daw, Eve Southern, Genevieve Blinn, Bertram Grassby, Eugenie Forde, Edward Cecil, Douglas Gerrard, Harry Lonsdale, and Colin Chase. Mr. Grassby has the part opposite Miss Brockwell. Director Bracken screened several films for William Fox in the East.

Miss Pearson's forthcoming subject, "Thou Shalt Not Steal," also required an extraordinarily large supporting cast, prominent in which are Claire Whitney, Eric Mayne, Dan Mason, Mathilde Brundage, John Goldsworthy, Robert Elliott, Martin Faust, Lem Kennedy, Danny Sullivan, and Victor DeLinksy. William Nigh, veteran film-maker, was in charge of the direction.

"Miss U. S. A.," as the title indicates, gives June Caprice a story infused with patriotic spirit. The picture is the most dramatic Miss Caprice has ever had, and shows also many spectacular military scenes. The dainty little Fox star is working under the supervision of Harry Millarde on this film. Mr. Millarde joined the Fox directorial staff recently. His initial production was "Every Girl's Dream," in which Miss Caprice had stellar honors.

On October 21st the public will first have the opportunity of seeing a photoplay made by one brother and starring another. R. A. Walsh is in charge of screening "This Is the Life," and George is doing valiant work in showing just what that life is. The picture is of the light comedy type for which "Smiling George" has become famous. With R. A. Walsh, the man who staged "The Honor System," attending to the production, a remarkable attraction should result. Wanda Petit, who was seen in "The Broadway Sport" and "The Derelict," William Fox features, was sent across the continent to play opposite George Walsh. James A. Marcus and Ralph Lewis have been assigned important roles.

"The Scarlet Pimpernel," the final release of the month, is rich in adventure, and brims with swiftest action, as anyone who has read Baroness Orczy's splendid novel well knows The stage version has been counted as one of the biggest "hits" of the British theater, and with Dustin Farnum in the starred part, the cinema drama will probably duplicate the success of the play.

The pimpernel is a tiny wayside flower which has been adopted as the emblem of a band of Englishmen engaged in rescuing condemned aristocrats during the French Revolution.

In the cast are Winifred Kingston, William Burress, Bert Hadley and Howard Gaye. Richard Stanton, who made "The Spy," staged the production.

Goldwyn to Distribute "The Manxman"

George Loane Tucker's Film Version of Hall Caine's Famous Story Now Ready for Shipment.

PRINTS for trade showings of George Loane Tucker's picturization of Hall Caine's most famous story, "The Manxman," which has just completed a successful run of four weeks at the Criterion theater, New York City, are ready for shipment throughout North America by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. Under an agreement made shortly before his death in an automobile accident, Goldwyn is to distribute "The Manxman" for Henry J. Brock, its owner.

Mr. Brock was killed last week when his automobile, in which he was on his way to his home in Buffalo, overturned in the Adirondacks, near Kingston, N. Y. Two persons who were with him escaped with slight injuries.

Mr. Brock's death, mourned by many friends in the motion picture industry throughout the country, will not upset Goldwyn's plans for systematic distribution and wide exploitation, both by publicity and advertising of his big property.

Attracted by the success of the producton in New York, where it was shown to crowded houses night and day in one of the most popular theaters usually devoted to the spoken drama, exhibitors already are inquiring about first run rights to it.

"The Manxman" will be seen first in the larger cities, where Goldwyn knows it will prove a strong attraction for an extended run in the bigger houses.

Mr. Tucker, who produced "The Manxman," has to his credit half a dozen productions that have proved highly profitable to exhibitors. He is now attached to the directorial staff of Goldwyn, and is making the picturization of the Broadway stage success, "The Cinderella Man."

Elizabeth Risdon, called "The English Mary Pickford," is featured in the production with Henry Ainley.

THE PERFECT FLYING MACHINE MOTOR.

The Secretary of War has confirmed the announcement that Yankee ingenuity has at last perfected an engine for airplanes which is far superior to any aero-motor which has been invented prior to this time. This engine meets all requirements at any altitude. Under the direction of the Artcraft Production Board, the greatest engineers of this country, working together since war was declared, have pooled their trade secrets and developed a motor which is not only the fastest and most reliable known, but is of such a type that the different parts can be manufactured in various factories throughout the country and assembled when the entire flying machine is put together. Secretary Baker proclaims this as probably the greatest achievement of the war. The Gaumont Company was fortunate in being able to photograph the testing of this wonderful engine on Pike's Peak, nearly three miles above sea-level; and these pictures will appear first in Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 142 when it is released September 19.

TO REISSUE TALMADGE AND KEENAN TRIANGLES.

Prompted by the success of the Hart-Fairbanks reissues, the Triangle Distributing Corporation has arranged two star series of Triangle plays in which Norma Talmadge and Frank Keenan are featured. These will be reissued on the same plan as the Hart-Fairbanks subjects, and may be booked for independently of one another.

The Keenan plays will be released at intervals of four weeks, commencing with "The Sin Ye Do," on October 7. The pictures starring Norma Talmadge also will appear every four weeks, commencing October 21, with "The Devil's Needle."

"THE EDGE OF THE LAW" (Butterfly).

Ruth Stonehouse is the star of "The Edge of the Law," the Butterfly feature to be released Monday, September 24th.

Arranged for the screen by Harvey Gates, from "A Gentle Ill Wind," a novel by Maude Pettus which appeared recently in the All-Story Magazine, the story deals with the career of Nancy Glenn, better known as "Spider," a modern Oliver Twist of the feminine gender.

Dressed in boy's clothes from her earliest years, Nancy has been known to the police of the big city for some time as one of the cleverest "dips" in the business. But despite their best efforts, none of the limbs of the law—not even Spike Sullivan, the most persistent of Nancy's pursuers—has ever been able to catch her with the goods.

The plot of the tale hinges upon the one occasion when Spike believes he has discovered his quarry in the act of stealing a purse from the seat of an auto occupied by Ralph Harding, a wealthy young Westerner, and some of his friends.

Scene from "The Edge of the Law" (Butterfly).

Harding's party intercedes, however, and Nancy makes her escape—only to run into an even more serious complication when she returns to her quarters at Pop Hoagland's, a notorious "fence," who has taught her most of the tricks of her nefarious trade. Hoagland and Pliny Drew, one of his lieutenants, decide that Nancy could be more useful as a young lady, filling the role of a "come-on" for a swindling deal that they have in mind. This leads to a series of rapidly moving events that give novelty and punch to the story in the most unexpected places. Louis Chaudet directed the production.

Arbuckle in "Oh Doctor!" (Paramount)

But Fortunately This Happens Only in His Next Paramount Comedy, "Oh Doctor!" Soon to Be Released.

Paramount's weightiest comedian, Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, has been caught in the toils of a beautiful but unscrupulous vampire, accomplice of a crook. But luckily, this only occurs in "Oh Doctor!" a Paramount-Arbuckle comedy which will be released following "His Wedding Night."

The susceptible individual is Dr. I. O. Dine, otherwise Mr. Arbuckle, and the character gives "Fatty" one of the greatest laugh-getting parts he has been called upon to play in some time.

The lenslight first reveals the Doctor, in the person of the rotund Mr. Arbuckle, at the races with his wife and her brother. The trio sits in front of the clubhouse, "Fatty" enlivening his idle moments by a surreptitious flirtation with an extremely pretty girl, who for the purposes of the plot is designated the Vampire. This charming person has as a pal a notorious crook (Al St. John), with whom she is devising ways and means of making easy money, as both are nearly broke.

Doctor I. O. Dine, overhearing a tip given to the crook on the winner of the next race, stakes his every dollar on the horse, which comes in last. All that is saved is Mrs. I. O. Dine's necklace, which she had refused to stake. The Vampire and the crook are ruined by the false tip also and the crestfallen losers leave the track together.

OCTOBER L-KO'S.

J. G. Blystone, general director of L-Ko's, has prepared five subjects for October that promise to maintain the standard of fun these pictures have created in winning laughs from audiences. Five releases will be made during the month with all the L-Ko funmakers in evidence.

Phil Dunham directed the release for Oct. 3, entitled "Counting Out the Count." This is Mr. Dunham's second picture since he gave up acting in L-Ko's to stand by the camera. Lucille Hutton, Billy Bevan and a large company of assistants will figure in the fun.

"The Nurse of An Aching Heart," directed by Archie Mayo, L-Ko's newest producer, will be the Oct. 10 release. Eva Novak will be the woman star and Eddie Barry and Bob McKenzie the leading comedians. Scenes in a comedy hospital will be featured.

Eva Novak will also feature in the Oct. 17 comic, "Vamping Reuben's Millions," with Katheryn Young doing an extensive line of comedy vampire work. Eddie Barry and Bob McKenzie will lead the supporting comedians in laughable scenes from rural life.

On Oct. 24 Myrtle Sterling will be the star in "Fat and Furious." Babe Emerson will be featured as an L-Ko beauty and Al. Forbes and Russ Powell will handle the comedy. The same company will participate in the release for Oct. 31, both comics having been produced by Vin Moore.

A NEW LUBRICANT ON THE MARKET.

L. A. Reuss, electrician of Nicholas Power Company, claims superiority for a grease manufactured by Messrs. Reuss & Wetter, 212 Broadway, New York City. The product is known as Leonard's Motor Grease and has been subjected to exhaustive tests, and the claims for its excellence have been found to be fully justified. Among the many dealers of motion picture accessories throughout the country who have adopted this grease the most prominent is the United Theater Equipment Corporation, and the chief operator of the Marcus Loew's circuit of motion picture houses has also adopted this grease for use in their houses. The price of the new grease is a trifle higher than most of the other products now offered to the trade, but the price is reasonable when it is considered that the grease will save wear on bearings and shafts. It is a non-fluid oil and will not flow over the motor.

TWO WESTERNS ON TRIANGLE PROGRAM.

Roy Stewart as a New Type of Bad Man in "Devil Dodger" —Also Appears with Belle Bennett in "Bond of Fear" for Week of September 23.

DRAMAS of early Western life will be featured on the Triangle program for September 23, and will present Belle Bennett and Roy Stewart as stars. "Bond of Fear," the first release of the week, is the story of two fugitives from the law, a man and a woman, who meet on the desert plains of Arizona. One of the most spectacular effects of the play is a furious sandstorm which engulfs the party in their flight across the alkali parched land. Roy Stewart has the role of Cal Nelson, the ever-devoted friend to Mary, played by Belle Bennett. Melbourne McDowell is said to be admirably cast as the grim letter-of-the-law judge. George Webb, who acted as leading man for Louise Glaum in "Idolators," is also of the cast. Jack Conway directed the play, which was written by Edith Kennedy.

Roy Stewart makes his advent to the screen as a gunfighter of new methods in "The Devil Dodger," by J. G. Hawkes. Jack Gilbert, a Triangle player, whose work has been noteworthy in previous productions, appears as the minister who calls himself "The Devil Dodger." In his attempts to inculcate moral understanding in Fluffy, a dance hall protege of "Silent Scott," he is compelled to assume militant tactics. He meets violent opposition from the gunfighter, Scott, who swears to drive him from the community. Fluffy, however, makes a bargain with her master to settle the dispute by a game of cards. She wins, and the parson is saved. Later, "The Devil Dodger" not only saves the soul of Fluffy, but, at the sacrifice of his life, preserves her happiness.

The Triangle comedies of the week are "His Unconscious Conscience" and "Her Fickle Fortune." Lillian Biron, one of the blonde favorites of the Keystone squad, has the leading feminine role in "Her Fickle Fortune" and Phyllis Haver is the featured lady of "His Unconscious Conscience."

THE DOGS OF WAR IN GAUMONT'S "REEL LIFE."

"Let loose the dogs of war," bids fair to become more than a mere poetic phrase. The newspapers convey the information that the United States is seriously considering the sending of ten thousand dogs to France. While many of these dogs will be used for detecting gas when we capture the German trenches, others will be trained to carry dispatches and aid in the rescue of the wounded. In "Dogs of War," which is featured in the Gaumont-Mutual screen magazine, "Reel Life" No. 75, released October 4, will be shown many unusual scenes illustrating the work of these trained canines which the Red Cross will use on the battlefields of Europe.

The slogan of the Springfield armory, which has been making rifles since the days of President Washington, is: "Get behind our boys in France! Springfield never failed!" With official consent, the Gaumont Company presents another unusual subject, "Making Army Rifles," in this issue of "Reel Life," with scenes taken in this historic arsenal.

Another subject in this release of an entirely different nature shows how the Japanese, past masters in the floral art, retard the growth of trees and shrubs so they can be used in gardens or conservatories. In "Japanese Dwarf Plants" are pictured pines and cedars more than a century old which are little more than a foot in height.

"The Sign of a City," a huge electric globe which advertises Toledo, Ohio, and two animated drawings from "Life," the leading weekly of humor and satire, complete the reel.

DOROTHY DALTON IN "THE PRICE MARK."

More than ordinary interest attached to the announcement that Dorothy Dalton, the beautiful, talented and youthful star of Thomas H. Ince, would appear in Paramount pictures. It will be of added interest to know that for her Paramount debut a story of remarkable strength, with a wide diversity of locale, and great dramatic appeal, has been chosen, the title of which is "The Price Mark." The picture will be in charge of Roy Neill, who is one of Mr. Ince's most experienced directors, but the latter will supervise all of the situations and devote much time and thought to making this production an outstanding one. "The Price Mark" will be released in October.

Miss Dalton will be surrounded by players of proven worth. She has expressed herself as delighted with the chosen cast, which includes William Conklin, a versatile actor of juvenile leads, who has had wide stage and screen experience; Thurston Hall, who has been a leading man in stock, in various productions for the legitimate stage, and for pictures; Adele Farrington, a character actress and comedienne of much ability; Edwin Wallock, Dorcas Matthews and Clio Ayres, all well known players.

Flood Tide of Business in New England

Season Opens with Full Houses and Many Splendid Picture Offerings — New Theaters and Reopenings—Notes of the Trade.

By Richard Davis Howe, No. 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, Mass.—Cold weahter has set ahead the regular fall season of the moving picture theaters of New England by several weeks, and today finds theaters enjoying crowded houses. It has put new life into the entire industry, and salesmen touring the New England territory find exhibitors eager to grasp at the best pictures offered.

No season has opened so auspiciously so far as the film offerings are concerned. Here is a good idea of the real gilt-edge productions that are being shown in Boston:

Modern theater—Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and George Beban in "Lost in Transit."

Park theater—Ethel Barrymore in "The Lifted Veil."

Boston theater—Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus."

Exeter theater and Gordon's Olympia—Billy Burke in "The Mysterious Miss Terry."

Majestic theater—"The Honor System."

Thus it is seen that some of the foremost stars of the country are represented in first-run production in Boston theaters as a fitting opening of the season, and S. R. O. signs have been hung out where Mary Pickford is being shown and at a number of the other houses.

"The Honor System," the second of the big Fox features to be shown at the Majestic, one of Boston's leading legitimate theaters, is drawing well, and bookings have been made for "The Spy" at the same house next week.

H.; Nathan Yamins, owner of the Plaza theater in Fall River; Putnam Smith, manager of the Bradley and Empire theaters in Putnam, Conn.; and A. N. The theater building is the property of Joseph Deffarari, a local business man. The theater has a seating capacity of 1,800, with two balconies.

The building is one of the finest in the town and is centrally located. Every modern appliance and comfort has been installed in the theater. The entrance to the building will be in the center of the block with stores on each side. Business Notes From Baltimore.

E. R. Price, who for about two months has managed the Buffalo exchange for Triangle, visited Baltimore last week for a few days and called on many of his friends. As Mr. Price is very popular among the Baltimore boys we presume it took him some time to get around. He has just been promoted to the position of General Sales Manager for the Triangle, to cover the Eastern district.

Miss Sophia K. Levine, the cashier at the Mutual Baltimore exchange, is again back at her desk this week with a good deal of tan on her cheeks. Her vacation was quite a success, she states.

Charles E. Ford, manager of Ford's opera house, has booked the eight-part historical feature, "Christus," and it began its run at this house on Monday, September 10. Wm. Fox's "The Spy" played to capacity houses at this theater during the week of September 3.

Col. Jacob W. Hook, vice-president of the Southern Amusement Company, returned from a motor trip to Atlantic City, Asbury Park and Shelter Islands last week.

Harry Lewy, co-proprietor of the Great Wizard theater, 30 West Lexington street, has made a number of slides in the form of appeals for contributions to the Army Girls' Transport Tobacco Fund. These slides are being thrown on the screens at many of the theaters in this city.

Cambridge, Md.—When it comes to live wire methods of pulling people, J. W. Brown, manager of the Grand Opera House in this city, is there. When the Dorchester County Fair was held, Harry F. Daley, of Baltimore, filmed a moving picture and called it "The Newly Weds at the County Fair," and many people of local importance in this city were in the cast. So as soon as the picture was ready to be booked, Manager Brown signed up for it, and it was screened at his theater on Monday, Sept. 10.

Baltimore, Md.—Through the courtesy of Charles E. Thropp, manager of the Nixon-Victoria theater, 415 East Baltimore street, this pretty playhouse was used on Sunday evening, Sept. 9, for an important gathering of Zionists to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of the organization of the Zionist movement, by Theodore Herzl.

Baltimore's Strand Reopens Much Prettier

Parkway Theater Company's House on North Howard Street Opens with Second Run Paramount—Some of Its New Decorations.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Maryland.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The Strand theater, 404-6 North Howard street, under the management of the Parkway Theater Company, reopened to the public on Monday, Sept. 10. It has been remodeled and renovated. The ticket office, which formerly occupied the center, is now inside the wall on the right. This section of the house has a wainscoting of Maine marble with upper walls of Caenstone, while the ceiling is done in soft gray. The general color scheme of the interior is old ivory, soft gray and gold trimmings with wall panels of old rose silk. The hangings are of old rose velour and the carpets are of a darker shade of rose.

In the auditorium the lighting is by the cove system, the wiring for which has been changed so that it can be controlled from either the operating room or the basement. An exquisite effect by this system is gained on the heavy, ornamental beamed ceiling and plaster tops, which are trimmed in gold leaf. Metal hoods have been placed over all the radiators. Second run weekly stands will be shown here of the big Paramount features.

Prices Go Up at the Parkway.

Baltimore, Md.—Beginning Monday, September 3, the prices at the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenues, were raised, but according to the crowds observed around the entrance of the theater during that week, while George M. Cohan was shown in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," the clientele has taken it very calmly. Bernard Depkin, Jr., in speaking of the matter, said: "I am glad to announce that the Parkway has obtained a franchise for all the Paramount and Artcraft pictures."

Weekly runs are now being made at the Parkway of the biggest plays on the Paramount program and the prices are: Entire first floor, 35 cents; box seats (reserved), 50 cents; balcony (first six rows), 25 cents, and the remainder of the balcony 15 cents for the night performances. Mr. Leibold says he started his career in the film game in that company's office, then he was engaged by J. C. Cremen to manage the Carey theater for some time and later went to Washington, where he was associated with J. H. Buttner in the Triangle exchange in that city. He resigned from the last to accept his present position.

Miss E. Schwab Leaves Mutual.

Baltimore, Md.—When we entered the Mutual exchange last week we missed the glad and welcoming smile of Miss E. Schwab, who for some years has been acting as booker in this office. She has now associated herself with the Parkway Theater Company as secretary to Bernard Depkin, Jr. When interviewed at the office of this company on North Charles street, Miss Schwab still had the same jolly smile, and while she had very little to say regarding her new position, it could be seen that she is very happy.

What Theater Taxes Netted Last Year

Uncle Sam Collected $1,027,927 from Amusement Licenses in 1916-17—Amount Is More Than Previous Year and Cost Less to Collect.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Uncle Sam was made the richer during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, by $1,027,927.63, this being the amount of money he exacted from the motion picture, the legitimate theaters, the museums and concert halls of the United States.

A comparison of the taxes paid by the amusement places of the country as provided under the war emergency revenue laws to be placed upon them according to their seating capacities, is contained in the preliminary report of Commission of Internal Revenue W. H. Osborn, which has been sent to Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo. The revenue obtained from this source during the twelve months ending with June 30, 1916, amounted to $1,014,911.28, the fiscal year 1917 exceeding this by $13,016.35.

The receipts for the fiscal year 1917 exceeded those of any other years since the establishment of the Internal Revenue Bureau. The total amount collected was $809,393,640.44, an increase of $296,670,352.67 over the fiscal year 1916 when the Bureau took in $512,723,287.77, and Commissioner Osborn thought the limit had been reached.

The cost of collecting this huge sum was also much lower than ever before. For every $1,000 taken in, Uncle Sam's representatives paid out $9.53 in the work, this being .95 per cent. In the fiscal year 1916 the cost per $1,000 of collections was $14.04, or 1.4 per cent. The average cost of collection since the establishment of the bureau is $23.21, or 2.32 per cent.

Blank & Zink are the architects of the structure, and M. A. Weller, the building contractor. The structures formerly on the site of the new house have been demolished and the way clear for the builder to go ahead with his work.

Arthur L. Robb Goes Over to Crandall.

Washington, D. C.—Quite a surprise was sprung in film circles here last week when it was announced that Arthur L. Robb had severed his connection with the Moore string of houses and had joined the Crandall string. He is to become the manager of the Knickerbocker theater, which is rapidly nearing completion at Eighteenth street and Columbia road, and which is scheduled for opening late this month. However, when the Metropolitan on F street is completed he is to be transferred to that house.

Mr. Robb was identified with the Tom Moore enterprises for about five years. Before coming to Washington he had been connected with various theatrical enterprises in the east for about ten years. Prior to entering the theatrical business he was connected with newspaper work, and is accredited with being the pioneer publicity agent in this territory in connection with moving pictures, for he early instituted a regular press department in connection with the Garden and Strand theaters.

George Schneider Succeeds Robb.

Mr. Robb has been succeeded as manager of the Garden and Strand theaters by George Schneider, who comes to Washington from Baltimore, where he has been in the theatrical profession for a number of years. He has been manager of the Garden theater in Baltimore for about three years, previous to which time he was manager of the New theater for about four years. Both of these are vaudeville houses and he was slated to take up similar work in connection with the combined moving picture and vaudeville theater which Mr. Moore has in prospect.

Paramount-Artcraft Takes New Space.

Washington, D. C.—The Paramount Artcraft exchange is being enlarged by addition of space on the first floor of the building at 525 Thirteenth street, Northwest. This new room will be utilized by the paper department which will permit the doubling of the office space on the floor above.

Since taking over the management of the exchange, Manager Barron has found himself badly cramped because of the combination of Paramount with Artcraft. This move, according to Manager Barron, will enable the enlargement also of the service department under the new scheme of handling business in this territory.

Mr. Barron has the distinction of now furnishing service to every city and town in this territory having a population of 5,000 or more.

J. H. Butner Pleased in Atlanta.

Washington, D. C.—James H. Butner, ex-president of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association and former manager of the local Triangle exchange, has assumed charge of the Atlanta, Ga., exchange of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Mr. Butner is to look after the distribution in North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee of the big subjects that the organization plans to buy, and also of the Chaplin pictures, which it already controls. At present his office is located in the Lyric Theater Building, but, according to a letter just received at the Washington office of the Moving Picture World, he will soon become established in the film district. Mr. Butner declares himself to be "in the land of the blest, where censors do not rule, and where regulations hold not their sway."

Theatrical Waste of Food Deprecated.

Washington, D. C.—The actor folk have just been told of another way in which they can help Uncle Sam win the war—they have just been appealed to by the United States Food Administration to substitute imitation banquets for the real thing in those productions requiring the use of food. Better still, however, to the Food Administration's way of thinking, would be the total elimination of all scenes depicting feasts.

"The Food Administration desires to stop not merely the actual waste of this food material that is used in the production of motion picture films and on the stage," a statement from the Administration declares, "but to prevent the unconscious bad effect on audiences at this time when every effort is being made to drive home the need of the elimination of every possible food waste an a means of helping to win the war. The amount of food unprofitably used in theatrical performances throughout the country amounts to a much larger bulk than is ordinarily realized. The Administration is of the opinion that in meals on the stage and in the making of films, imitations can be used in most cases, and believes that where this is not possible the scenes showing the use of food can be omitted."

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

Pittsburgh Film Men Give a Corn Roast

Have Outing to Raise Funds to Help in Campaigns Against Freak Legislation, All Go Out to Groveton, Pa., for a Pleasant Time.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6104 Jenkins' Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The allied moving picture interests of Pittsburgh and vicinity were to assemble at Gazaza Camp, Groveton, Pa., on Sunday, September 16, for an elaborate family gathering and cornroast—the first event of its kind to be put on by the local film folk. From all indications it will prove a largely attended and successful affair. Members of the F. I. L. M. club, exchangemen and exhibitors were heartily co-operating with the various committees, so that nothing will be left undone which will contribute to the enjoyment of the guests.

The following circular has been issued: "The object of this gathering is to create a fund to be used for any and all cases of adverse legislation to the film industry. Different organizations have at various times in years past been compelled to solicit funds for this purpose, and always the same few people have paid the bills. In asking your support to make this gathering a success we are simply asking you to DO YOUR BIT, for every dollar received will be used for beneficial purposes of the motion picture interests."

The hard-working committees in charge are as follows: On arrangements—Al. W. Cross, chairman; H. F. Greele, C. F. Campbell. Sports—F. C. Burhans, Walter Kinson, C. F. Schwerin. Film to be made on the grounds—C. F. Miller. Publicity—M. J. C. Kornblum, William Mayer, P. A. Mansfield, C. B. Frost, R. Warren.

Edgar Wolberg Goes to Missouri and Kansas.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Edgar H. Wolfberg, formerly manager of the Harris P. Wolfberg attractions, Lyceum building, Pittsburgh, is leaving the local office of that concern to take charge of the distribution of "The Deemster" in Missouri and Kansas, which has recently been added to the Eastern states already controlled by the Wolfberg Exchange.

"Efficiency" Edgar, as E. H. Wolfberg's friends in the Pittsburgh territory have nicknamed him, is versatile. During the past six months he has played an important part in staging "The Crisis" in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia. His sensational success in this city was the talk of moving picture circles. Newspapermen estimate that he was accorded the largest amount of publicity ever secured by any photoplay.

Previous to his connection with the Harris P. Wolfberg attractions, he was assistant manager of the General Film office in St. Louis. It was during these days that he created "The Film General," a house-organ that received the approbation of all the photoplay journals.

New Exchange to Handle Big Subjects.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Fort Pitt Theater exchange, the latest film concern to enter the field in Pittsburgh, has completed plans for elaborate and prominently located headquarters to be occupied in the near future. The exchange will take over a portion of the Pitt Theater building, at the corner of Penn avenue and Seventh street. Alterations are now going forward and the company expects to do business in its new quarters within the next week or ten days.

The Fort Pitt theater exchange handles only big subjects, especially those which have had a long run at the Pitt theater. William Moore Patch is president of the company; L. Newman, representative; Norman S. Carroll, publicity manager; Harry Marcus, office manager.

The projected theater will have a seating capacity of 1,500 and will be modern in every respect. It will be erected at a cost of about $75,000.

H. E. Stahler Promoted.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The many friends of H. E. Stahler will be glad to hear of his promotion to the position of manager of the Pittsburgh offices of the Harris P. Wolfberg attractions, Lyceum building. Mr. Stahler formerly was in charge of the publicity department of the Wolfberg Exchange. Previous to that he represented the V. L. S. E. in St. Louis, and later the Essanay.

In connection with Mr. Stahler's promotion, Mr. Wolfberg made the following statement: "It was Mr. Stahler's fine work with 'The Crisis' and 'The Deemster' that has hurried his promotion. His method of exhibitor co-operation, which is the outstanding feature of the distribution of these pictures, is largely responsible for his success.

"The States Rights men of the future," continued Mr. Wolfberg, "must recognize the importance of exhibitor co-operation. In the field of merchandising, dealer co-operation is developed to a fine point, and the manufacturer does not stop when the goods are on the dealer's shelf. He helps him sell, and by helping the dealer he helps himself. There is no reason why the same intensive co-operation should not exist in the photoplay business."

Park Theater Taken by T. A. Kinney.

St. John, N. B.—A. B. Farmer, of the Star theater, upon the finish of "Patria" will start next week, "The Double Cross Mystery," and later the Pathe serial "The Neglected Wife." March of the Specialty Flm Import., at St. John.

General Trade Conditions in Canada Good

New Theater Being Built on St. Clair Avenue, Toronto—Opening of the New Allen Theater Soon—Jewel Productions Opens Exchange.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard street East, Toronto.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—The fall boom in moving picture circles of Ontario is on in earnest. Everywhere there are signs of structural development and improvement, the many good releases are attracting great crowds and, according to statements of big men in the Canadian industry, general conditions throughout this territory were never so healthy as at present.

One of several substantial film houses which are being built in Toronto and vicinity is the theatre on St. Clair avenue, one of the finest thoroughfares in the northern section of the city. This theatre is being erected by James Crang, a prominent local contractor. The completed structure will cost about $75,000 and its features will be up-to-date in every particular. Montreal's St. Denis Theater Reopens

Roland Roberts Starts Beautiful Picture Theater Again with "Polly"—Has 3,000 Seats at Ten Cents to Twenty-five Cents.

MONTREAL, QUEBEC.—The St. Denis theater, Montreal, the largest and one of the most elaborate amusement houses in the whole of Canada, was reopened on Saturday, September 8, under the management of Roland Roberts, manager of the Regent theater, Toronto. The managing director of the new company which will operate the St. Denis is N. L. Nathanson, who is also general manager of the Regal Films, Limited, distributors in Canada of Goldwyn, World, and other pictures.

The feature at the St. Denis for the reopening performance was the first Goldwyn release, "Polly of the Circus," and the scale of admission prices was from 25c to 10c. The house now has a symphony orchestra of sixteen pieces under the direction of Mr. J. J. Goulet, late of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra, and under the supervision of Leon Kofman. The Hope Jones organ will again be used. Frank Oldfield, the New York baritone, was also one of the attractions for the opening week.

Cleveland Operators Demand New Scale

Higher Wages Again Asked for—New Scale Calls for $40 a Week for Matinee and Night Shows—Special Rate for Screenings.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Increases of from eight to ten dollars a week are indicated in the new wage scale drawn up by the Cleveland operators union and sent the theaters which run all day or afternoons and evenings.

For several years there has been a steady increase in wage scales of operators each fall. Other years the Exhibitors' League has fought them, but usually without success, except that some theater owners discharged their operators and did their own operating.

The new scale goes into effect October 1, but at this writing the exhibitors have not indicated that they would fight it.

The new scale calls for a wage of $40 per week for operators who work matinees and nights; operators who work in double-shift theaters ask $25 per week where the theaters are running but ten hours a day; $35 per week where they run 14 hours a day and $40 per week where they run 16 hours per day. The hours indicated, of course, are divided up so that the two operators on double shifts work each half of the time.

For overtime, the new scale calls for $1 per hour or fraction thereof and for screenings, etc., $1.50 per hour or fraction thereof.

At this rate, screenings will cost film exchanges $3 unless a five-reel feature can be run in an hour.

This is the second raise in wages of theater employes in Cleveland lately, the musicians, especially organists, having secured an increase, in some cases amounting to $10 a week.

Exhibitors Tackle the Pass Nuisance.

Cleveland, O.—Cleveland theater managers are up in arms at the practice of abusing season passes. Here are some of the charges gathered from the managers:

Such passes are used usually on Saturdays or Sundays, when the theaters need their seats the most.

Some parties loan their passes—one pass came in four times in a week, a total of eighteen persons gaining admission.

A great many people who have season passes consider themselves privileged after entering the theater. They sit in box seats and complain when the ushers ask them to move.

Many with passes who have to stand in the rear or in the lobbies complain or make sarcastic remarks.

One of the city's leading moving picture theaters has called in all season passes and will issue new ones only to the press, while another has taken up the pases at the door and is issuing new ones marked "not good Sundays or Holidays."

Nearly all of the theaters now keep track of all passes, which are numbered, and are refusing to honor them a second time during the engagement of any picture.

"Persons with passes should remember that they are getting something for nothing, which others pay for, and act accordingly," said one manager.

Cleveland Screen Club Plans Benefit

Screens Hope to Keep Young Son of Burt Garrett in School—Deceased Left Son and Daughter—Appeal to His Old Friends for Help.

CLEVELAND, O.—The Cleveland Screen Club is about to attempt something never before tried by a like organization—a benefit for the children of a deceased member.

The children are those of Burton Garrett, who was found dead in his apartments in Indianapolis a few weeks ago.

They are Carlos, nine years old, and Marion, four. The boy is now in an English military college in Havana, Cuba, and it is for the principal purpose of enabling the youngster to complete his education that the benefit will be held.

A committee was appointed at the last meeting of the club to make arrangements for the benefit. M. A. Malaney is chairman and he has appointed the following members of this committee for these various duties:

Dave Adler, in charge of theater arrangements; G. W. Erdmann and George Cole, to obtain vaudeville acts; Joseph Grossman, in charge of distribution of tickets, and Tom Colby, treasurer of committee.

Burt Garrett had a legion of friends among the film men of Ohio, Indiana and New York City. The committee makes an appeal to them to help this worthy cause along. The tickets for the benefit which will be in the nature of a vaudeville show at 11 p. m. some evening in September or the fore part of October, date to be announced later, are $1 each, and may be purchased from M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Building, or Joseph Grossman, Standard theater, Cleveland.

Elyria Opera House Burns.

Elyria, O.—The Elyria opera house, which was bought about a week ago by Melton Phelos and others, was destroyed by fire last Tuesday, after Labor Day.

The theater was to be remodeled for pictures. The fire started about 2 a. m. and in two hours the playhouse was ruined. At times it was thought that the blaze would spread to other buildings, among them a theater. The loss was estimated at $60,000.

Newspaper's Film Edition Claims Success.

Cleveland, O.—After several months of experimenting, the Cleveland Plain Dealer officials believe their weekly magazine is a sure success. They base this upon the large number of inquiries from newspaper subscribers and the increase in bookings by Cleveland theaters.

Fox's Features Doing Well in Ohio.

Cleveland, O.—The big Fox productions are well on their way in Ohio, "The Honor System" having opened at the Ceramic theater, East Liverpool, for four days, and "The Spy" at the Park, Youngstown, for four days. These and other Fox super productions will be shown for one and two week runs in the Standard theater, Cleveland, and for week runs in the Temple theater, Toledo.

Cleveland, O.—Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph, was in Cleveland last week and inspected the local branch. He also conferred with Manager Johnson about the prospects for this season's business.

Dayton News Letter

By Paul J. Gray, Alhambra Theater Bldg., Dayton, Oo.

Division of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures in Dayton.

DAYTON, OHIO.—Until further announcement the Columbia theater in Dayton will run the attractions in which appear William S. Hart, Mary Pickford, Dorothy Dalton, George Beban, all the Ince productions and also all the Petrova pictures.

The Columbia will also run Charles Ray and all the other stars not mentioned for the Strand, which is the other house to run Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

The Strand will have Marguerite Clark, Douglas Fairbanks, Billie Burke, Ann Pennington, Pickford and Huff, Vivian Martin, Julian Eltinge, and the rest of the regular Paramount stars.

Business Good at All Dayton Theaters.

Dayton, O.—With the closing of B. F. Keith's summer vaudeville here at ten and twenty-cent admission prices, the picture business should pick up considerably. Most of the houses have been doing good all summer and the hot weather did not interfere with business. The Majestic, which has been closed for some time owing to receivers' proceedings, is expected to open within the next few months and will then make Dayton's picture houses complete in their quota, with the exception of a few neighborhood houses which never will open again.

Buffalo News Letter

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 North Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

N. I. Filkins Becomes Pathe Manager.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—N. I. Filkins has been appointed manager of the Pathe exchange, Buffalo. He succeeds J. W. Fuller, who has become assistant manager of the company's St. Louis office. Mr. Filkins was formerly city salesman for the Pathe in Buffalo for three years. On the day he assumed his new position several exhibitors sent him a large bouquet in honor of the occasion. With the flowers was a card bearing these words: "Hon. Filkins, the man that showed the Path-E in Buffalo." The recipient is a pioneer in the film business, having opened the first Pathe office in this city. A. Teschemacher, former Pathe booker, has succeeded Mr. Filkins as city salesman.

Mr. Filkins takes particular pride in his reorganized staff, which he says shows "one hundred per cent. efficiency." He has made several promotions and appointments, which will be announced next week.

H. L. Taylor, Rochester representative of the Pathe, was a Buffalo caller. Mr. Taylor is learning to write down film orders with his left hand. The reason is that while cranking his machine in front of the Lyndhurst theater, Rochester, recently he had the misfortune to break his right arm in two places.

George Hickey Has Handsome Office.

Buffalo, N. Y.—George A. Hickey, Goldwyn representative, Buffalo, has returned from a business tour of New York State. He is delighted with the demand for these pictures. The Goldwyn office has new green plush carpets, mahogany furniture and partitions of the same material. "A model exchange" is the way Edgar Weill of the Strand theater, Syracuse, has described this branch.

John Sitterly Walks in Fear of a Certain Printer.

Buffalo, N. Y.—John Sitterly of the Popular exchange, Buffalo, has in his possession a theatrical handbill. It came from a village in New York near Buffalo that boasts of its "electric lights, paved streets, mammoth cheese factory" and other city improvements. The purpose of the dodger was to advertise the versatility of a comedian at the local opera house. It had large wood cut, which had outlived its usefulness right after the Civil War. The drawing showed a grinning creature wearing a hat of ante-bellum style. Under the cut were the words: "One of our townsmen laughing at our show." The theatrical manager responsible for the handbill probably didn't intend to use "laughing at," but he did just the same.

"The opera house in question enforces the 'hats off' rule among its women patrons," Mr. Sitterly assured me, but the cut shows that this rule doesn't apply to the men. The handbill looks like a stage souvenir of fifty years ago. The general make-up of the sheet made it seem as if it had been produced in the village cheese factory.

"Believe me," said he, "if I play 'The Daughter of the Gods' at this opera house, I will closely censor every bit of advertising used. I hate to think of what kind of an old-fashioned wood cut the village printer might dig up to represent Miss Kellerman in her diving costume."

Exhibitor Dillon Visits Buffalo.

Ithaca, N. Y.—Will Dillon, former vaudevillian and song writer, recently visited Mr. Hickey. Before pictures were the vogue these two played stock together. Mr. Dillon is now owner of the Strand theater, Ithaca. He has opened his autumn season with Goldwyn productions.

Jottings Caught in Passing.

Buffalo, N. Y.—G. A. Woodard, Goldwyn road representative, is now at his home in Luzerne, N. Y.

"Polly of the Circus," a film production, has played successfully at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; Strand, Syracuse; Alhambra, Utica, and Picadilly, Rochester.

Recent visitors in Buffalo included Fred B. Murphy, vice-president of the Unicorn Film; Harris Lumberg, of the Lumberg theater, Niagara Falls; Mr. Landers, an exhibitor and postmaster of Fredonia; Mr. Pierce, of the Temple theater, Geneva, and Mr. Petersen, of the Winter Garden theater, Jamestown.

Street Cars Try to Put One Over.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Exhibitors and other business men along Broadway, Buffalo, have protested to Mayor Fuhrmann against the "Skip-Stop" system on the Broadway line of the International Railway Co. The plan is to have the cars stop at alternate corners to save time. The objectors claim that the cars are too often crowded and that more cars are needed.

Buffalo Theaters Start in on Their Coal.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A sudden drop in temperature has driven home nearly the last contingent of summer colonists from Buffalo's lake and river resorts and has helped the business of the local exhibitors. The theatrical managers have discarded all summer advertising about their cool, wind-swept houses and have started their fires. Firing a theater these days requires as much courage as firing a manager, on account of the scarcity and high price of coal.

The exhibitors have learned that anthracite in Buffalo, despite the government's price fixing, costs seventy-five cents a ton more now than it did any time last winter. It is said that this city's soft coal industry is also thoroughly demoralized. Last winter the cold weather and the coal shortage gave some of the local theaters a barn-like temperature.

Michigan Notes of the Trade.

What Should a Seat Cost?--Let Us Know

The Price of Every Other Thing Is Up, Should Exhibitors Still Be Content? Tell Us Whether You Are Satisfied with Prices You Get.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The question of whether to increase prices—and whether higher prices would "kill the goose" is puzzling many exhibitors. Can they get more? That is the question. If they do as much business at increased prices, it certainly would help a lot towards helping to pay part of the increased film rental and the general increased cost of operation.

The exhibitor today is paying more for film—more for his help—invariably more for his rent of theater or property—more taxes and more everything—as compared to previous years. Yet it's a fact that he isn't able to do much more business for the reason that competition is a whole lot keener and he is unable to increase the size of his theater. The big house downtown opens at noon and runs continuously until 11 p. m.—it is very easy for such a house to materially increase the receipts one week over another. But the neighborhood house has only a limited population to cater to and proprietor or manager of such a house is fighting problems that do not confront the downtown theatre. The number of transients downtown is so great that the more theatres the merrier—but not so in the residential sections, where it is impossible for the exhibitor to give the same value for the money as the downtown theaters give.

Many exhibitors in the small towns and in the residential theaters have asked The World correspondent if he thought it advisable to raise prices. One thing is certain—there is no excuse for any theater charging five cents—ten cents should be the minimum admission price, because it is just as easy to get ten as five. For the neighborhood house, 10, 15 and 20 cents, with 25 cents for the boxes seems to be a good average scale. In some sections 10 and 15 strikes a better average. The fact must not be overlooked that most people in the residential sections go from one to four times a week, and they usually take the children along. If the admission price is too high, they won't want to take the children along so they simply stay home, and instead of going maybe three times they go but once. There are some sections and some theaters that could easily raise their prices from 5 to 10, from 10 to 15 and 15 to 20. One thing is certain—we have yet to run across a single theater that had to come down on its prices, showing that thus far exhibitors have used very good judgment in arranging their prices.

Another point about prices that is troubling exhibitors right now—and more than ever before—is whether to charge higher prices for special productions. Some argue that it's a bad policy to raise your prices for any special pictures—that it is a whole lot better to establish a regular schedule of prices and stick to them regardless of what the attraction is. There is some logic to this from the exhibitor's standpoint. Take the ligitimate amusement business—if shows are playing the K. & E. attractions, a scale of $2 top is established throughout the entire season, year in and year out—the same thing applies to the Shubert houses—the same thing to the burlesque houses—and the vaudeville houses. People know week in and week out what the prices are, whereas they would kick very strenuously if the prices were advanced whenever a special good attraction was announced.

On the other hand, the exhibitors ought to realize that they cannot possibly give their patrons a big feature costing $300,000 for the same price of one costing only $25,000. The producer who puts big money into a picture cannot get it back unless he can get a better rental price than the regular so-called feature, and if the exhibitor pays considerably more for such a big feature he cannot make money unless he asks more from his patrons.

There are good arguments pro and con on this subject, and it would be mighty interesting to have exhibitors express themselves on this important topic. Michigan exhibitors should send all communications to our Detroit correspondent, Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building.

Memphis Mayor Orders Sunday Closing

Newly Elected City Official Begins With a Rush—Takes Warning from Past and Has Police Close Everything Lest He Too Fall.

J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—Mayor Harry H. Litty, recently elected to office following ouster proceedings instituted against former Mayor Thos. C. Ashcroft, has set about the business of Sunday closing and enforcement of the antiquated "blue laws" with a rush. Statements were issued to the effect that all laws governing the operation of theaters and moving picture shows on Sunday would be enforced to the letter, "not because they are right in my opinion, but because they are on the books," according to Mayor Litty. "Personally, I am going fishing Sunday. I fail to see the harm in it, and there is no law against it. Regarding Memphis, I have no other choice open to me. It is not a question of what I think, but what the state laws say," said the mayor. The whole action is a result of a political turmoil of city affairs in Memphis, in which the mayor and several city officials were ousted from office, and the new mayor, evidently fearing a like fate, is playing on the safe side.

Police Inspector Hayes immediately issued orders to the police force, advising them of the mayor's order. The inspector was positive in his statement preceding the effective date of the order that the amusement houses would be closed. He declared that his men would arrest the proprietors and require them to pay a forfeit, but that unlike other times when they have been arrested the theater men will not be permitted to return to their houses after making bond, but that after posting the forfeit the police would see to it that the houses stayed closed for the balance of the day. Complaints made to the city government that the laboring men would have no place of amusement to carry their families on Sunday other than the parks, etc., were answered by stating that former Mayor Ashcroft, so far as possible, had permitted the theaters to remain open, and had been ousted, and that every law on the statute books would be enforced to the letter to prevent a recurrence.

Under a ruling of City Attorney Henry J. Livingston, so long as the profits went to charity they are within the law in remaining open on Sunday. It was hinted that the theater men and officials of the Associated Charities, which have benefited from the admission receipts, would join hands and test the validity of the order.

Sunday Injunction Prevents Closing.

At a late hour Saturday an injunction was granted the theater managers, restraining city or county officials from closing the moving picture and vaudeville shows, and as a result Sunday, September 2, found the town "wide open" insofar as the theaters were concerned. Managers of two combination vaudeville and picture houses had complaints to make. The business of both these houses was hurt through the public's anticipation of a tight Sunday, which was brought about through the lack of publicity given issuance of the injunction, and the Sunday crowds were small in comparison to normal business, picking up, however, with each performance, as the news spread. It was the last day of the first week at the Orpheum, and only about one-third of the seats were filled at the opening performance. The local Loew house had opened the season the day before, and suffered along the same lines as the Orpheum. The straight moving picture houses did not suffer to such a material extent. Followers of the screen productions, in their wanderings up and down Main street and in the neighborhood picture show localities, soon found their way to the bright lights over the film houses, and a thriving business resulted.

Providing the injunction assumes a permanent aspect, the picture men have little to worry about. If, however, a vigorous fight is made against them, it will mean a revival of the strife arising some months ago when the Protestant Pastors' Association raised its several hands skyward to voice its earnest disapproval of Sunday opening. The Memphis managers are as hard a bunch of nuts to crack as one will find anywhere over the country, and when they set their heads on remaining open Sundays, they intend to remain open, regardless. The outcome of the fight will be watched with interest.

Monteagle, Tenn.—The success attained through the exhibition of moving pictures for the season at this popular summer resort has surpassed that of any former season since the custom has been established. A feature of this year's exhibition has been the presentation of high class subjects, in keeping with the highly educational atmosphere surrounding the chautauqua, which includes such pictures as Dickens' "Great Expectations," and other famous works. The pictures have been furnished for several years by a Nashville amusement company, and have always been one of the most pleasant and popular attractions at Monteagle.

The Advantage of Seat Covers.

Nashville, Tenn.—As time goes on, moving picture managers begin to see more and more each day the many advantages of placing washable seat covers over the backs of the seats in the auditoriums of their houses. During the warm days, especially, the women can be found wending their way to the houses where this convenience is thoughtfully provided by the management, and many are the praises which come from the ladies who witness a show in comfort, with the aid of these covers, particularly after they have been in a theater where the seats are bare. The first cost is not so great that any house will have to take the bankrupt law, while the laundry bill is of minor consequence in comparison with the shekels they bring into the coffers.

"The Slacker" Good in Alabama.

Birmingham, Ala.—Packed houses daily greeted each performance of "The Slacker' at the Rialto theater, where the picture was booked for a solid week, having created quite a sensation here. Local officials of the press, clergy, army and navy have been loud in their praise of the film.

Cincinnati Theater Offers Prize for Name.

CINCINNATI, O.—A contest is on in which the name of the new McMahan & Jackson theater at Sixth and Vine streets will be selected, together with a slogan to be used with the name in the theater's advertising. A local paper is offering a prize of $25 for the best name and slogan, and competition is keen for the honor of naming the new house, and incidentally winning the money. Work on the building is going on rapidly, and it is evident that by pushing things the house will be completed early in the fall, which is the object of the firm. The contest for the best name and slogan will be kept open until the house is practically ready for opening, in order to secure as many suggestions as possible.

Exhibitor Has to Appear Before Court.

Cincinnati, O.—Edward Linch, manager of a house on Central avenue, was before the juvenile court last week on a charge of permitting a juvenile under fourteen years to perform in his theater, and was given a suspended sentence when it developed that he had been deceived as to the boy's age. Then Mr. Linch was called before the municipal court on a charge of promoting a game of chance, this being based on the "country store" idea which was tried at the theater recently. As it was held by the court not long ago in a similar case that a "country store" is not a gambling device, Mr. Linch was again dismissed, and his legal troubles are probably over for the time being, at least.

F. H. Richardson Designs Lighting System.

Youngstown, O.—The Federal Holding Co., which is erecting the Liberty theater, at Federal and Hazel streets, intends to omit no step which will make the theater all that could be desired in efficiency, as far as the projection of pictures is concerned, and to that end has secured the services of F. H. Richardson, the well-known projection expert of the Moving Picture World, to arrange this detail. Mr. Richardson has designed the entire lighting system of the house with a view to securing the most agreeable light for the audience, and the best for the pictures, and has so arranged the lights that the screen and the walls will be in shadow, while the audience itself will be in the light, making an ideal arrangement. The house is making rapid progress, and will be completed on schedule.

Mae Marsh Picture Shown to Trade.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager C. C. Hite, of the Goldwyn Cincinnati office, held a highly successful private showing of "Polly of the Circus," the film version of the popular play of that name, at his offices not long ago. He was especially pleased at the presence of Alfred Weiss, vice-president of the company, who came all the way from New York to be at the exhibition, while many exhibitors from the territory handled out of the Cincinnati office, including Kentucky and Indiana, as well as Ohio, were also on hand. Bookings have been liberal, and the picture bids fair to be as great a success as the play, Mr. Hite declares.

Mayor of Hamilton Enforces Blue Laws.

Hamilton, O.—Enforcement of the Ohio blue laws has been ordered by Mayor John A. Holzberger, of Hamilton, due to troubles arising out of the several big strikes which have been going on in the city, and also on account of political reasons, he declares. The mayor specifically directed the police to see that all moving-picture houses, cigar stores, news stands, ice-cream parlors and drug stores be closed. Several moving-picture exhibitors have announced their intention of defying the mayor's orders and taking whatever consequences may come, and the outcome of the matter bids fair to afford some interesting developments. Several years ago the blue laws were rigidly enforced in Hamilton, and proved highly unpopular, as they are today.

Akron Theater Will Give Prize for Name.

Akron, O.—Horace Parks, manager of the new theater on West Market street, in Akron, which is to cost $150,000, and which will be one of the most roomy and modern houses in Ohio, is offering a series of prizes for the best suggestions for a name for the theater. A jury of three Akron newspaper men will select the names of the prize-winners, the first of which will receive $25 in cash, the second a pass to the theater for six months, and on down to the next fifty best, each of which will be awarded a pass. The conditions of the contest are that the name must be appropriate to the times, location and class of the house, and that it must not be similar to that of any other in use in Akron; and no person connected directly or indirectly with the owners or with the management of the house, or any persons who are interested in the building of the theater, or in furnishing supplies or equipment to it, will be eligible.

Co-operate to Buy, Store and Deliver Coal

Louisville Exhibitors and Others Combine to Handle Winter's Coal—Many Theaters Use Much Coal but Have Small Bins.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The coal supply situation and heating theaters and moving picture houses is one of great interest to the exhibitor at this time. A number of the local theaters buy their steam, and have been notified of an increased rate on account of the cost of coal. The weather turned so cold, September 10 and 11, that theaters used steam when the low mark of 44 degrees was reached, a record for early September.

Many of the theaters operate their own heating plants and in an effort to buy coal in car lots, and save something on the cost, the Consumers' Fuel & Supplies Co., has been incorporated with a capital of $5,000 by real estate men, theater managers, apartment house owners, etc., this being a co-operative company which will supply its members coal at cost, cost including delivery, etc. Few theaters or apartment houses have storage capacity for a car of coal, and are unable to buy in car lots. The new company will buy and deliver this coal as needed, on a co-operative basis at cost of operation.

This promises to be a big aid to some of the local theater owners who have been up in the air for months over the situation. Very little coal has been purchased as contracts are not to be had, and the situation is such that no one is anxious to place contracts, fearing that the Government will shortly take action and that prices will be much lower. On the other hand there is a strike in Eastern Kentucky of the coal miners, a car shortage that is growing steadily worse, and at the same time the uncertainty concerning price has resulted in practically no deliveries or yard stocks, while there is very little storage coal anywhere. This means that when cold weather and the big demand is here that the coal will go out of sight as regardless of set prices, it will be a question of getting coal at any price.

Mutual and Co-operative Stamp Companies Merge.

Louisville, Ky.—Fred Dolle, manager of the Fourth Ave., Amusement, operators of the Alamo theater, and also connected with the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, has merged his interests known as the Mutual Trading Stamp Co., with the Co-Operative Trading Stamp Co., and along with the announcement of the merger announced that arrangements had been made whereby the trading stamps of the Co-Operative Company would be accepted in payment of admission to the following theaters: Alamo, Highland, Broadway, Ideal, West Broadway, Crown, Rex and Aristo. Making the stamps redeemable at the theaters is expected to result in additional business for both the theaters and trading stamp organization, and as the stamps have a cash surrender value the deal is a good one.

Kansas City Notes and Filmdom Happenings

Strike in Two Express Companies Hinders Shipments from Exchanges—New Jewel Exchanges Opened—Local Personals.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Kansas City moving picture exchanges have been severely crippled in the general strike of the Adams and Wells Fargo Express Company offices in which clerks, teamsters and freight handlers have walked out following demands which the companies declare are uncommon to other companies.

The strike began September 7 and after two days the film companies had resigned themselves to getting all of their films out by the American Express or by parcels post. The trouble has come in getting the films out to the exhibitor as the companies must either rely on the one company or else get their films to the post office in any manner possible. The lesser inconvenience is the bringing back of films to the exchange that have been returned to the city by the exhibitor. This is handled by having a special express man call for the film with a wagon or truck. The effect of the strike has been the tieing up of shipments to such an extent that all the offices are receiving many wires inquiring for the pictures. There have been only a few cancellations so far.

J. Erwin Dodson Will Visit Many Exhibitors.

"Junk" Picture Replevined by General Film.

Kansas City, Mo.—The General Film Company recently showed a local exhibitor the error of his ways when a picture he was showing was replevined by the company. It seems as if the exhibitor had bought the picture from a "junk dealer" in Birmingham, Alabama, not knowing from whom the picture had come, and that the Alabama man had undoubtedly gotten the picture by foul means. P. J. Swift, manager of the Kansas City office, heard of the running of the picture, and replevined it, and in so doing saved the exhibitor from future embarrassment and secured the return of the picture to its proper owners.

There will be about six traveling salesmen working out of the Kansas City office. The prints of the first release, "Come Through," featuring Herbert Rawlinson, have already been received. The benefit was held at Convention Hall, September 5, at which an entertainment consisting of moving pictures, vaudeville, and drills by the soldiers was given.

Many Exhibitors See "Polly."

The local Goldwin office has been conducting trade showings for the last week on "Polly of the Circus," featuring Mae Marsh, which have been well attended by out-of-town exhibitors. Several of the Kansas City exhibitors became wildly enthusiastic over the race horse scene in the picture, saying that it was the most thrilling bit of picture they have seen for a long time.

Business Jottings in Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Universal Film and Supply Company has secured a continuous run of ten days on the serial, "The Red Ace," in four houses, the Globe, Saphire, The World in Motion, and the Palace. The company is soon to start an advertising campaign for the run of the picture at the Globe. This will be done by the placing of large announcements on the fronts of 250 street cars, also by newspaper space, by novelty advertising, and by bill-boards.

Richard Robertson, manager of the Kansas City Goldwyn office, says that his salesmen are booking towns of less than 3,000 population for two days' run. Several examples of this occur in such places as Falls City, Nebraska; Ridgeway, Missouri, with 800 people; Eldorado, Kansas; Bethany, Missouri; Plattsburg, Missouri.

The General Film gave a private showing of one of the new Falcon, "The Stolen Play," and one of the new George Ade's, "The Fable of the Twelve-Cylinder Speed of the Leisure Class," at the Columbia theater on September 7.

Personal Notes from Local Exchanges.

D. R. Patterson, southwestern Missouri traveler for the Southern Triangle, was in Kansas City for several days following a trip to Webb City, Carthage, and Joplin, Missouri.

J. D. Thatcher, Jr., Kansas representative of the Southern Triangle, was in Kansas City this week. He says that every town of over 10,000 population in the state of Kansas is showing the pictures he sells.

E. R. Reynolds, assistant branch manager of the Southern Triangle at Kansas City, spent a day in Marshall, Missouri, arranging with exhibitors in that place for the Triangle re-issues.

G. E. Akers, special representative for the Kansas City Feature Film, has returned to the Kansas City office after a trip through southern Kansas and northern Oklahoma. He motored to Kansas City from St. Louis, Missouri. He reports an unusually good business and that the Sennett Comedies are very popular in the places he visited.

IN THE TWIN CITIES.

"Joan" at Regular Prices.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Perhaps the greatest bargain week bill ever offered by a local playhouse was scheduled for the local Strand theater the week of Sept. 16 when Manager Charles G. Branham offered Geraldine Farrar in "Joan the Woman" at regular admission prices. Mr. Branham has launched a big advertising campaign on the feature and has arranged special music. "On Trial," "Within the Law" and "To the Death," are expected to make their appearance at the Strand shortly.

Other Features at Mill City Theater.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Lowell V. Calvert extended his run of Mary Pickford's "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" three days and his capacity business continued. Julius Johnson, Mr. Calvert's organist rendered some exceptional music in accompanying the production and a country band placed on the stage furnished real music for the dancing scenes in the fifth reel.

"Polly of the Circus" drew big crowds to the New Garrick the first half of the week of Sept. 9, while "Rebecca" continued playing to a big business at the New Garrick in St. Paul.

"The Slacker" following a good week's run at The Strand, Minneapolis, opened a good week's business at the Blue Mouse, St. Paul, Sept. 9.

Dan Eselin opened the University theatre, 14th and University here Sept. 1 with a Bluebird feature to a good business.

Manager George Granstrom of the New Franklin, Minneapolis, has installed a "jazz band" in his theater.

Changes Along Mill City's Film Row

J. E. Keough Comes Back as Manager of New Lyric—Vitagraph Manager Goes to Chicago and E. S. Holmes Takes His Place—Other Notes.

By John L. Johnston 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The unexpected is always happening in Minneapolis. After an unusually quiet week, August 26 to Sept 2, things picked up and film talk began sparking on all twelve cylinders and also backfiring during the days that have followed.

J. E. Keough Managing New Lyric.

James E. Keough, former manager of the Minneapolis Strand returned last week from Chicago and is now managing The New Lyric theater, recently taken over by Ruben & Finkelstein. What the future plans of former manager Hugh C. Andress are to be have not been officially announced to date but our high powered monacle shows Mr. Andress's smile and cheerful countenance intact.

W. H. Strauss Enters State Rights Field.

But hold—Mr. Keough's reappearance is not the only surprise of the week. While applications have been pouring in on Harry Cohen and he has been besieged with inquiries as to who is to be the new Metro manager here, Walter H. Strauss, manager pro tem has resigned. Mr. Strauss was formerly assistant manager to W. K. Howard at the Vitagraph and Metro exchanges here, practiced law one year and served a time on the copy desk of the Cincinnati Enquirer. He will enter the local state rights field and plans on opening offices in the Produce Exchange building.

E. S. Holmes Comes as Vitagraph Manager.

Manager H. C. Bayley of the Greater Vitagraph exchange is leaving. He has been appointed manager of the Chicago Vitagraph offices and assumes his new duties at once. He is succeeded at his Minneapolis Post by E. S. Holmes, former manager of the Vitagraph's New Orleans' exchange. Mr. Holmes comes to Minneapolis with a good record and a hearty grip for all exhibitors in the territory. He has appointed A. L. Picker and H. D. Ection to his sales force and asserts the "Welcome" and "Satisfaction Guaranteed" signs will hang side by side at the Greater Vitagraph offices as long as he remains here. Mr. Bayley has not been in Minneapolis long enough to get well acquainted with exhibitors, but he makes some good friends among those who have been fortunate enough to meet him.

Manager Edward A. Westcott of the Fox exchange spent two days in Chicago last week in conference with W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox forces and in listening to battle plans in the "Spy" war-Fox vs. Major Funkhouser.

Lee A. Horn Goes to Supreme Feature.

Mayor Bauer of Lafayette, Plans Theater

New House Will Cost $150,000—Site is Seventh and Main Streets—Seeks Ten Business Men to Aid in Financing Project.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 816 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis.

LAFAYETTE, IND.—Plans are being prepared for a new $150,000 theater in this city, to be erected on the old Shearman property at Seventh and Main streets. Thomas Bauer, mayor of the city, is at the head of the movement, and his plan is for ten business men to subscribe $10,000 to a fund, thus making $100,000, which, it is believed, would be ample to start the erection of the building.

Leopold Drefus, who owned the Dreyfus theater, which was destroyed by fire two years ago, has said he will contribute the first $10,000. The new house will be devoted to high class legitimate productions as well as motion picture feature films. Lafayette has had no legitimate showhouse since the destruction of the Dreyfus. The new structure will be fireproof in its construction and there will be office rooms in the front part of the building.

Luna Will Be Brighter Still.

Lafayette, Ind.—Extensive improvements are to be made in the Luna Theater, Lafayette's popular photoplay house, in the near future, according to a recent announcement. About $35,000, including ground leases, etc., will be expended on the building in the hope of making it one of the finest in this section of the state. Work will be started about the latter part of September.

The extensions and underground work will be carried on with the theater in operation, but its doors will be closed for about six weeks to allow the finishing touches to be placed on the interior. When finished it will be large enough to accommodate the largest pictures on the road as well as occasional vaudeville performances. A new ventilating system is to be one of the additional features.

The room adjoining the theater on the east, now occupied by Roth the florist, has been leased and additional space in the rear of the building also has been contracted for. The present lobby will be enlarged to take in the Roth flower shop and the main stairway will be widened to serve as an exit for the balcony, that is to be added to the theater.

The first floor will have a seating capacity of 700 and the balcony will seat 500 persons, in addition to the loges which will seat fifty people. The ceiling will be raised fifteen feet for the installation of the balcony and to provide height for the immense organ to be installed and additional stage equipment.

The interior decorations will be in the hands of a Chicago artist and the lighting system will be the latest improved indirect. A battery of the latest model motion picture machines will be installed in a fireproof and soundproof room on the first floor. The acoustics will be as nearly perfect as possible, and the new theater will be furnished throughout with the most improved seating ideas.

Colonial Theater Adds Vaudeville.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Bingham, Crose and Cohen, managers of the Colonial theater, have made a change in the policy, taking effect Sunday, Sept. 2. In addition to the feature photoplays which they have been offering to the public heretofore, a vaudeville bill will be given and the entertainment will be operated continuously, as now, from 12 noon until 11 p. m.

Irwin Moss Will Conduct the Princess.

Frankfort, Ind.—The active management of the Princess theater, which is now being operated by the Bon Ton Amusement Company, has been taken over by Irwin Moss, formerly a resident of Culver, Ind. Charles Spray, a member of the concern, will now manage the Blinn theater.

George G. Ball Dies After Brief Illness.

Lafayette, Ind.—George G. Ball, who established Lafayette's first motion picture theater, died at his home here last week as a result of a brief illness. He was graduated from Purdue University in 1888 and for several years prior to entering the motion picture business he operated a plumbing supply house. He was fifty-one years old.

Sunday Theaters Expected at Fort Worth

Need of Pictures at Camp Bowie Told by Former Correspondent of Moving Picture World—Some Items Gathered in the City.

By Kent Watson, Battery D, 1st Texas F. A., Former Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS.—Picture theaters will be running wide open in Fort Worth on Sundays within the very near future. That is not prediction, indication or presumption. The facts are stated unreservedly in the first sentence. And the rabid ranters who found so valiantly six months ago to close those picture shows will be allowed to sit back, without more than a whimper, and watch their strenuous labors go to naught. The master has willed that picture shows are a good thing for the soldier boys camped at Fort Worth and so it is that the darkened doors are to re-invite a more enlightened enlightenment to the city of Forth Worth.

With 40,000 Texas and Oklahoma troops in training at Camp Bowie, three miles from the city, it was deemed necessary by military authorities that legitimate Sunday amusement should be furnished the soldiers. And with a stack of unpaid fines, aggregating possibly $15,000, chucked off into the pigeon-hole of his desk, the City Attorney of Fort Worth has made no claim for a legal fight.

"They jest gotta have the movies," is what the C. O. would say if interviewed, I think, because he's that sort of a fellow. He's rubbed the rugged rocks of soldiering and his sympathies are formed into sentiments that perhaps would be unethical for him to make public for political reasons.

I am among the soldiers who came happily on to training camp and I'll admit that I was somewhat shocked at seeing picture shows dark in this city on Sunday. I interviewed some of the theater exhibitors.

They advised that the only way to get the shows opened was to take it up through the military authorities.

"When a soldier hollers," stated Manager Levy of the Hippodrome and Strand theaters, "He'll get what he wants. We exhibitors dare not take an open hand in this game, but you can bet your necks that we're with you until the cows come home."

Within an hour after that statement two hundred and eleven men had signed a petition requesting their commander to urge the camp commander to wield his influence in favor of Sunday picture shows in Fort Worth. Petitions from other military units followed the first and the officers of the camp realized that the soldiers were "hollering for what they want."

Diplomacy Plays the Cards.

The agitation has been of the diplomatic sort. It has not been of the bitter sort that preceded the former fight when the exhibitors and their adherents lost the case of Sunday opening in Texas courts. No demonstrations have been made and will not be made. Little publicity has been given to the crusade.

While no statement has been officially authorized to this effect it is known that the city officials feel that the officers at Camp Bowie had a right to make the demand, which later will be properly presented and it is known authoritatively that no concerted legal action will be taken against the move which was so quietly instituted and successfully waged.

"We want the amusement places of Fort Worth open on Sundays," is the authorized statement of Colonel O. C. Guessaz, commanding the First Texas Infantry. "At present Sunday is the only day the soldiers at Camp Bowie have off and yet at the same time it is the only day that there is no legitimate amusement in Fort Worth for them. They go down town and wander about the streets seeking something to do, but are severely criticized if they get into mischief.

"The amusement places can easily be regulated by boards of censorship so that they will provide the cleanest of entertainment. What could be more instructive than pictures of the war or the activities of the Red Cross? The boys at Camp Bowie are red-blooded men and singing parties will not appeal to all of them. THE OPENING OF PICTURE SHOWS IN FORT WORTH ON SUNDAY IS THE ONLY SOLUTION."

The city attorney of Fort Worth has stated that the picture shows will be opened within the very near future.

Every Uniform Is a Ticket.

Fort Worth, Texas.—"If you have on a uniform bust right in—no ticket is needed—our treat." That's the sign that greeted men passing soldiers in Fort Worth Sunday—the first time a picture show has been known to dare intimate the possibility of opening for more than eight months. The sign was hanging in front of the popular Alps theater and soldiers flocked in by the hundreds. The show was open from 1 p. m. until 7 p. m. and none except soldiers were allowed within. 'Twas just a free show to the khaki-clad youths of Uncle Sam, many of whom felt more at home for the pictures than for the cordiality and condolence of the manager who will never cease to be a life-long friend of every man who went into the Alps theater. He made the soldiers glad and advertised his house just as good as if he'd read Epes Winthrop Sargent's little book.

Pershing Theater Now Open.

Fort Worth, Texas.—The Pershing theater, recently completed, is now opened to the public with motion pictures and vaudeville as the attraction. The new theater is one of the most attractive in the city.

Arrival of Army at Camp Dodge Boosts Pictures.

DES MOINES, IA.—With the arrival of the first contingent of the conscript army at Camp Dodge, twelve miles from Des Moines, the picture people of Des Moines are beginning their plans for the entertainment of the boys in khaki. The Majestic theater is the first to make a big bid for their patronage by the opening of the series of seven two-reel Pathe pictures of "The Battle of the Somme." On Friday, September 7, the management of the Majestic in conjunction with the Evening Tribune, entertained all of the men in uniform and conscripts who could show their credentials between the hours of eleven and six, with the first of the two-reel episodes. The house was jammed from eleven all through the afternoon and evening with soldiers and civilians attracted by the big publicity given the series by the Tribune. The war pictures will be shown every Friday.

San Francisco Operators Give Movie Ball

Financial Success Follows Fifth Annual Ball of Local 162—Provides a Death and Sick Fund—General Committee in Charge.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The fifth annual Movie Ball, tendered by the San Francisco Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 162 for the benefit of the sick and death fund, was held in the Exposition Auditorium in the Civic Center on September 1st, and was a very successful event. This organization has the exclusive right to hold a "Movie Ball" here, having taken the precaution to register the term for its protection.

The recent event drew a larger attendance that was thought possible, considering the circumstances, a street car strike being in progress at the time. However, municipal cars were operated to the Civic Center and automobiles brought large numbers so that the transportation strike did not seriously interfere with its success. Several local vaudeville houses furnished acts and there were many novelties in the line of electrical effects.

The affair was handled by a general committee consisting of Peter Boyle, chairman; Anthony L. Noreiga, secretary; L. G. Dolliver, financial secretary; C. E. Jones, treasurer; A. F. Howell and M. Goodman. The various committees that assisted the general committee, with their chairmen, were as follows: Reception, A. F. Howell; floor, E. P. Jones; entertainment, W. de Latimer; Publicity, Anthony L. Noreiga, and finance, M. Goodman.

The officials of the local union are Peter Boyle, president; M. Fairbanks, vice-president; Anthony L. Noreiga, secretary; C. E. Jones, treasurer; E. Ahern, sergeant-at-arms, and L. G. Dolliver, business agent.

Express Ruling Causes Trouble.

San Francisco, Cal.—The three express companies doing business here, Wells Fargo, Adams and the American Express, have notified the trade that it will make deliveries of nothing received later than three o'clock each day and that no pick-ups will be made after five o'clock. This will not affect ordinary mercantile lines to any marked extent, but will prove a serious matter for film exchange interests. It will necessitate the maintainance of a special delivery service on the part of some of the large exchanges, especially during the winter months, when train service is apt to be delayed. The Motion Picture Industries of Northern California has taken the matter up with the different express companies, but without securing any promise of relief.

Sunset Theater Sold to A. R. Oberle.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Sunset theater on Haight street, conducted for several years by Oppenheimer, Karski & Levy, has been sold to A. R. Oberle, who conducts the Bay Station theater at Alameda. The former owners of the Sunset are now devoting their attention to the management of the Royal theater on Polk street, but at the same time are investigating other locations with the idea of erecting another house with a seating capacity of not less than 2,000.

Garrick Again a Picture House.

San Francisco, Cal.—Following a short run of musical comedy the New Garrick theater, Fillmore and Ellis streets, has gone back to moving pictures, planning to present big features only. Two changes of program will be made each week and the prices of admission will be ten cents for adults and five cents for children. The first film offering under the change in policy was "The Fires of Rebellion," featuring Dorothy Phillips.

Mutual Manager Enthusiastic.

San Francisco, Cal.—Newton Levy, manager of the local Mutual branch, returned recently from a trip to Northern California and Nevada and reports that exhibitors in the territory he covered are doing a fine business and are preparing for a great fall season. He had a very successful trip and is delighted with the showing that is being made by this office with the new two-a-week releases, business having shown a great gain since this policy was inaugurated.

Portola Books "Les Miserables."

San Francisco, Cal.—"Les Miserables" has been booked for a week's run at the Portola theater ness. In the accompanying picture he is seen on the right, and his assistant, B. Schwartz is on the left, while between them is George George, manager of the Palm theater of this city, who has just signed up for Christie comedies for a full year.

H. Solmson, a Peerless Hustler.

For the past two years Mr. Solmson has been with E. H. Emmick, of the Peerless Film Service, most of the time as manager of this office, and before coming here handled several pictures on his own account in Missouri. His duties have been added to of late as the Peerless Film Service has taken over all of the features formerly handled by the De Luxe Film-Lasky Corp. in Northern California and Nevada. He states that a big business is being done in the southern territory on the "Bar Sinister," which is being handled by the Peerless for Nat A. Magner.

W. E. Matthews Made Branch Manager.

San Francisco, Cal.—W. E. Matthews, who has made an enviable record for himself at the local office of the General Film, has been made manager of the new branch office established this month at Portland, Ore. The San Francisco branch is making a steady gain in business, the new four-reel productions attracting much attention and the Essanay reissue of "The Champion" bringing in a flood of bookings.

Can You Blame Us for Printing the Following

In the July 5th issue of our well known British contemporary, of London, England, "The Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly," there is an article on "The Making of a Model Trade Paper," by A. E. Newbould (Chairman of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association), from which we quote the following:

"I would like to put on record my opinion that the Trade Press has been going ahead lately by leaps and bounds. There has been a definite effect toward freer criticism, more up-to-date methods and constructive assistance.

"But we have still a long way to go, and I am in cordial agreement with Mr. Montagu when he points to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD as a model Trade Paper. It is dignified, judicial, undeniably independent and very capably edited. It is in the best sense of the word a trade organ to which a wealthy industry can point with pride."

The above is all the more gratifying as Mr. Newbould is unknown to us except as we have noted his name from time to time in the British trade press in connection with his activities on behalf of the exhibitors of Great Britain.

SPARKLE COMEDY.

HEARTS AND HARPOONS (One Reel).—In a fishing hamlet Captain Peters and Captain Hankins, retired sea captains, are old cronies. Mrs. Scribbler, a widow and writer of sea stories, comes to the town to get atmosphere. On her arrival both old captains fall in love with her and a strong rivalry springs up between them. Captain Hankins proposes a sail down the bay and the widow accepts. Captain Peters bribes Clarence, a hoodlum, to bore a hole in the boat. He then makes a daring rescue of the widow from the sinking yawl, to the discomfiture of his rival.

Captain Hankins learns that Captain Peters is responsible for the leaky yawl and determines to get even. Learning that Captain Peters is to take the widow out driving he fixes it with the liveryman to give them a balky horse and later relieves Captain Peters of his prize and turns the tables. That night a duel is proposed, the choice of weapons being harpoons at twenty paces. Just before the signal to begin is given the widow and Jack Martin, who has been trying to induce the lady to marry him, rush in and matters are explained. The two captains make up and Jack leads his widow away.

MIXED NUTS (One Reel).—The cast: A. Wall Nut (Alfred Swenson); Hazel Nut (Marguerite Chaffee); Belle Bun (Lorlie Palmer); Mr. Winslow (Edward Lawrence); His Wife (Ione Bright).

A. Wall Nut and his wife, Hazel, are a happy young people, but the spectre of gray hair threatens to mar their happiness. The young husband is sent to Europe by his firm and cautions his wife not to dye her hair in his absence or he will divorce her. But the sight of fresh gray hairs is too much for her and she goes to the hairdresser to have her locks retouched. Falling asleep, she is frantic to find on awakening that her hair has been dyed a deep and lasting black, and decides to go to California with her sister until the dye wears off.

A Wall Nut is recalled by his firm and wires his wife that he is returning. The Swedish servant receives the message and answers it, cutting down the cable until it reads: "Your wife died. It was terrible. Her sister has taken her to California." Wall Nut receives the message and is overcome. He writes a letter enclosing some money and gives it to a loiterer in the hotel lobby to mail. The latter is a thief and is run down while making off with the letter and money and mistaken for A. Wall Nut.

Word is sent to Hazel that her husband has been killed. On the way home Nut tells Mrs. Winslow, a friend, of his wife's death. In the meantime Hazel, waiting at the dock to receive her husband's body, meets Mr. Winslow. Through glasses they see Nut and Mrs. Winslow apparently in close embrace. The boat docks, mutual explanations follow and the reunited Nuts wend their way home.

FALCON FEATURES.

THE CLIMBER (Four Parts.—The cast: William Beerdheim Van Broon (Henry King); Bruce Crosby (Jack McLaughlin); Buck Stringer (T. H. Gibson Gowland); Grafton (Bert Ensminger); Tom Tarney (Chas. Blaisdell); Sweeney (James Kerr); Slats O'Keefe (Bruce Smith); "Happy" (Frank Erlanger); Eva Crosby (Lucille Pietz); Ethel Crosby (Leah Gibbs); Madelyn Rosseau (Arma Carlton); Mrs. Crosby (Mollie McConnell); Mrs. Tarney (Ruth Lackaye). From story by George Foxhall. Directed by Henry King.

William Beerdheim Van Broon, of a very old family, has come down until now he is a marker in Tom Tarney's bowling alleys. Tarney, seeing him deal a fellow a knockout blow, puts him in training, seeing great pugilistic possibilities in the boy.

Buck Stringer, the local champion, has a brother and sister, both employed in the home of Bruce Crosby, whom they are plotting to blackmail. One day while Bruce and his sister, Eva, are motoring through the slum district they have a blowout and Buck and his gang happen along and insult him. William appears and finishes Buck for the day. Eva invites him home and he meets Madelyn and Grafton, Buck's brother and sister, whom he faintly remembers seeing before.

Tarney signs William with Buck under the name of William Brown, and William wins in the first round. Bruce is present, and while Eva is not pleased at discovering that William is a prize fighter, Bruce is enraged. Although on the culmination of the plot against him Bruce is saved by William, he accuses William of being responsible for the whole affair. Eva's faith, however, remains unshaken and she goes to William's home to tell him so. About this time William is discovered by family attorneys through the publicity gained in winning the championship and comes into an inheritance of several million dollars.

THE SECRET OF BLACK MOUNTAIN (Four Parts).—The cast: Miriam Vale (Vola Vale); Blake Stanley (Philo McCullough); Ed Stanley (Chas. Dudley); George Cooper (George Austin); Barton (Henry Crawford); Sarah Stanley (Mignon LeBrun); Henry Stanley (James Warner); Jake DeWitt (Lewis King); Jim Vale (Jack McLaughlin); Jack Rance (T. H. Gibson Gowland); "Old Bill" (H. C. Russell). Story by Jackson Gregory. Directed by Otto Hoffman.

In search of information about her grandfather, a gold prospector, Miriam Vale comes to California and teaches school to defray her expenses. She learns that years ago Jim Vale came to Boulder with a chest of gold, bar and dust, but was beset by road agents and robbed. Suspicion was directed against Henry Stanley, a renegade, but nothing could be proven.

Miriam has decided to return to Vermont, when out of Black Mountain rides a horseman who commands Miriam to return with him, saying, "There's a woman in pretty deep trouble." When Miriam fears to go, he proceeds to use force. They ride away. The man meanwhile tells her his name is Stanley. Inside a cabin Miriam finds a dying woman and a dead man. When Stanley leaves the room, the woman tells Miriam she has been killed by her husband, Ed Stanley, and begs her to look under a certain stone near the fireplace. She fearfully awaits the return of the man, but when he appears Miriam learns that he is not the murderer, Stanley, but a cousin, Blake Stanley.

Ed Stanley and Cooper, his partner, arrive and order Blake to leave. A sharp fight follows, in which Cooper is badly wounded. Blake fetches him into the cabin and tells Miriam the whole story. He goes back to the death of old Henry Stanley and tells of the rifling of a safe deposit box containing the secret of his treasure, the elopement of Sarah Stanley with a bank cashier, Barton, the dead man. Miriam gives Blake a slip of paper found under the fireplace. Its message means success to their adventure, and incidentally a friendship auguring a fine romance is ratified.

JAXON COMEDY.

WILD INJUNS (One Reel).—Mrs. Gotrox, an enthusiast over the civilization of the Indian, has contributed liberally toward their education, and after the graduation exercises at the agency the commissioner decides to send two chiefs, "Rolling Thunder" and "Tossing Ball," to thank her in person. Mrs. Gotrox plans a novel reception for them. All the decorations are to be Indian, and the guests are to wear Indian costumes.

Pokes and Jabs are seated on a freight car enjoying their scant morning repast, when the Indians arrive and ask to be directed to the Gotrox mansion. Pokes and Jabs, mistaking their actions for threats, take to their heels, followed by the two Indians. Finally they find two coupling pins, and when the Indians come up they quickly overpower them. Finding the introductions to Mrs. Gotrox, they decide to become Indians. At least long enough to satisfy the cravings of the inner man. The reception is in full blast when Pokes and Jabs arrive. As a bit of realism, Jabs proceeds to scalp the colored butler. Pokes, not to be outdone, drains the punch bowl and chases the guests and ends by scalping his hostess, exposing her bald head to the company. The two chiefs, hearing the women scream, rush in. A wild fight follows, and Pokes and Jabs flee, followed by the trusty arrows of the Indians.

SPEED DEMONS (One Reel).—Jabs, who is suffering from an attack of speeditis, is hustled off to Dr. Dippy's sanitarium, while Pokes, another auto enthusiast, wanders at large without a car. On the day of the world's championship auto race between Oldfield and DePalma, Jabs escapes and follows the crowds to the race. Pokes goes also and invites himself to ride in Lotta Wealth's speedster, but is ejected. Just then Jabs happens along and with his aid Pokes gains admittance to the race track, but Jabs is left outside. Seeing the guards on his trail he beats it back to the sanitarium. The race takes place and after many incidents Oldfield wins. Lotta Wealth remarks that she could beat Oldfield's record. Pokes doubts it, so off they went, through fences, over hills, through valleys and over bridges, until they finally run through an open draw. As they are swimming for shore Pokes remarks to Lotta, "I knew when we started you couldn't do it," but her reply is lost in the noise of the waves.

THE COLLECTORS (One Reel).—Jabs runs a female gymnasium and his motto is, "Get all the trust you can and pay no one." His landlord notifies him that if he does not pay the back rent it will be collected by force. Numerous collectors try but all fail. Pokes finally gets the job and starts out to collect. Whether it is his winning ways, his dogged persistence, or his bullet-proof armor that caused ihs success is unknown, but the landlord is telephoned for, and when he arrives at the gymnasium he finds Pokes calmly sitting on Jabs' chest, with Jabs' sweetheart on his lap counting the roll to see if it will cover the amount owed.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

BLIND MAN'S HOLIDAY (One of the O. Henry Series—4 Parts).—The cast: Norah Greenway (Jean Paige); John Lorison (Carleton King); Father Rogan (John Costello); Norah's Little Brother (Aida Horton). Directed by Martin Justice.

John Lorison, self-exiled in New Orleans, meets a girl night after night in a cheap little restaurant. After dinner they take a little walk, but invariably she leaves him at 8 o'clock at a certain corner. One evening Lorison realizes that he is no longer willing to be left on the corner of life alone. With dread of her verdict, he tells her that he loves her but that his past is marred with a charge of theft, and that he dare not ask an untarnished woman to marry him. Norah eases his mind by disclosing her own "past." She had been an actress, had stolen diamonds and been very wicked, but was now repentant.

Lorison proposes, and they are married by Father Rogan that night. But she leaves him at 8 o'clock as usual, at the same corner, promising to go with him after tonight. Lorison consents to this, but gradually becomes torn with suspicion. Wandering about, he runs into a crowd gathered about a woman in a white satin stage costume, in charge of two policemen, who explain that she is wanted for stealing diamonds. The coincidence makes Lorison feel that his marriage to another diamond thief is a terrible mistake. He hunts out Father Rogan and begs him to undo the hasty marriage of a few hours before.

The priest says he will show him into what a predicament his hasty marriage has led him. He takes Lorison to Norah's house, where a woman tells them that Norah is out again, with a beautiful white satin dress. Upstairs her little brother tells them that Norah cried tonight and promised never to go out at night any more. Next the priest takes Lorison to a tall building. They climb to the third floor. Looking through a glass door, he sees among a score of others toiling at sewing machines over beautiful satins and laces the tired, happy face of his wife. The priest now tells him he has known Norah since the day she was born, and that for love of Lorison she had told a "desperate, beautiful lie."

THE LAST OF THE TROUBADOURS (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: King James (S. E. Jennings); His Catellite (Dan Duffy); Sam Galloway (Nolan Leary); Ellison (Jake Abraham). Directed by David Smith.

Sam Galloway, a surviving representative of the medieval troubadours, toils not—save with his fingers on guitar; neither does he save yarns. But he is the one apostle of Art in southwestern Texas and is welcome—implored—to stay as long as he likes at any ranch between San Antonio and Brownsville.

He is visiting Old Man Ellison, one of the few remaining sheep ranchers, when the old man is given a week to vacate his ranch by the local cattle king. As this is the only available grass left in Texas it is a death blow. He has no redress in law and he is sixty-five, weighs ninety-eight and loves a quiet life. The old man is forced to tell his lazy guest, Galloway, the reason for his sadness. Next day Ellison, on his way to Frio City for supplies, meets the cattle king, who, having learned that Ellison is from his home county and a relative, tells the old man that he will give him his ranch, help him financially and set him on his feet. Old Man Ellison's future changes from black to a rosy pink. He drives lazily home, contemplating blissfully his prospects. At the ranch he learns that Galloway has left for some place unknown—to return in the evening. And the old man sits down and dreams until his return.

But there is in Galloway's eyes and bearing, when he does arrive, an unaccustomed look. The soft, lazy expression of the artist has given place to that of the man of action.

"Ben," says Sam, "I couldn't let you be put on like that. I borrowed your revolver, rode into town this afternoon—you'd just gone when I got there—and filled Mr. King James full of lead. I reckon he won't bother you any more."

Old man Ellison makes no direct reply. He scratches his sparse whiskers and meditates forlornly a moment. Then: "Sam," eh say, "would you mind getting the guitar and playing that little piece I like once or twice? It's kind of soothing and comforting when a man's tired or fagged out."

THE DUPLICITY OF HARGRAVES (One of the O. Henry Series—Four Parts).—The cast: Major Talbot of Mobile (Charles Kent); Henry Hopkins Hargraves (J. Frank Glendon); Miss Lydia (Myrtis Coney); Mrs. Vardeman (Mrs. Fisher). Directed by Thomas R. Mills.

When Major Pendleton Talbot, of Mobile, and his daughter, Lydia, came to Washington, of course they selected an old-fashioned boarding house. Major Talbot was of the old, old South. He was a relic and dressed like one, in a ceremonial coat, and the young government clerks dubbed him a Father Hubbard. But he was courtly and dignified, and his daughter believed in him, and she scrimped and saved to keep up the family's appearance. For the Talbots were needy.

Among the boarders was Henry Hopkins Hargraves, a quiet sort of chap who was tolerated in spite of being a vaudeville actor. Hargraves cultivated the Major and his prim daughter, and used never to tire of the old man's stories and peculiar characteristics. One night in a fit of princely extravagance, the Major bought tickets to the opening of a new play. He and his daughter found on the stage Hargraves performing in the character of a typical Southern grandee—making a tremendous hit. The Major recognized it, however, as a caricature, and next morning when Hargraves came to boast of his success, bitterly upraided him. Hargraves would excuse himself for using the Major as "copy," and would even reimburse him handsomely, but the aid is refused though the old man is practically starving. Abashed, Hargraves disappears, causing a pang in the heart of Lydia.

Some time later the Major is in dire straits, when he is approached by an old colored man, also a relic of the South, who has prospered, and who presses a goodly sum on the Major in repayment of a debt owed the family. The Major accepts it ,though he remembers nothing about its origin. It is the beginning of his rise, and soon, with new courage, he is up in the world again. He never learns the secret of his windfall. But Lydia does—in a letter from Hargraves. He, masquerading, was the old colored man.

KALEM.

A CHAMPION OF THE LAW (An Episode of The Further Adventures of Stingaree—Two Parts).—The cast: Stingaree (True Boardman); Howie (Paul C. Hurst); Ethel Porter (Marin Sais); Tom Deane (Chris Lynton); Edna Deane (Edythe Sterling); Richard Falkland (Edward Hearn); Caspar Urie (R. S. Bradbury); Bill Savage (Hart Hoxie); The Governor (Frank Jonasson); His Secretary (Edward Clisbee).

Richard Falkland, an officer of the ship "Sydney," and Caspar Urie, an overseas trader of questionable character, are rivals for the hand of Edna Deane. She chooses Falkland. Arriving in Australia, Urie persuades Falkland to abandon his ship and accompany him to the gold diggings. Losing their way, they encounter Stingaree, the gentleman bushranger, who tells them the way to the Deane cattle run. Urie recognizes Stingaree and proposes to Falkland that they turn him over to the police and obtain the reward offered for his capture. Stingaree overhears Falkland refuse to betray a man who has just saved their lives. In gratitude he gives Falkland a slip of paper, saying: "That will tell you where to find me. If you ever need a friend, come to me."

After a raid by Ben Savage and his band of outlaws, the governor offers a reward of a thousand pounds for the capture of the bandits. When Ethel Porter, Stingaree's sweetheart from London, appeals to the governor for a pardon for the bushranger, he refuses. Riding out into the bush country, Ethel comes upon the camp of Stingaree while he is out. She is recognized by Howie, Stingaree's partner, and waits for his return.

When Urie and Falkland arrive at the Deane cattle run, Edna's father is enraged that his daughter should wish to marry a man who would desert his ship. He orders Falkland from the house.

Hearing of the reward offered for their capture, Ben Savage's band of outlaws set out to hold up the stage in which the governor is traveling. They shoot the driver from his seat, and the horses run away. The runaway is seen by Ethel, who, upon Stingaree's failure to return to his camp, has set out in search of him. She effects a rescue, but as the bandits are still in pursuit, the governor, his secretary and Ethel take refuge in the Deane home, which is nearby. The bandits attack the house. Falkland sees the attack from the distance and realizes the danger of the occupants. He remembers Stingaree and the note he had given him. He rides to the bushranger's camp to obtain his help.

After a grueling battle, the bandits break into the Deane house. Savage rides through a window on horseback and carries the governor off with him. Stingaree, Howie, and Falkland, riding to the rescue, arrive just in time to save the governor from the outlaws.

In appreciation, the governor grants Stingaree a pardon and Deane gives his consent to Falkland's marriage with his daughter. After a touching good-bye to his old pal, Howie, Stingaree sails for London with Ethel Porter, there to abandon the role of bushranger for that of an English gentleman.

In a fight with the savages Morris saves Major Goe's life, which but increases Goe's bitterness. Goe plots with natives, who capture young Morris and plan to put him to the torture. Goe brags to the girl who had spurned him of the fact that Morris is to meet death at the hands of the savages. THE MASTER SPY (An Episode of "The Perils of the Secret Service") (Three Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 24).—The cast: Yorke Norroy (Kingsley Benedict); Carson Huntley (Jay Belasco); John Gaunt (Al. MacQuarrie); Von Linden (Baron Von Ritzau); Irma Mailoff (Mignon Anderson); Boris Von Haden (Frank Lanning). Written by George Bronson Howard. Produced by Jack Wells and Kingsley Benedict.

The two agents of the U. S. State Department, Yorke Norroy and Carson Huntley, are about to leave the town of Eukrain, on the border of Russia and Saxonia, a neighborhood which is becoming unhealthy for those in government service. Just as they are about to leave their apartment John Gaunt, well known to them as a representative of the British Secret Service, but traveling as a tourist, appears. Gaunt is in a miserable state of health. He tells Norroy and Huntley that he has received the plans of the forts and that he is to get two thousand pounds for bringing them to headquarters in England, but if he dies without doing it, his wife and children will be penniless. He implores Norroy to take the plans to England, and get the money for his family. Norroy agrees.

Norroy persuades Huntley to cross the border before him. Huntley is stopped by officers who search him and his baggage. Norroy, too, is examined, but he slips the plans into his driver's pocket and is allowed to go. When Norroy attempts to remove the plans from the pocket the coachman sets up a howl to call the soldiers. Norroy knocks him unconscious and, unhitching the horse, starts down the road at a swift pace on its back, the soldiers pursuing him.

Arrived at an inn, Norroy is delighted to see Georgio, a man whom he had seen kill another in Budapest. Threatening to report the incident if Georgio does not hide him from the authorities, Norroy is led to a secret room. There is a door behind a big picture of the Virgin, and Norroy goes through this door.

Meanwhile the Countess Irma Mailoff has left her guardian's roof to join Prince Darien across the border. Captain Boris Von Haden, son of the guardian, is following the Countess. There is only one place where she can take a train, and that is near the inn of Georgio. The Countess arrives, and bribes Georgio to conceal her until the train comes. He shows her into the room with the picture. When Georgio refuses to open it for Captain Boris, the latter climbs through the window and confronts Irma. She cries for help. Norroy cannot resist her calls, and, springing the panel, soon overpowers the captain.

Norroy escapes with the Countess in her car, rushing toward the frontier. Passing through a village, he has the luck to find one of his men waiting for him. He tells him to take the Countess to the Three Pigeon Inn. He then makes his way through the hills by a short cut, and manages to pass the border patrol. But they catch sight of him and pursue. He swims his horse through a lake and escapes. After crossing the frontier, he meets a band of Russian mountaineers.

"Soldiers of Saxonia on Russian soil!" he cries to them. "What is your answer?"

The peasants attack the patrol, and Norroy escapes and joins the Countess, who has met the Prince, her sweetheart.

THE DYNAMITE SPECIAL (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 24).—The cast: David Carleton (George Williams); Ralph Carleton (M. K. Wilson); Bill Manville (Marc Fenton); Ruth Manville (Helen Gibson); Joe Brooks (Val Paul); Jimmy Thurman (Al. Harris). Scenario by George Hively. Produced by J. D. Davis.

Jimmy Thurman, the fireman on Bill Manville's engine, is in love with Ruth, Bill's daughter. He believes that she doesn't care for him any more since Ralph Carleton, the son of the district superintendent, has become agent at Wellville. Joe Brooks, the dispatcher, is another who is interested in Bill's daughter, Ruth. So much so that he determines to get Ralph out of the running. When Ralph's father comes to see how his son is getting on, Joe tells him that Ruth is keeping the young fellow from his work. His plan succeeds, for Mr. Carleton sends his son to another station. Carleton, meantime, has discharged Joe for drinking, and the man vows vengeance.

A dynamite special is to go west the next day and Bill and Jimmy are to pull her over. Ruth pleads with Jimmy to tell her where Ralph is, and he says that Ralph is at Crestmore. That night, Ruth, in overalls and cap, hides in an empty car of the Dynamite Special, and while concealed, overhears Brooks and his companion planning to blow up the superintendent's special, which the dynamite special is to meet at Crestmore.

Brooks and Leeds make their way to the dynamite car and steal a box marked "Nitro-Glycerine." Ruth watches them. The men uncouple the engine and drive away, while Ruth rushes to the station to warn her father. Ralph thinks of his father's special. Brooks and Leeds jump from the engine, thus allowing it to speed ahead by itself.

Ruth jumps on a motor-cycle and rides after the runaway. The special is coming from the other direction. Ralph is unable to help, as the special has already left Hilldale, the nearest station. Gaining on the engine, Ruth jumps from the motor-cycle to the cab, shuts off the throttle, and reverses the engine. She runs ahead with a flag and hails the approaching special. Before she can tell Carleton the trouble, she faints away. Carleton leaves Ralph with Ruth, going to Bill, with whom he shakes hands. Brooks and Leeds are captured.

TAKING THEIR MEDICINE (One Reel—Rel. Week of Sept. 21).—The cast: Nifty Nat (Eddie Lyons); Double Draw Dan (Lee Moran); Helen Hilliard (Edith Roberts); Dick Parks (Fred Gamble). Scenario by Fred Palmer. Produced by Roy Clements.

When Helen Hilliard arrived at the Circle W ranch every one of the cowboys made plans to stay around the place as much as possible, though the old man was determined that the round up should go on. Nifty Nat had the really swell idea. When daylight came, he awoke groaning and clutching his stomach. He said that he was deathly sick, though. Double Draw Dan had his suspicions. However, Nat's plan worked. He stayed behind, and Helen came in and nursed him. Nat got away with it because Uncle had driven to town.

The boys were out on the range, but it was queer how many things, absolutely essential to their work, had been forgotten that morning. Double Draw was the first to discover that there was no hammer to nail up the wire of the broken fences. Back he went full speed to fetch it—Dan was always so helpful!

Helen immediately found herself with another patient on her hands. But she was equal to the emergency, and took care of each suffering ranch hand as he appeared, smoothing his hair, and holding as many hands as she could manage.

The boys were having the time of their lives, when Uncle suddenly reappeared. One look was enough for him. Off he went to the harness room where he concocted a mixture of harness oil, soft soap, and other ingredients. He then entered the sick chamber, and told Helen that he had a sovereign remedy, and that he would repeat the dose every fifteen minutes till the boys were recovered. One spoonful was forced down the reluctant throat of each. And certainly the remedy was a wonder, for the boys were cured as if by magic.

YOUR BOY AND MINE (One Reel—Rel. Week of Sept. 24.—The cast: Tub (Lincoln Stedman); Skinny (Elwood Bredell); Tub's Mother (Lydia Yeamans Titus); Skinny's Mother (Grace Marvin); Tub's Male Parent (Hal Wilson); Skinny's Mother's Husband (William Dyer); The Village News (Harry Mann). Written by Roy Clements. Produced by Roy Clements.

Tub's mother turned abruptly from her doughnut frying, and the big wooden spoon found its way to Tubs' head. Over on Skinny's back porch almost the same scene was in progress. The two fathers made their appearance on their way to work, and Tub's mother took a plate of hot doughnuts over to Skinny's house. As soon as her back was turned, Tub deserted the churn, crammed his pockets, his shirt, and his mouth with doughnuts, and climbed out of the kitchen window.

Skinny and Tub had plenty of time to meet behind the barn, and commence to dig worms, while the two mothers were discussing the weather over the back fence. Skinny was on his knees digging hard, when Tub pulled a doughnut out of his pocket and started to eat it right before Skinny. That started a fight.

"The Village News," the worst gossip in the county, was on his way to town, when he heard the rumpus. He rushed to their mothers with the news. The two ladies ran to the rescue of their sons. The women became involved in the fray, and the "News" rushed to get the two fathers. Very soon there were three fights raging—the boys', the mothers' and the fathers'. The "News" then went for the militia.

"Let's quit," said Tub suddenly to Skinny.

"All right," said Skinny, signing peace terms on the spot. And when the "News" arrived with the sheriff, he found two boys eating the same doughnut, two fathers smoking in perfect amity, and two mothers crying on each other's shoulders.

STAR FEATURETTE.

A ROMANY ROSE (Two parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 24).—The cast: Rozeska (Lena Baskette); Her Mother (Claire McDowell); Her Father (Charles Hill Mailes); Richard Lorraine (Fred Montague); His Housekeeper (Martha Mattox); Dancing Master (Nigel Debrullier). Scenario and production by Marshall Stedman.

Rozeska's father tore her away from her mother's arms, thrust her tambourine into her hand, and sent her out to entertain the auto party, halted on account of tire trouble, beside the road.

"See the pretty little girl! What charming movements! A natural dancer!" cried the tourists, among whom was Carter Hargrave, the head of the vaudeville circuit. The child's father was all smiles when he gave him his card, and said that the girl would be a success in vaudeville.

In the outskirts of the village near the gypsies' camp, lived Richard Lorraine, who, bereft of his wife and child, lives in a world of memories. He notices the gypsies' camp and wanders over to it. There he sees little Rozeska teaching her doll to dance. The next morning he calls at the camp and pays the father a large sum to allow him to adopt the child, to take the place of his own. The mother is grieved at the parting, but realizes it is for the best.

Following the legal adoption, Rozeska is given everything she wishes. The father soon spends the money, and then, remembering the vaudeville manager, calls on him. Hargrave offers him seventy-five dollars a week for the child to dance. The father agrees to bring her, and that day breaks camp without telling the mother of his plans. In the night they arrive in the neighborhood of the Lorraine house. The father sets out for the house, but arouses the mother's suspicions. She questions him, and he tells her of the offer, and that he is going after Rozeska. She struggles to prevent him. He binds and gags her, but she succeeds in releasing herself and follows. The father is about to make away with Rozeska, when the mother arrives and raises the alarm. In an effort to escape, the father falls from the window and is killed. Rozeska clings to her mother, and Lorraine, seeing the affection between the two, offers the gypsy a home with her child.

SOAPSUDS AND SIRENS (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 26).—The cast: Prof. Thinem (Harry Lorrane); the Janitor (Walter Stephens); Mr. Printum (Bert Roach); Mrs. Printum (Gladys Varden). Directed by Noel Smith. Supervised by J. G. Blystone.

The janitor lost his last pail of water. The faucet was out of order so it was impossible to get water. Prof. Thinem, one of the most successful failures in the dancing profession, was crying profusely. The janitor took his pail and held it under the professor's eyes, and secured enough water for cleaning purposes. At that moment in came a large, stout lady, and the dancing master conducted her to the studio. He warned her that the floor would sustain only fifty pounds to the square inch. After a high kick the floor buckled under the strain, and landed the fat lady in the plunge below. But the janitor was on the job, he rescued her, and then he sawed a hole in her purse, as the professor was reviving her, and recovered all her money. The professor, having obtained a little coin, sent the janitor to Mr. Printum to have a hand-bill advertisement printed for him.

Mrs. Printum was a devotee of dancing. She would dance right over her husband's head, as she lived above the print shop. She, too, fell through the weakened floor, and right into the press, where the announcement of the prof's studio was imprinted upon the back of her dress. Hubby was furious, and chased her down the street, but the ad did its work. In her flight, many ladies, tall and short, fat and thin, saw the ad, and made a bee-line for the dancing academy.

A bevy of lovely pupils arrived at the academy. Some of them disported themselves in the plunge and all of them were robed in imitation of the Goddess Diana. The prof wished to show them all out in the park. Mr. Printum had struggled out of the barrel of printer's ink into which he had fallen, and was still pursuing his wife. She decided to change clothes with the janitor to save herself. Then the lovely dancers were very nice to the disguised janitor, and shoved Mrs. Printum—in his overalls—out into the cold. Mr. Printum chased the party to the park, and began to beat up the supposed janitor. She managed to get hold of the real janitor and changed her clothes again. Then Mr. Printum did not know what to think. The chase was on again, and they all ended their troubles in the park lake.

MARBLE HEADS (One Reel—Rel. Week of Sept. 24).—The cast: Julep Jasbo (Milton Sims); Claribell Lotsadough (Gale Henry); Jake (William Franey); Joe (Milburn Moranti). Written by Tom Gibson. Produced by Allen Curtis.

"Send up the statue this afternoon, so I can have it in the garden for my party," said Mrs. Claribell Lotsadough as she pressed a roll of bills into the outstretched hand of Julep Jasbo, the sculptor.

Jasbo hadn't made a sale in months, and he rushed downstairs as hard as he could go, and called the expressmen to the job. It certainly was hard luck for Jasbo that Jake and Joe should have been within hearing, for after boxing up his work of art, and carrying it safely down six or seven stories, they dropped the whole thing down the last flight of stairs.

Panic-stricken, Jasbo forced the two expressmen to don the garb of ancient Roman warriors, while he prepared a whitewash bath for them. Then he jammed them into the box, and sent them off to the garden party.

Claribell was awaiting her work of art. Jasbo had to lure her away while the two gladiators clambered out of the box and set themselves up on the pedestal at the head of the refreshment table. Jake and Joe made beautiful statues until the eats were passed. Then they could not resist trying for their share of the spoils. They are discovered, and Claribell's guests, thinking that she has been making game of them, all leave in a huff. When she returns to wreak vengeance on the statues, they are not to be seen. Before she reappears, Jasbo has arrived and set up the real statue in their places; he meanwhile having repaired them. She doesn't know what to think, while down in the corner of the garden the pseudo-gladiators are feasting on chicken and champagne.

THE FOUNTAIN OF TROUBLE (One Reel—Rel. Week of Sept. 24).—The cast: Mr. Cramp (William Franey); Mrs. Cramp (Ida Tenbrook); Pickpocket Chief (Milburn Moranti); Josie Jones (Nellie Allen). Written by Arthur F. Slater. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

Mrs. Cramp sends her husband to the foot of a hill to get her a glass of water. As he nears the fountain a woman's handbag is stuffed into his hand, and the giver disappears. Mr. Cramp gets the water, and as he is bringing it to his wife, he trips over a lady's foot. It is Josie Jones, sitting under her beach parasol.

"Oh! my bag! Have you seen it?" cries Josie.

"Is this it?" says Mr. Cramp. It is, and Josie's beaming eyes reward him. He has spilled the water, however, so he goes back to the fountain.

Again a man approaches and slips a bag into his hand. It is the same bag! Josie sees him returning to his wife, and snatches the bag from him, accusing him of stealing it. He apologizes, but the water is spilled again, so back he goes to the fountain.

The next man who approaches warns him to look out for the cops, and dashes away. Cramp follows, and is led into the pickpocket's den. One of the crooks rushes in and says he has lost his elephant. Cramp had found a little elephant stick-pin, and he innocently hands it to the man. The next minute he is out of the door with the band after him. The police get the crooks, but Cramp just manages to get back to his wife.

"Where's my drink of water? Heavens! what a time you've been!" says Mrs. Cramp. And back he goes to the fountain.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 38 (Released Sept. 28).

The first number of this issue gives views of the revival of the ancient art of spinning and weaving, as it is practised on the estate of Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt, at the school which she has started on her estate at Biltmore, North Carolina. All the processes from carding the wool to weaving on handlooms is shown.

"What We Eat" is the second number, showing the "Evolution of the Squab"—the edible kind, not the Broadway variety. From the pigeon's eggs in the nest to the roast birds on the table, we trace the squab's progress.

A new invention is illustrated in the bicycle speedometer, which allows a rider to race his head off, and yet never move out of his own back yard. A movable device of rollers keeps the wheel revolving fact in one place, while the speed is registered on a clock-like dial, in full view of the rider.

Physical exercises for women, arranged by Bernarr Macfadden and posed by Helen Tyler, is a subject which is of wide interest. Movements for health and beauty are clearly demonstrated and if persisted in for fifteen minutes each day are sure to bring fine results.

The apricot industry makes a good subject. School girls are aiding Uncle Sam in vacation time by picking, cutting and pitting the fruit in Pomona, California. The halved apricots are laid in shallow trays, and exposed to the sun, which dries them by natural process.

A Miracle in Mud, called "Two Nuts and a Chocolate Drop," by Willie Hopkins, the Screen Magazines' wizard sculptor, completes the reel.

Marco, rushing to save Morn Light from the poisoned ring which Hildreth was just about to place on her finger, manages to elude Cecelia, and enters the room just in time. The Ghost follows, and hears their plan for a speedy marriage. He goes out, and when the taxi which Hildreth orders, drives up he overpowers the chauffeur and takes his place. He has instructed Cecelia to summon the gang to the island. Hildreth and the girl come out and get into the car. Marco, leaving them, looks back, and sees the chauffeur struggling out of the shrubbery. He calls a motor cop and they follow the taxi. The Ghost drives to the waterfront and forces the two to enter a boat to go to the island. Marco sends the cop back to report ,and starts to swim across. The Ghost fires and when Marco dives, thinks that he has killed him, but Marco makes the swim and arrives at the island.

The crooks on the island fight Marco, while The Ghost locks Hildreth and Morn Light in a secret room, having shown them the necklace. The motor-cycle cop has summoned the commissioner and his men, who also arrive at the island. They fight the crooks and get the best of it. Cecelia, determined to put an end once and for all to Morn Light, her rival, touches the button which lowers the secret room to the basement of the house. She tells the commissioner that they have escaped. The commissioner plans to blow up the house, but first searches it thoroughly for Hildreth and Morn Light. Then a quantity of dynamite is placed under the house.

"They are down on the beach now, I tell you!" says Cecelia to Marco, who rushes off to hunt. He returns and tells the commissioner that there is no trace of the two. Cecelia laughs. At that moment the house goes up in a cloud of smoke and debris.

"They were in the secret room of the house all the time," cries Cecelia, and the police, with Marco and the commissioner, make a rush for the ruins. Fire has broken out, and the situation of Hildreth and the girl is desperate, if indeed, they are still alive.

THE STREETS OF ILLUSION (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—Aug. 12).—The cast: Beam (Gladys Hulette); Her Father (J. H. Gilmour); Her Brother (William Parke, Jr.); Donald Morton (Richard Barthelmess); Col. Thompson (William Dudley).

Beam only saw the silver lining of the dark clouds, for she lived in the streets of illusion. She wore a small chain around her neck, from which hung a gold medal with the inscription of "13." This was her wishing charm. Her fondest pleasure was caring for her blind father and she would read him false stories regarding her brother who was fighting in Mexico. On the other hand, Robert was fighting a bigger battle than that of war. Reduced in circumstances, Beam was forced to rent the vacant rooms in the old house which at one time was the social center in New York.

Donald Morton, a wealthy young man, was in love with Beam. He spoke to his father about her but he received little encouragement as his father was not interested in anything, as he imagined he was always ill. Wishing to end it all, he rents a room in an out of the way place. Fortunately, it was Beam's home in which he engaged the room. Beam was reading to her father, when suddenly her attention was attracted to the door. Astounded she sees Robert. He had deserted. Stealing away from her father, she brings Robert upstairs and is tenderly embracing him, when Donald came out into the hall. Seeing Donald, Beam quickly conceals Robert in her room. Donald insists on an explanation. To save her brother, Beam tells him that the man was a new boarder. Disappointed, Donald leaves. A few minutes later, Robert heard Beam pleading with someone on the stairs. Leaving the room, he discovers Beam in the arms of one of the boarders. For the first time he felt the spirit to fight. With a quick dash, he overpowers the man. Hearing the voice of his son, his father comes out and proclaims him a hero. Just then the phone rang. Col. Thompson, of Robert's regiment, notified him to report back to camp as he had it so arranged that it was believed he was on a furlough.

Fill Up Our Soldiers' Pipes

America's fighting men need tobacco to make trench life a little more comfortable. Here's a chance to treat the boys at the front.

"Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" has been organized to furnish "smokes" for the American soldiers and sailors in active service.

All labor and administrative expenses are contributed, so that every cent you give goes to pay for tobacco which is purchased in large quantities at a low price.

One dollar buys four packages of tobacco and sends them to France. Each package, costing twenty-five cents, has a retail value of forty-five cents and keeps a man in "smokes" for a week. Every dollar sent to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" buys a bundle of tobacco that would cost $1.80 at your cigar store.

In every package is a postcard addressed to a contributor to the tobacco fund. In accepting the package the soldier or sailor agrees to send on the card a message to his benefactor in the United States. According to the plan, every person who gives a quarter gets his receipt from a fighting man in France.

The work of this fund is approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

Send as many dollars as you can spare. Write your name and address clearly.

Maldonado offers her a check book as a loan and she accepts. A short while later the account is overdrawn and no way possible to return the money. Iris leaves the city. As a last resort she attempts to secure work, but to no avail. Maldonado again traces Iris and offers her assistance. Giving her a key to a lavishly furnished apartment, he tells her it is hers.

The inevitable thought of starvation causes Iris to accept. Not hearing from Iris, Trenwith returns to the city. Meeting a former friend, he has him arrange a meeting. Unknown to Iris, Maldonado overhears her making an appointment for nine that evening. Nine that evening finds Trenwith punctual. Overjoyed, they embrace. Looking around the apartment, Trenwith admires it greatly, but to his sorrow he learns the bitter truth of the whole thing. Disgusted he casts Iris to the floor and leaves. Maldonado enters. Having heard the conversation, he orders Iris to leave. With no earthly friend, Iris decides to end it all. Seeking diversion, Trenwith walks along the bank of the river. Suddenly he sees Iris about to leap into the water.

THE SEVEN PEARLS (Episode Three—"The Air Peril"—Two Parts—Sept. 30).—Ilma had just recovered two of the pearls from the burglar when they were taken away from her. She joins Harry and tells him of her loss. They are accosted by an old woman, who is strangely disappointed when she finds they did not recover the pearls. Harry escorts Ilma to her apartment after trying in vain to console her. The next morning Ilma is puzzling out a note of sympathy she has received from some one who signs himself "Nemesis," when the Sultan's executioner drops an envelope into the mail slot in her door. Ilma opens the envelope and finds in it the two pearls and a note which reads: "Here are your pearls. Nemesis is not a woman, but a dangerous man. Don't trust him. Kismet."

Ilma 'phones Harry, telling him she has the two pearls. While she is talking Stayne, a member of the Grady gang, is announced by Harry's butler. Harry tells Ilma of Stayne's coming and imparts the information that this member of the gang had two of the pearls. Ilma says she will visit him at once to help him recover the pearls from Stayne. Stayne tells Harry that the night before he attempted to rob the Mason home, but was caught by Perry Mason and his brother. He was searched and the pearls found on him. Perry kept one and gave the other back to Stayne and after taking his finger prints released him. In the morning papers was a story that Perry's brother had been murdered and Stayne was accused of the crime.

Ilma arrives and learns of Stayne's predicament, who offers them the pearl he has if they will clear him of the charge of murder. Harry and Ilma, pretending to be reporters, call on Perry Mason and are recognized by him. He tells his story and shows them the pearl. As they are leaving the Mason home Ilma secures a key to the front door. Later she tries to persuade Harry to return to the Mason home, but when he refused, she goes alone. In the Mason home she hears a conversation between Perry Mason and his servant which convinces her that the man killed his brother and that the servant helped him.

When Perry and the servant leave the room Ilma recovers the pearl from a vase in which Perry placed it, and is about to depart when Perry returns and captures her. Perry is about to call the police when Ilma warns him that if he does she will tell he murdered his brother. Perry decides to get her out of the way, and with the aid of her servant he ties Ilma with a rope which is attached to a ring at the bottom of a balloon. The room in which Ilma has been captured has a sliding roof and when this is shoved to one side the balloon is inflated. Before it is released a tube filled with acid is fixed so that by degrees it will eat away the rope with which Ilma is attached to the balloon while it is in midair. Perry cuts the rope and the balloon rises, carrying the struggling body of Ilma up toward the unknown.

THE FLY COP (Two parts—Sept. 15).—The cast: The Fly Cop (Billy West); Proprietor (Babe Hardy); Handy Man (Budd Ross); Mayor (Leo White); Forelady (Ellen Burford); Chief of Police (Charles Slattery); A Chicken (Ethlyn Gibson). Directed by Arvid E. Gillstrom.

Disguised as a beauty parlor and a modiste shop, a high-class ladies' gambling parlor is flourishing in the city. The Mayor hears of it and warns the Chief of Police that he must either close it up or lose his job. The Chief counts on the gambling parlor for a large part of his revenue and is loath to close it up, but he realizes he must do something to pacify the Mayor. He engages Billy, the most harmless "boob" he can find on the force, makes a detective of him and sends him up to the "beauty parlor" to get a job, and then spy upon the gambling room. He phones the manager of the place that to pacify the Mayor, he is sending up a harmless spy and asks the manager to furnish a job for him.

Under these conditions it is easy for Billy to get a job and he goes to work at once as general handy man around the place. He scrubs floors, shines shoes, gives massages, sells underwear, flirts with the customers, fights with the assistants and gets on the manager's nerves until he is nearly crazy. In all this time, Billy never gets a suspicion that there is a gambling parlor about, and the Chief, when he calls, compliments Billy on his good work.

Finally a hard loser among the women gamblers comes out of the gambling room and, running into Billy, complains that she was trimmed by the crooked game in the next room. This is a revelation to Billy. He rushes back to make the raid single-handed. He charges into the outer shop, but one of the attendants sees him and gives the warning. In a flash the card tables are turned into pews, the cashier's desk into an organ and the faro table into a pulpit. The manager, with a quick change, becomes a minister, and when Billy bursts into the room he finds a revival meeting in full swing. He is given a hymn book and joins in the singing. Presently he gets a burst of religion and comes forward, converted.

About this time the Mayor decides to take matters into his own hands. He gets a bunch of regular "cops" together and raids the place, only to find Billy, in uniform, leading the singing. When the pulpit accidentally turns over and discloses a faro table, Billy is dumfounded. The manager accuses Billy of running the place and, while the "cops" chase Billy around the shop, the manager packs up all the coin and tries for a get-away. Billy eludes all the "cops" and, seeing the manager about to escape, he wallops him with a mallet and captures him single-handed. The Mayor is delighted and promptly makes Billy the new Chief of Police.

MEN OF THE DESERT (Essanay—Four Parts—Sept. 24).—The cast: Jack (Jack Gardner); May (Ruth King); Mason (Carl Stockdale).

Some of the most sanguinary feuds in America have been fought out, not in the mountains of the South, but on the deserts of the great West, where cattlemen and sheepmen often dealt out death to each other with the aid of their old friends, Winchester and Colt. Such a feud is in progress between the men of the desert when Jack, a nomadic cowboy, wanders into the scene. He is outspoken against the outlawry, and the sheriff, in jest, hands him his badge and asks him if he can do any better. Jack accepts the challenge and arrests one of the most recent slayers. The latter's companions immediately storm the jail and rescue him. In the fight Jack is desperately wounded. May, a girl of the ranch, finds the cowboy half dead and hides him in an isolated hut while she nurses him back to health. The feudists discover Jack's hiding place and attack him. He and the girl escape, and while Jack holds a narrow canyon against his pursuers the girl dashes across the desert in search of aid. Jack's life seems as good as lost when May returns with the opposing feudists, who save him. The wedding between Jack and the girl on the battleground reconciles the feudists and restores order on the desert.

SEEING THINGS (Klever Comedy—Sept. 3).—Vic has been in a sanitarium for some time for the "cure," he having had "too many mornings after the night before." He is almost well and his doctor is about to discharge him, hoping that the change will also cure him of a delusion that he has. It seems Vic has a delusion that a certain "Gloomy Gus" looking creature is always following him wherever he goes and this serves to get him into no end of trouble. The doctor wires this fact to Vic's wife and prepares to start Vic on his way. Vic, after bidding good-bye to the other inmates, goes, only to be, so he thinks, followed by his friend "Gloomy Gus." He feels that he is with him all the way home and he certainly has his troubles with him.

Vic arrives home much to the delight of his wife, but much to the disgust of his mother-in-law. It is not long after his arrival home that the "optical illusion" again starts working and poor Vic gets himself into lots of difficulties and at the finish gives it up as a bad job.

CAMPING (Klever Komedy—Sept. 10).—Vic is a lover of fresh air and decides that the best way to get it is to go "camping." He manages to induce his wife to go along with him and take the kids. He also takes his nephew and two nieces. After equipping them with camping outfits, and also loading his Ford up with the necessary camping things, they make a start. The car looks like a moving circus, and the kids have the time of their young lives. Vic encounters many troubles en route to the camping place, the last one being the climbing of a mountain, which is very exciting and funny. He eventually arrives at a spot he thinks will do. The tent is put up and camping life is on in full blast. Everything would have been ideal if it was not for a "wood be" Indian who tries to scalp Vic.

He nearly scares the daylight out of Vic, and only the arrival of an old hermit and the kids save him. They knock the spots out of the Indian and the hermit takes him off in his custody. By this time the nightfall is coming on and Vic and the family get in the sleeping bag to get into the arms of Morpheus. It had to pick out that night to rain, and rain it does as it never did before. Vic unfortunately built the trench around the tent the wrong way, and consequently the water runs in the tent instead of out. Added to this comes a gale which blows the tent away and they are all left standing in their "nighties." Vic makes them all get under the Ford, which he says is like a rich uncle—it always comes in handy.

IN BED—IN BAD (Klever Komedy—Sept. 24).—Vic is a "busy bee" at his office, and he is working so hard that his office staff becomes alarmed for fear he may overwork. They all impress this strongly upon him. Needless to say he laughs at them, for he never was sick a day in his life.

On his arrival home, his wife greets him with great concern over the way he looks and insists upon sending for the doctor. She 'phones him, and he tells her to put Vic to bed at once, that he will be over with a nurse. She does.

The fact that Vic has been put to bed sick becomes the talk of the neighborhood and each neighbor comes over to do their "bit." Each one suggests a different doctor, and "Mrs. Vic" has them all. One doctor says it's his heart, the other his chest, and another says it's his throat. However, after a final consultation, they all decide that he should be operated on for appendicitis. Vic is alarmed and wants to know what caused this, and the doctors tell him he does not get enough exercise. Vic announces that he will get some right away, and he ends up by "walloping" the life out of all the doctors.

THE HOSTAGE (Lasky—Five Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: Lieutenant Ivo Kemper (Wallace Reid); Nathalia (Dorothea Abril); Sophia, her sister (Gertrude Short); Kemper (C. H. Geldert); Vanvoyd (Guy Oliver); Eunice (Camille Ankewich); Boyadi (Noah Beery); Ragnor (George L. Spaulding); Marienka (Lillian Leighton); Paul (Lucien Littlefield). Directed by Robert Thornby.

Brigadier Kemper, at the head of a division of Lowlanders, has invaded the peaceful country of the Mountaineers. Caught in a bad position, he is forced to give his only son, Lieutenant Ivo Kemper, as hostage for the good conduct of the invaders on their retreat. The brigadier means to violate the truce, so he persuades his son to carry a dirk concealed on his person and warns him to be prepared, on a given night, to make good his escape from the Mountaineers.

Turned over to the custody of Boyadi, one of the Mountaineer leaders, Lieutenant Kemper is prepared for mistreatment at the hands of those whom he looks upon as savages. Instead of that, however, he finds Boyadi all that is considerate and kindly, and after some preliminary skirmishing he becomes much interested in Boyadi's daughter, the beautiful Nathalia. The night appointed for his escape comes speedily, but Lieutenant Kemper realizes, to his horror, that he can escape only by killing Boyadi.

This he cannot bring himself to do, so he finds himself the next morning a prisoner at the hands of the outraged mountaineers, who are furious at the treachery of his people. Moreover, he himself is in disgrace, for the dirk has been discovered in his possession. At this seeming proof of his treachery, even Nathalia turns away from him.

In the effort to make him reveal his father's plans—of which he is entirely ignorant, by the way, the mountaineers put the young Lieutenant Kemper through a pretty rough sort of "third degree." He is saved at last only by the interference and protest of Boyadi and the fact that he behaved himself with credit while he was with the army of invaders.

On these grounds he is reprieved for twelve hours before his execution, and allowed to take a farewell of Nathalia, who had come to look more kindly upon this young man who had proven himself so courageous under the terrific torture he had undergone.

Brought out for execution at the appointed time at dawn the next morning, and stood against the firing wall. The men are about to shoot when a messenger brings word that the lowlanders and the mountaineers have declared peace in order to fight together against a common enemy.

Lieutenant Kemper is not only freed by this peace movement, but becomes a kind of hero to the very people who had been about to spill his blood. He returns in triumph to the waiting Nathalia to whom each moment since his departure had been agonies of torture, and the two are made happy at last.

POLLY ANN (Five Parts—Sept. 9).—The cast: Polly Ann (Bessie Love); Howard Straightlane (Rowland Lee); Jacob Straightline (Walt Whitman); Jud Simpkins (John Lockney); Squire Bacon (William Ellingford); Hubert de Courcey (David Foss); Junius Trewalker (Alfred Hollingsworth); Mrs. Porter (Josephine Headley). Directed by Charles F. Miller.

Polly Ann was an orphan in the poor farm home until Jud Simpkins takes her to his tavern to work as slavey. There she meets a company of fly-by-night players and decides to become an actress. The opportune arrival of Howard Straightlane, who has come to teach the village school, save Polly from the obnoxious attentions of Robert de Courcey, one of the actors. Polly is attracted to the new teacher, and on one occasion takes him a bottle of Jud Simpkins' "bitters," which in reality is whiskey. Young Straightlane feels again the craving for drink that had caused a breach between him and his wealthy uncle. This same uncle was also a distant relative of Polly's, and later he sent for her. Discovering that the teacher, to whom she is still devoted, is a cast-off heir, Polly brings about a reconciliation between the old gentleman and his nephew.

MOUNTAIN DEW (Five Parts—Sept. 16).—The cast: Roxie Bradley (Margery Wilson); J. Hamilton Vance (Charles Gunn); Roosevelt Washington (Thomas Washington); Squire Bradley (Al. W. Filson); Milt Sears (Jack Richardson); Lafe Grider (Aaron Edwards); Lily Bud Raines (Mary Borland). Directed by Thomas Heffron.

J. Hamilton Vance, a magazine writer from the north, while gypsying through the Kentucky Cumberlands, enters Trigger Creek, a hill settlement in Breathitt County. Milt Sears, feudist, ex-convict and school teacher, recognizes in Vance a possible competitor for the "teaching job" and orders him to leave. To protect his manuscripts Vance agrees, while Sears shreds his hat with bullets to demonstrate his marksmanship.

While leaving the valley Vance meets a girl astride a bullock, returning from the grist mill. He is attracted and determines to stay. A notice announcing a "new boss of the teachin' job" is desired results in his going to the store of Squire Eli Bradley to apply. There he finds the Squire has been defeated at checkers. Vance challenges and beats the champion to the Squire's delight. The Squire invites him to the house, and there Vance learns the girl on the bullock is the Squire's daughter, Roxie.

Lafe Grider, the Squire's farm manager and suitor for Roxie's hand, suspects Vance of being a federal agent hunting moonshiners. He attempts to incite the neighborhood against Vance. Further complications come when Vance learns Roxie does not know how to read or write. She agrees to attend school. Milt Sears attempts to assassinate Vance in the schoolroom. Roxie is injured. When taken home her attendance at school is exposed. Her father is angered and denounces Vance. The latter determines he shall instruct the girl, and has his negro servant hold the Squire a captive with a gun at his head, while he instructs Roxie in reading.

The Squire again turns a champion of Vance to change again when Lily Bud Raines, a poor relation, reads a paragraph in one of Vance's fiction stories mentioning moonshining in the hills. That is taken as a confession he is a federal agent. The mountaineers prepare to bushwack him, but Roxie goes to warn him. He avoids the posse, marries the girl and then salutes the posse as a moonshiner himself, for he is one of the family.

THE HAUNTED HOUSE (Five Parts—Sept. 16).—The cast: Anne (Winifred Allen); Jimmy (Dick Rosson); Pete Parks (Albert Parker); Anne's Uncle (Albert Day); the Sheriff (Mac Barnes); Anne's Spirit Mother (Mabel Wright); the Yegg (Eddie Kelly). Directed by Albert Parker.

Anne is permitted none of the pleasures of the modern girl. She is quaint and somewhat "queer," according to the superstitious villagers. She spends much of her time in the woods, where she hears fairies and spirits whispering to her from the stirring leaves.

There is an old mansion near the village that has a reputation for being haunted by a ghost. No one dares live in it, and those who have had the courage to approach it at night have been frightened away by a ghost. When Jimmy, a young crook, robs the village bank, he seeks to escape his pursuers by taking refuge in the "haunted house." The ghost comes out to meet him, but, finding him wounded, takes pity and conducts him inside.

When outsiders dare to penetrate the fearful domain of "the haunted house," the little ghost uses wit and force to protect the boy. Strange and picturesque scenes are revealed within the old walls, for the ghost seems very human and welcomes the spirit of romance that has entered.

FLYING COLORS (Five Parts—Sept. 23).—The cast: Brent Brewster (William Desmond); Ann (Golda Madien); Capt. Drake (Jack Livingston); Ruth Lansing (Laura Sears); Craig Lansing (J. Barney Sherry); Jimmy McMahon (Geo. W. Chase); Brewster, Sr. (John Lockney); the Cockney (Bert Offerd); Stenographer (Mary McIvor); Manager's Son (Ray Jackson). Directed by Frank Borzage.

Brent Brewster, famous Yale athlete, turns detective, after failing at several other professions when cast out by his wealthy relative. His first case is at the home of Mrs. Lansing, who has been robbed of valuable jewels during the course of a house party. Brewster rather forgets his Sherlock Holmes role in his admiration for Mrs. Lansing's sister, but when that young woman states that she could get along nicely on $40,000 a year, Brewster decides he had better attend to business. He apprehends the thief and, calling into service some practical stunts he learned on the college cinder track, makes a capture. An inheritance permits him to win the girl with the $40,000 idea.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

FOR FRANCE (Five Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast: Gerald Ackland (Edward Earle); Marthe Landeau (Betty Howe); Rudolph Von Glahm (Arthur Donaldson); Mere Loubette (Mary Maurice); Monsieur Landeau (Frank Anderson). Author—Cyrus Townsend Brady. Director—Wesley Ruggles.

Gerald Ackland, a West Pointer and former Lieutenant in the U. S. Field Artillery, goes to Paris two years before the outbreak of the European war to learn aviation. At a garden party given by the American ambassador, he is introduced to Mlle. Landeau, a beautiful girl, the daughter of a famous painter. She is the possessor of a splendid voice, and on the occasion of the garden party captures the heart of Ackland by her singing of the immortal "La Marseillaise."

Mlle. Landeau, however, mingled little in society, helping her aged father in his art classes. Ackland, driven to desperation by his inability to meet her and press his suit, finally joined the class, although he realized he would make a sorry pupil. It early appeared he had a rival in Rudolph Von Glahm, who made no secret of his infatuation for the young woman, much to her embarrassment and Ackland's disgust. There was no love lost between the two men, but no open break until one afternoon when the German, under the influence of liquor, made an insulting reference to Mlle. Landeau, when at his easel. The American knocked him down and a duel was averted only by the arrest of Von Glahm on a charge of espionage and ordered deported.

War soon was declared and Ackland joined the French army as an aviator, while Mlle. Landeau and her father retired to a farmhouse near the Mons. Fate directed the American's scouting war plane to this farm in time to enable him to rescue his sweetheart from brutal German prisoners. He, himself, was captured but freed by British cavalry.

Their's developed into a real war romance when a decisive battle was fought about the farm, in which Ackland held off the Germans by manning the last British gun, assisted by Mlle. Landeau. French cavalry arrived in the nick of time, and the young American, dangerously wounded, was taken to Paris, where the girl, wearing the Red Cross, nursed him back to health.

A STORMY KNIGHT (Five Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: John Winton (Franklyn Farnum); Dr. Fraser (Jean Hersholt); Mary Weller (Brownie Vernon); Richard Weller (Hayward Mack); Mr. Weller (Frank McQuarrie). Scenario written by Waldemar Young. Produced by Elmer Clifton.

John Winton was an easy going young man. He managed his father's branch office, and because of his careless methods was constantly reprimanded by the elder Winton.

During the worst storm he had ever experienced, John was alone in his bungalow late one night when he was attracted by the cries of distress. John hurried to his door and was astounded to find a girl, soaked to the skin, who begged of him to hurry with her into the swamp nearby.

She guided him to a prostrate man. John carried the man into his cabin and hurried for a doctor. Upon returning the bungalow was empty and the only memento of the occasion John was able to discover was a white glove, containing a written message that served rather to deepen the mystery than to clear things up.

When John was talking with his father at the office next morning the old man discovered on his son's desk a white glove which, on inquiry, John found had just been delivered by a pretty girl who left no name when she made her hasty exit.

John did not long hesitate before attempting to follow the girl who had so mysteriously made this second attempt to attract him. He hurried to the street, saw his girl of the storm in a limousine and had barely time to start his own motor and follow her as she sped away. The automobile rushed with the girl through side streets at top speed, John following at a little distance, until a stop was made before an apparently empty house.

When John arrived the girl had disappeared and the young man hurried to investigate the premises. Through a window he saw the object of his chase being roughly handled by a man. When John broke through the window in his attempted rescue, four men appeared from an adjoining room and overpowered him. John was effectually disposed of, and then the girl hurried away with his assailants.

Upon going to his club that day for lunch, John was surprised to hear the recital of an adventure one of his clubmates encountered the night before, when, upon returning home, he found a masked woman searching his effects. The clubman explained how the girl managed to escape and exhibited, as a memento of the affair, a white glove—that matched the two that had already come into John's possession under such baffling circumstances. When John, next day, received a fourth glove through the mail, and had read the note it contained, he decided to take measures to dispose of the problem.

The girl, in her third note, made an appointment to meet John at his bungalow, with the promise to fully explain her conduct. Believing that she would again be attended by confederates, John equipped himself accordingly, securing his revolver and filling a few of his pockets with handcuffs. When the girl approached the bungalow with her associates, John met them at a little distance down the road, halting their automobile by placing his own motor in their path.

John then, at the point of his gun, lined up and handcuffed the men. With another pair of "bracelelets" he attached the girl to her own limousine, and then hurried away with his prisoners. His destination was the local jail, and when his captives were behind the bars John hastened to a justice of the peace. This official he loaded into his motor and then drove back to the girl he had left safely under guard of his own chauffeur.

"Young lady," said John, when he had reached the girl by the roadside, "we shall now be married." And it was not until the ceremony was then and there performed that John's "storm girl" confessed that her father and the elder Winton, friends since boyhood, had arranged the trick that had united their children in marriage and promised to turn John into a staid and dependable business man.

THE YANKEE WAY (Five Parts—Sept. 15).—The cast: Dick Mason (George Walsh); Princess Alexia (Enid Markey); Colonel Mason (Joe Dowling); "Coyote" Jones (Charles Elder); James O'Malley (James O'Shea); Robert Gillette (Ed. Sedgwick); Baron Maravitch (Count Hardenberg); Count Vortsky (Edward Cecil); George Washington Brown (Tom Wilson). Story by Ed. Sedgwick and Ralph H. Spence. Directed by Richard Stanton.

Dick Mason stops a young ruffian who is annoying a girl in a big restaurant. Dick has to break his opponent's nose, several dishes and a couple of fingers of his own to do it. The result is that Mason has to spend a night in jail for his fistic exhibition. Dick's father rewards his adventurous son by exiling him to the little Balkan kingdom of Lithunia, where Mr. Mason, Sr., has just purchased a share in a cattle concession.

Dick manifests little interest in his trip until he discovers on shipboard the girl for whom he had done battle (and one day behind bars). At first she shows no more regard for Mason than she did for the man who Dick knocked down, but on the last night out Dick is overjoyed to receive this unsigned note: "Thanks for your interest in me, both in Chicago and aboard the ship,—you most wonderful boy!"

When Dick arrives in far-off Lithunia, he goes immediately to see Count Vortsky, the Minister of Finance, who has been carrying on a plot with the Bulgarian Ambassador. Vortsky only awaits word from Col. Mason's representative—his son—that he will sell. Dick agrees to give his final decision in the council room next day in the presence of the Princess Alexia, ruler of Lithunia.

Dick discovers that the Princess is no other than the girl of the cabaret and when she signifies that she does not wish him to dispose of his holdings, he changes his decision and announces he will keep the concession.

Vortsky, to whom the Princess is engaged, stirs up a revolution, but Dick and a few able Chicago assistants, commence a counter movement which wins the day—and the Princess—for himself.

WORLD PICTURES.

THE WOMAN BENEATH (Five Parts—Sept. 24).—The cast: Betty Fairchild (Ethel Clayton); Tom Connolly (Curtis Cooksey); Mrs. Fairchild (Isabelle Berwin); Mr. Fairchild (Frank de Vernon); Rupert Crandall (Craufurd Kent); Mrs. Connolly (Eugenie Woodward). Directed by Travers Vale.

Betty Fairchild is sought after by Rupert Brantley. Mr. and Mrs. Fairchild favor his suit. Tom Connolly, who within three years rose from a miner to one of the wealthiest men in Colorado, comes East, where he meets and falls in love with Betty. Three years have passed since Ellen, Tom's sister, disappeared from a New York boarding school. A human wreck, Ellen returns to her mother, pleading for forgiveness. Tom arrives in response to his mother's summons, but Ellen refuses to tell the name of her betrayer. After her death, Tom returns East. Mrs. Connolly remains at her western home.

Tom and Betty are married. Tom notices Brantley's attentions and resents them. When Tom asks Betty why the men hang around her now that she is married, she says she believes they are trying to keep her from being too bored with matrimony. When he says she cannot love him much, she asserts she does not love him at all, but had followed the social law of her class and made what the world calls "a good match." Tom is stunned.

Tom reads that a former millionaire had committed suicide when deserted by his wife because his fortune collapsed. He decides that as Betty married him for his money, if she thought he had suddenly lost everything she would leave him. He plunges into a wild stock market and purposely suffers a financial loss. Tom tells Betty he is ruined, having gambled away everything except the home, which is in her name. He suggests that she dispose of the house. When she attempts to sympathize with him he begs her not to lie again, he can never again believe she loves him. She makes arrangements with real estate agents to have the house sold.

Unknown to Tom, Betty sells her jewels and rents and furnishes an apartment in Harlem. Tom is very enthusiastic and can't understand why she has gone to all that trouble, unless she is scheming to put something over on him. She is hurt by his attitude. Mrs. Fairchild is indignant at Betty's reduced circumstances. Tom tells Mrs. Fairchild he would rather have Betty return home with her, but Betty says Tom will want her when she has become worthy of him.

In Colorado Tom's mother comes across some old letters in the traveling bag which Ellen had brought with her. They are from Rupert Brantley. There is also a photo, autographed "From your sweetheart now, your husband to be." Ellen's mother decides to have her daughter's betrayer punished. Betty receives a packet addressed to Tom. She opens the envelope. It contains the letters and photo of Brantley, indicating his villainy toward Ellen, and a letter from Tom's mother urging him not to allow Ellen's betrayer to escape unpunished.

She does not show these to Tom, realizing he will kill Brantley. After dinner, eager to get Tom out of the house, she arouses his suspicions. She sets out for Brantley's apartment to warn him and give him time to leave and Tom follows. Betty tells Brantley that Tom will kill him if he finds this out, saying she has come to give him time to get out of the country, not that she cares about Brantley, but she wishes to save Tom from the electric chair.

There is a knock on the door and Tom enters. When Tom attacks Brantley, Betty comes forward, saying she had hoped Tom would never find out. Misunderstanding, Tom asks her whether she is Brantley's sweetheart. Betty, to save Tom from being a murderer, falsely admits the relation. Brantley snatches the letters and photograph from Betty and burns them. He says she may tell Tom what she pleases, he will not believe her. Ellen is dead and her proof is gone.

Betty returns to her room. Tom tells her that after he has whipped Brantley he is going where she will never see him again. Realizing he is working under a false impression of her relations with Brantley, Betty pursuades him to return with her to Brantley's apartment. Without explaining, she tells him to say to Brantley: "My wife has told me everything and I will kill you if I ever lay eyes on you again." Then she says if he ever loved her he will show it now—she promises to prove her innocence.

They return to Brantley's apartment, where Tom repeats what Betty directed him to say. Brantley becomes weak in the knees, and after the Connollys go he prepares to leave the country. At their apartment Betty shows Tom the envelope and his mother's letter. She explains she did not tell him the truth before because she feared he would kill Brantley, and though he deserved it, Tom would not have been justified in sacrificing her, who loved him. Assured of her love, Tom forgives Betty, confessing the ruse regarding his lost fortune. When he suggests that they return to their Riverside Drive home she urges him to remain where they are for another year, all to themselves. He agrees.

ONE HOUR (Sept.—Six Parts).—The cast: Ivan Trent (D. J. Flannigan); His Wife (Ina Brooks); Their Niece, Opal (Zena Keefe); G. D. Stanley (Alan Hale); Karnoff (Warren Cook); Jaeger (H. W. Pamberton); Butler (William Marion); King Ruthevan (Franklyn Hanna); Prime Minister (Herbert Dansey). Scenario by Paul McAllister. Directed by Paul McAllister and Edwin L. Hollywood.

The story opens in the Adirondacks where a young woman, Opal, and a young man, Stanley, are the principal characters. Opal, wandering through the snow, takes refuge from a pack of wolves and is rescued by Stanley. During a hand to hand fight which he has with one of the brute Opal falls through an air hole into icy water. Rescued by Stanley a second time, she is borne to his cabin, where only his prompt aid in removing the drenched garments saves her life.

During the ensuing months the two young people find themselves in love—then a shadow crosses their happiness. From a small European kingdom comes a trusted diplomat to take the princess (Opal) back to her native land, of which she has so far known nothing. Seeking to escape, she flees to Stanley and is followed by her uncle, aunt, the diplomat and others of the household, and in the fight which follows Stanley is left unconscious upon the floor of his cabin and Opal borne away.

Arriving in the palace, where she is to marry the king of a neighboring monarchy—a marriage with a beast which is entered into to save her own people from conquest by war—she awaits a future filled with misgivings.

Here, too, comes Stanley, who, it develops, is the nephew of the brutal monarch who is about to marry the woman Stanley loves, the woman whose whereabouts and identity he now learns for the first time. Attempting to enter Princess Opal's apartments at night while in a state of intoxication, the king is attacked by Stanley, who hears Opal's cries for help and arrives at the opportune moment. In the struggle between the king and Stanley the former dies of his exertion and Stanley—now king—finds the barrier between him and Opal raised.

Simplex

THE VITAL SPOT

The architectural beauty, the exquisite appointments, the music of the $10,000 pipe organ and of the twenty-five-piece orchestra—

—it would all be wasted as a business investment if the pictures were so projected on the vital spot that they offended the eye.

Spiegel Brothers knew this very well when they built the Newark Theater, one of the most magnificent in the country. So they insured the kind of projection that makes people come again, and again, and again .....

(Simplex, of course.)

Catalog "A" is waiting for your name and address.

To follow the example of successful men isn't imitation. It is GOOD SENSE.
